PREFACE.

IT HAS been said that "that country is happiest which furnishes fewest materials for history." If the duty of the historian was limited to chronicling the devastations and dramatic prowess of sanguinary War this assertion would be self-evident. But the arts and achievements of white-winged Peace, hovering over our varied industries, protecting the courageous and sturdy pioneers in their Herculean labors of transforming the wild, dense forests into productive farms and thrifty villages, making Cattaraugus county the home of a prosperous, happy, and intelligent population of over sixty thousand people, are equally and eminently worthy of record.

In this volume we have endeavored to present a comprehensive outline history of the county from its earliest white settlement to the present time. Following this are chapters devoted to the several towns, embracing their organization, development, historical incidents, and many biographical sketches of their representative pioneers and present citizens. It is with considerable pride that we present to our readers the following galaxy of able specialists, whose united efforts, individual research, and personal qualifications have materially aided us and our corps of assistants in the production of this work: Frederick Larkin, M.D., Rev. J. W. Sanborn, Charles G. Locke, C.E., Beals E. Litchfield, A. W. Ferrin, A. D. Lake, M.D., Col. E. A. Nash, Charles Z. Lincoln, Esq., and others. In preparing the several town chapters we have been greatly assisted by a number of local writers whose authority and reliability are acknowledged, and whose names appear in connection with their respective work. To all these, to our numerous patrons, and to many friends we extend our heartiest thanks for the valuable aid and encouragement they have generously rendered us, and for the zeal and enthusiasm with which they have seconded our efforts.

In endeavoring to make this an interesting and valuable book we have spared neither time nor expense. We have been more than ordinarily careful in its compilation, and we place the volume in the hands of our patrons,—without whose aid its publication would have been impossible,—hoping they will find little to criticise and much to approve and interest.

CHAPTER I.

EARLY DISCOVERIES AND LAND TITLES.

IT IS very uncertain who were the first to visit America. Various authors of note have written on the subject, but their testimony is conflicting and unreliable; for instance, Calmet, a distinguished author, brings forward the writings of Hornius, son of Theodosius the Great, who affirms that, "at or about the time of the commencement of the Christian era, voyages from Africa and Spain into the Atlantic ocean were both frequent and celebrated," and holds that, "there is strong probability that the Romans and Carthaginians, as early as the year 300 B. C., were well acquainted with the existence of this country," adding that there are "tokens of the presence of the Greeks, Romans, Persians, and Carthaginians in many parts of the continent." These reports, however, only resolve themselves into mere conjecture. The first authentic record we have of voyages of discovery to America are in the Icelandic accounts. From these we learn that in the year 1000 A. D., Lief, son of Eric the Red, embarked from Greenland on a voyage of discovery and explored the eastern coast of North America as far south as Narragansett bay, in Rhode Island. Other discoverers and navigators followed this expedition, attempts at colonization were made, and the country explored, in some localities, quite a distance back from the coast; but dissensions among the colonists and wars with the natives at length put an end to these rude attempts at civilization. Except a few vague records, and a "rune-stone" found here and there throughout the territory, marking a point of discovery, or perhaps the grave of some unhappy Norseman, the history of these explorations is wrapt in oblivion. Even the colonies in Greenland, established by Eric the Red in 986 A. D., and from which the explorers came, were at length abandoned, and the site upon which they flourished became, for many years, forgotten. Finally, however, the fifteenth century was ushered in, marking an era of great changes in Europe. It put an end to the darkness of the middle ages; it witnessed the revival of learning and science and the birth of many useful arts, among which not the least was printing; while the invention of the mariner's compass in the preceding century having enabled sailors to go out of sight of land with impunity, a thirst for exploring unknown seas was awakened; long voyages were undertaken and important discoveries made.

It was during this age of mental activity and growing knowledge that Christopher Columbus undertook the most memorable enterprise that human genius ever planned, and which renders his name undying. On August 3, 1492, a little before sunrise, he set sail from Spain for the discovery of the western world. A little before midnight, on the 13th of October, he descried a light on the island of San Salvador. From this moment properly dates the complete history of America. From this time forward its progress bears date from a definite period, and is not shrouded in darkness nor the mists of tradition.

Two years after the discoveries of Columbus became known in England, Henry VII. engaged John Cabot, a Venetian merchant, to sail in quest of discoveries in the west; and this navigator, in 1497, reached the coast of Labrador, which he named Prima Vista, thus making, probably, the first visit of Europeans to the coast since the days of the Norseman. This voyage was succeeded by others under Sebastian Cabot, son of John, in 1498, and by Gasper Cortereal from Portugal, to whom the discovery of the St. Lawrence some authorities claim is due. This adventurer returned to Lisbon in the month of October of that year, laden with timber and slaves seized from among the natives of the coast he visited. On a second voyage he perished at sea.

In 1504 the French first attempted a voyage to the new world; and in that year some Basque and Breton fishermen began to ply their vocation on the banks of Newfoundland and along its adjacent coasts. From these the islands of Cape Breton derived their name. In 1524 John de Verrazzani, a Florentine, in the service of Francis I. of France, sailed along the coast from Georgia to about latitude 41° north, and entered a harbor, which from his description is believed to have been New York bay. He remained there fifteen days and is believed to have been the first European that landed on the soil of New York. He proceeded northerly as far as Labrador, and naming the territory New France, took possession for France so far as he could by his rights of discovery. April 20, 1534, Jacques Cartier, an able navigator of St. Malo, in the interests of the French nation, sailed with two ships of sixty tons each, and one hundred and twenty men, reaching New Foundland in May. After coasting along for some time, without knowing it was an island, he at length passed the Straits of Belle Isle and traversed the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Having spent part of the summer on these coasts, he sailed on the 25th of July, highly pleased with the hospitable reception he had received from the Indians, with whom he traded for furs and provisions. His report induced the French king to attempt a colony in the newly discovered regions; and in May, 1535, Cartier sailed with three small ships, with a numerous company of adventurers, and arrived on the coast of New Foundland much scattered and weakened by a disastrous storm of July 26th. Here they took in wood and water, and proceeded to explore the gulf, but were overtaken, August 1st, by a storm which obliged them to seek a port, "difficult of access, but with a safe anchorage near the mouth of the 'Great River.'" They left this harbor on the 7th, and on the 10th came to a "gulf filled with numerous islands." Cartier gave to this gulf the name of St. Lawrence, having discovered it on that saint's festal day. Proceeding on this voyage he explored both shores of the St. Lawrence river. He moored his vessels where a little river flowed into a "goodly and pleasant sound," which stream he named St. Croix, near the Indian village of Stacona, the site of the present city of Quebec. Subsequently, October 2d, he ascended the river to a populous Indian village called Hochelaga, upon the site of which the city of Montreal now stands. In May Cartier returned to France, taking with him several Indian chiefs, among whom was Donnacona, who had treated the French with the greatest kindness, and who died in a strange land, an exile from home and friends.

During each succeeding year, for some time after, expeditions were sent out to the newly discovered river, but misfortune attended them all, and no efficient attempt at colonizing the country was made until 1608, when De Monts, a Calvinist, who had obtained from the king the freedom of religious faith for himself and followers in America, after many difficulties dispatched Champlain and Pontgrave, two experienced adventurers, to establish the fur trade and begin a settlement. Samuel Champlain reached Quebec, where Cartier had spent the winter nearly three-quarters of a century before, on the 3d of July. On the 18th of the following April, 1609, in company with two other Frenchmen and a number of natives, he started up the St. Lawrence, and after a time "turned southward up a tributary," and soon entered upon the lake which bears his name. He took possession of the territory in the name of the king of France, and that nation assumed still greater rights in the new territory.

In 1609 Henry Hudson, an English navigator of note, offered his services to the Dutch East India Company of Holland (a wealthy corporation formed for trade and colonization), which were accepted; and with a suitable outfit he arrived on the eastern coast of this continent at or near what is now Portland, Maine, whence he sailed southward along the coast as far as Chesapeake bay; thence he sailed northward again, discovering Delaware bay, and on the 3d of September anchored off Sandy Hook. He entered New York bay on the 12th of the same month, and sailed up the Hudson river, which still perpetuates his name. He anchored just above where the city of Hudson now stands, and sent a boat with a detachment of his crew still farther up the river on a voyage of exploration. It is supposed from his description that this party ascended above where Albany is now situated. On the 23d of September, Hudson descended to the bay of New York, and set sail for home.

Holland now claimed the territory by the right of discovery and exploration, and named it New Netherlands. The Dutch sent out trading vessels in 1612. These were followed by others, and Manhattan Island was made the chief trading post. The States-General granted a charter to the merchants for exclusive jurisdiction over New Netherlands, which included all the territory between 40° and 45° north latitude.

In 1621 James I. granted to Fernando Gorges and his mercantile associates all lands between the 40th and 48th parallels of latitude, and from ocean to ocean. Claim was made of the Dutch for the territory, which was refused, and the subject of title was becoming an important question, as both had grants of the territory from the highest authority of their respective governments.

In 1647 Peter Stuyvesant was appointed governor of New Amsterdam to succeed William Kieft, appointed to the position in 1638. To settle the controversy between the English and Dutch settlements arbitrators were appointed to adjust their respective claims. This tribunal assigned the eastern part of Long Island to the English, and a division line specified the boundary between the Dutch New Netherlands and the English Connecticut colonies.

In 1664 Charles II. of England, regardless of the claims of the Dutch, or any previous agreement, granted to his brother, duke of York and Albany (afterwards James II.), the whole country from the Connecticut to the Delaware river, which included the entire Dutch possessions. The duke's claim to the territory was to be enforced if refused, and rather than submit to the shedding of blood and the uncertainty of war Governor Stuyvesant surrendered the province September 3, 1664, when the possession of New Netherlands passed into the hands of the English, and the duke changed its name to New York, and that of Fort Orange to Albany. Peace was declared between the rival factions in 1674, leaving the English in full possession; but the duke of York, for his own protection, applied for and received from the crown a new patent.

The rivalries and jealousies that had made France and England so long enemies in the old world were transplanted to the new continent. The French made allies of the savages, and waged war against the English, and years of bloodshed followed. The first of these hostilities, which are now known as the old French and Indian wars, began with William's accession to the throne of England, in 1689, and was terminated in the peace of Ryswick, in 1697. Queen Anne's war came next, commencing in 1702, and terminating in the peace of Utrecht, in 1713. The third controversy was declared by George II., in 1744, and continued until the preliminaries of peace were signed at Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1748. The final great conflict was declared by Great Britain, in 1756, and terminated in the capture of Montreal, in 1760, when the whole of New France or Canada was surrendered to Great Britain. The province of New York remained an undisputed British possession, until "The Declaration of Independence" made her an independent State of the great confederacy of our glorious United States.

*The Indians of the State of New York number about five thousand, and occupy lands to the estimated extent of 87,677 acres. With few exceptions these people are the direct descendants of the native Indians who once possessed and controlled the soil of the entire State. As early as the beginning of the seventeenth century, at a time when the first Dutch explorers visited the new world, or at least very soon thereafter, these tribes, Senecas, Cayugas, Onondagas, Oneidas and Mohawks, were united in a league called by the whites, Iroquois, and by themselves He-do-no-saw-nee, and held sway over all the country between the Hudson and Genesee rivers. Their own name signifies "a people dwelling in a long house," of which the Mohawks held the eastern door, and the Senecas the western. The Onondagas kept the central fire as being the founders of the league, with the Oneidas on their eastern and the Cayugas on their western boundaries. The origin of these tribes is unknown to history.

In the latter part of the seventeenth century, which was the period of its greatest strength, the league numbered from thirteen to fifteen thousand souls. This people now number about fifteen thousand, of whom much the larger part reside within the Dominion of Canada. Their skill in war was only excelled by their aptitude for civil government. They lodged the civil authority of the league in fifty sachems, divided among the five tribes in unequal numbers, giving the Onondagas fourteen, the Mohawks nine, the Oneidas nine, the Cayugas ten, and the Senecas eight. Later on, another and inferior civil office grew up among them, that of chief, which gradually grew in importance, until it overshadowed the earlier title. No distinction appears now to exist between sachem and chief. The latter title seems to be the only one in use now among the Indians, and they no longer use or understand the word sachem. The sachems, as well as the chiefs, were nominated and deposed by the people, but in all cases the action of the tribe was required to be confirmed by the general council.

This brief and very general historical outline is deemed desirable as furnishing the facts for the better understanding of this interesting people to whom this State owes her northern boundary, and but for whose valor and steadfast friendship for our English forefathers the entire basin of the St. Lawrence would now be a Canadian possession. The supremacy of the Iroquois in what was known as the "Ohio country" had a most important bearing upon the history of that great section. In 1684 the governor of Virginia made complaint to Thomas Dongan, colonial governor of New York, relating to some Iroquois attacks which had been instigated by the Jesuit French. The governor called a council of the league at Albany. Before the end of the council the sachems of the league requested the governor to affix the arms of the duke of York to their stockades and villages. This was done, and from that date forward England claimed the Iroquois as her subjects, and there is some evidence to show that the Indians accepted this view. In the final contest between France and England upon this continent for the possession of the "Ohio country," the French based their claim upon prior discovery and occupation, and from this standpoint their claim could not be successfully disputed. The English could produce no such evidence of title, and finally based their sole right to the disputed territory upon their Iroquois title, and stood upon this alone, urging that it was both their duty and privilege to guard the dominions of the Five Nations as their subjects, and saying in their memorial to the French Council in 1755: "What the court of Great Britain asserts and insists upon, is this, that the five Iroquois nations acknowledged by France to be the subjects of Great Britain, are either originally or by conquest, the lawful proprietors of the territory of Ohio in question." We fairly owe it, then, to the league of the Iroquois to give credit, not only for their actual efforts on the field of battle, not only for their brave and successful defence of our north-eastern boundary against French assaults, but as well for having conquered and held for Anglo-Saxon civilization, the larger and fairer portion of our country beyond the Alleghanies.

The Tuscaroras claim kinship with the Iroquois in language and blood. Here again their tradition shows that before the great Onondaga leader To-to-da-ho, led his warriors across the St. Lawrence and took possession of Central New York, a branch of the original family migrated westward to the Mississippi, and thence to North Carolina, where, according to their native historian, Elias Johnson, before the discovery of Columbus the Tuscaroras consisted of six towns, and they were a powerful nation, numbering over twelve hundred warriors. They lived principally upon the head waters of the Neuse and Tar rivers. About 1712 they became involved in quarrels with their white neighbors and the adjoining Indian tribes; battles took place in which they were defeated and many of their warriors slain, and many were sold as slaves. They made peace with the State and received a grant of lands in Bertie county, on the Roanoke river, to which the remnant of the tribe removed. Their troubles with their neighbors continued here, and finally, in 1715, the larger portion of them removed to New York and formally united themselves with the confederacy of the Iroquois, and were assigned to lands between the Unadilla and Chenango rivers, and upon the territory of the Oneidas.

From that time on the Iroquois became known as the Six Nations. With the exception of the Oneidas and a portion of the Tuscaroras, the Six Nations sided with England during the Revolution, and were left at the close of the war unprovided for and unmentioned in the treaty of peace, and at the mercy of the exasperated Americans.

At the close of the contest with the mother country, it appeared advisable for the new government to come to an understanding with the Indian tribes, with respect to their rights, the extent and location of their lands, and with respect to the terms upon which they should be permitted to remain in the country. October 15, 1783, Congress, in a series of resolutions, defined the limit and scope of these negotiations, and appointed commissioners to conduct the same. In pursuance of this action a general council was held with the Six Nations at Fort Stanwix, now Rome, at which LaFayette was present. Here the peace party under Cornplanter prevailed over Red Jacket and his followers, who were anxious to renew the war. Commissioners from the State of Pennsylvania were present, as well as some from Virginia. The Mohawks were not represented. A treaty was negotiated and signed, October 22, 1784, between commissioners plenipotentiary from the United States on the one part and the sachems and warriors of the Six Nations on the other, by which the United States gave "peace to the Senecas, Mohawks, Onondagas, and Cayugas," confirmed to the Oneidas and Tuscaroras the lands upon which they lived, limited the tribes to lands they occupied east and north of a line drawn from a point on Lake Ontario, four miles east of Niagara, to the mouth of Buffalo creek, on Lake Erie; thence south to the Pennsylvania line; thence west and south along the line of Pennsylvania to the Ohio river; the Indians ceding all claims to land west of this line. The government again held a conference with the Six Nations at Canandaigua in 1794, by Timothy Pickering, "sole agent," at which "peace and friendship were again firmly established and declared to be perpetual between the United States and the Six Nations." It was here stipulated that the Oneidas, Cayugas and Onondagas should possess the lands reserved to them in their several treaties with the State of New York, and that the said reservations should remain theirs until they shall choose to sell the same to the people of the United States, who have the right to purchase. A similar provision was inserted regarding the lands of the Senecas.

Soon after the treaty of Fort Stanwix, in 1784, conflicting claims to a tract of land in the western part of this State arose between Massachusetts and New York, the former claiming title under a grant from King James I. to the Plymouth colony, and the latter under a grant from King Charles II. to the duke of York and Albany. The dispute was compromised by commissioners on the part of each state, four from Massachusetts and six from New York, namely: James Duane, Robert R. Livingston, Robert Yates, John Harring, Melancthon Smith and Egbert Benson, commissioners for New York, and John Lowell, James Sullivan, Theophilus Parsons and Rufus King for Massachusetts, who met at Hartford, Connecticut, December 16, 1786. Massachusetts ceded to New York the "government, sovereignty and jurisdiction" over the disputed territory, and New York ceded to Massachusetts the right of preemption of the soil of the native Indians, and all other estate except of sovereignty and jurisdiction to Massachusetts, its grantees and assigns forever. It was further stipulated in the compact between these two States, that no purchase of any of the lands in question should be made from the Indians without the presence and consent of an agent of Massachusetts. These lands comprised about 6,000,000 acres, bounded easterly by a line which ran from the southeast corner of Steuben county north along the west shore of Seneca lake and terminated in Sodus bay, on Lake Ontario, and embraced the present counties of Wayne and Schuyler, except their easterly tiers of towns, Monroe, Genesee, Yates, Ontario, Niagara, Livingston, Wyoming, Steuben, Allegany, Erie, Cattaraugus and Chautauqua.

Oliver Phelps, of Connecticut, for himself and others, began negotiations with Massachusetts in 1787, looking toward a purchase of a portion of the lands contained in the grant of this "preemption right" from New York, and about the same time Nathaniel Gorham, of Boston, made an offer to the Massachusetts Legislature of one shilling and six pence per acre for 1,000,000 acres of those lands, to be paid for in "the public paper of the commonwealth." While this offer was not accepted, it had the effect to bring other competitors into the field, who, as fast as they appeared, were taken into the association, after the manner of the modern trust, until finally in April, 1788, these two gentlemen (Phelps and Gorham), acting for their company, purchased all the land comprised in the cession to Massachusetts, for $1,000,000, payable in three years in the public paper of the State, which was then greatly depreciated. Phelps at once began operations to extinguish the Indian title, and was met at the outset by another complication. What was in common parlance called the "Lessee Company," had been formed, and had procured two leases from the Indians, covering a large portion of the same territory bought by Phelps and his associates; and although Massachusetts promptly declared the leases void, and Governor Clinton commenced active warfare against them, holding councils in person with the Indians, warning them of the invalidity of the leases and taking evidence which established the fact that the leases had been procured by bribery and corrupt means, yet such was the influence of the lessees and their agents among the Indians and elsewhere, at one time threatening to form a new State from the disputed territory, at another stirring up enmity and dissatisfaction among the Indians, that finally the purchasers of the preemption right were obliged to compromise, and granted the lessees a certain interest in the property. On the 4th of July, 1788, Mr. Phelps opened negotiations at Buffalo creek, and the Indians sold for $5,000 and an annuity of $500 about 2,600,000 acres lying adjacent to the Massachusetts preemption line. In the meantime the scrip, with which Phelps and his associates were to make payment to Massachusetts, had so appreciated in value, owing to the increased prospects of the State as a member of the United States, that they were unable to procure the same so as to meet their obligations, and suit was entered against them by Massachusetts. They were, however, able to effect a compromise, retaining the portion of their purchase as to which they had extinguished the Indian title and reconveying to Massachusetts all the residue. This arrangement was the more readily accomplished owing to the appearance of Robert Morris as an applicant to purchase these lands. On the 12th day of March, 1791, Massachusetts agreed to sell to Samuel Ogden, as agent for Robert Morris, all the lands before sold to Phelps and Gorham, excepting the portion retained by them, and on the 11th day of May, 1791, this State conveyed to Morris, for a consideration of $225,000 the whole of this land, by five separate deeds; the first, adjoining the Phelps purchase, comprising 500,000 acres. In this conveyance Massachusetts reserved one-sixtieth of the whole tract to satisfy a claim of one John Butler who had entered into a contract for the purchase of the same from Phelps and Gorham prior to their surrender of the lands back to Massachusetts, which interest Morris afterward purchased from Butler, thereby acquiring the entire title. The first tract of 500,000 acres was retained by Morris, and sold by him in different tracts, and was called the Morris reserve.

The land comprised in the remaining four deeds, being 3,600,000 acres, was conveyed by as many separate conveyances, dated in their order, December 4, 1792, February 27, 1793, July 20, 1793, and July 20, 1793, by Robert Morris to Herman Le Roy and others, as trustees for a party of Amsterdam capitalists, known as the Holland Land Company, of whom Wilhelm Willink was the largest owner, and Rutger Jan Schimmelpenninck bore the most conspicuous name. These conveyances were coupled with an agreement to extinguish the Indian titles, and Morris at once bent his energies to accomplish this result. Upon Thomas Morris, the son and able lieutenant of his father, fell the task of procuring the consent of the Indians to hold a treaty. He went into their country, followed their trails from the wigwam of one chief to that of another, and after much difficulty, and the use of all his persuasive arts, the Indians agreed to hold a conference, and designated Big Tree, now Geneseo, as the place where the same should be held. President Washington nominated Jeremiah Wadsworth as commissioner on the part of the United States, and the interested parties met together in August, 1797, and negotiations began, William Shepard representing Massachusetts. The council was held under a large tent, provided by Morris, where daily conferences took place. Red Jacket did the talking for the Indians, assisted by Cornplanter, Farmer's Brother and some others. The Indians resisted all offers; but finally consented to sell one township. At last Red Jacket "covered up the council fire," and declared the conference at an end. In an interview with Farmer's

Brother on the following day, Morris said to him that Red Jacket had no right to cover up the council fire, as he alone who kindled it had a right to extinguish it. To this Farmer's Brother assented, after some deliberation, and the council was continued. Morris understanding the Indian maxim, that the "lands belonged to the warriors, because they form the strength of the nation, and to the women, as the mothers of the warriors," held a conference with the chief women and the warriors, ignoring for the time the sachems and chiefs. His address to this unusual assembly deserves a passing notice. He informed them of the offers he had made the sachems, that "the money they would receive from their lands would lighten the burdens they then endured." He said to them, "Now you have to till the earth and provide by your labor food for yourselves and children; when these children are without clothing and shivering with cold, you alone are witnesses to their suffering; your sachems will always supply their own wants; they feed on the game they kill, and sell the skins to buy themselves clothing; therefore they are indifferent about selling their lands for money, enough every year to lessen your labor and enable you to procure for yourselves and children the food and clothing necessary for your comfort." He then said to them that he would give the women their share of the presents he had brought from Philadelphia to be distributed in case he bought the lands. Morris produced a powerful impression; negotiations were resumed, and on the 15th day of September, 1797, the treaty was signed which transferred the control of nearly all the country which now comprises western New York from the hands of the red men to their white neighbors. This treaty was of such absorbing consequence, and was such an excellent illustration of dealing between the two people, that these details relating to it, based principally upon facts found in "Turner's History of the Phelps and Gorham Purchase" are deemed important. The Indians reserved from the operation of this treaty ten separate tracts of land embracing three hundred and thirty-seven square miles; the Allegany reservation in Cattaraugus county, something over forty-two square miles; the Chautauqua reservation, in Chautauqua and Erie counties, with forty-two square miles; the Buffalo Creek reservation in Erie county, one hundred and thirty square miles; the Tonawanda reservation in Erie and Genesee counties, seventy-one square miles; the Squawky Hill reservation near Mount Morris, with two square miles; the Canadea reservation in Allegany county, with sixteen square miles; Canawangus reservation, two square miles, on the Genesee river near Avon; Little Beard's and Big Tree reservations, two miles square each, on the Genesee river opposite Geneseo, and the Gardeau reservation on the Genesee river below Mount Morris. Besides these reservations the Senecas continued to claim and use another, one mile square, divided by the line between the counties of Cattaraugus and Allegany and near the village of Cuba, upon which is situated a famous oil spring which had long been prized by the Senecas for its medicinal qualities.

By the conveyance executed by the Seneca nation to Robert Morris at the treaty of the Big Tree, in August, 1787, the Holland Land Company obtained a title in "fee simple," to all the lands conveyed to them by the four deeds before mentioned, which were executed by Robert Morris.

This company through their efficient agent general, Mr. Theophilus Cazenove, who resided in Philadelphia, had anticipated the perfection of title from the Indians, and in July, 1797, had employed Joseph Ellicott as chief surveyor to commence at once to lay out this immense tract into townships, and to subdivide the townships into lots, as soon as the title was perfected. Mr. Ellicott began his service on this tract for this company in attendance at the treaty at Big Tree, which was continued without interruption for nearly a quarter of a century. He had acquired a high reputation as a surveyor and civil engineer. In 1798 and 1799, he had completed the survey of the purchase into townships and begun the subdivision into lots, and the lands were in the market for settlement.

CHAPTER II.

THE MOUND BUILDERS. TRACES IN WESTERN NEW YORK.

[By FREDERICK LARKIN, M. D., Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.]

A SIMPLE heap of stones or of earth seems to have been the first monument that suggested itself to man. In the old world thousands of such monuments are known to exist. The great antiquity of these works has staggered the greatest minds of Europe. By whom and when built, remains an impenetrable mystery. It is the opinion of modern archaeologists, that the earthworks scattered over most parts of the old world, were built thousands of years before the historic period, and that to the builders of the splendid cities of Baalbec and Palmyra, they were as much of an enigma as to the inhabitants of the nineteenth century. But rude as these primitive memorials are, they have been little impaired by time, while majestic and imposing structures have fallen into shapeless ruins. "When covered with forests, and their surfaces interlaced with the roots of trees, or when protected by turf, the humble mound bids defiance to the elements which throw down the temple, and crumble the marble into dust."

No part of the world presents to the archaeologist so many remarkable works as the western continent. We can trace the ancient inhabitants from the northern lakes through the Allegheny, Ohio and Mississippi valleys, to Mexico, Brazil, Peru, and the Pacific ocean. Every hill, mountain and valley discloses some rude instrument used by a people whose history is enveloped in darkness. So numerous was this people in the Mississippi valley, that Mr. Breckenridge, after extensive explorations, says: "There are traces of a population far beyond what this extensive and fertile portion of the continent is supposed to have possessed; greater, perhaps, than could be supported by the present white inhabitants, even with the careful agriculture practiced in the most populous parts of Europe."

It was formerly supposed that there was some alliance with those people and the Indian races of America, but that is very improbable. The skull of the Indian bears but little resemblance to that of the Mound Builder. The head of the Indian is low in the moral sentiments, has large firmness and small benevolence; in fact his head indicates the cruel savage that he is. The Mound Builder had a head that will compare favorably with the most intellectual people now living. His head is well developed in the moral and intellectual regions, with large firmness, which cause him to move with energy, whether in peace or in war.

When the copper mines of Lake Superior began to be explored, traces of ancient works were found in almost every section. In several places shafts had been sunk to the depth of thirty feet or more, and veins of native copper were traced for a great distance, in many places through solid rock. In one of the shafts was found a number of tools made of copper, which, at the time of discovery, were reported as being hardened at one end; if such was the case, it was done with tin or with some other process unknown to us. From the shores of Lake Superior we can trace this people to Wisconsin, where we find some singular earth works,—six effigies of animals, six parallelograms, one circle, and one effigy of the human figure. These tumuli extend for the distance of half a mile along the trail. What the animals represent is difficult to determine. Many at the present time suppose that the mastodon is one, and that he was a favorite animal and perhaps used as a beast of burden. That the mastodon was contemporary with the Mound Builders is now an undisputed fact. It is a wonder, and has been since the mounds have been discovered, how such immense works could have been built by human hands. To me it is not difficult to believe that those people tamed that monster of the forest and made him a willing slave to their superior intellectual power. If such was the case, we can imagine that tremendous teams have been driven to and fro in the vicinity of their great works, tearing up trees by the roots, or marching with their armies into the field of battle amidst showers of poisoned arrows. In western New York, particularly within the borders of the great valley of the Conewango river, evidence is abundant that ancient man and the great American elephant trod the soil together. Large molar teeth have been found at East Randolph, Leon, Conewango, Ellington and various places near the tributaries of the Conewango.

From northern Wisconsin we can trace these ancient people through Michigan and Ohio to the southern shore of Lake Erie. Near the mouth of Cattaraugus creek, in western New York, commences a series of works which extend through the Conewango valley. In the town of Dayton are the remains of a sepulchral mound in a circular form, one hundred and twenty feet in circumference, with an elevation of ten feet. This tumulus when explored was found to contain several skeletons which were, no doubt, those of some distinguished warriors, whose acts of heroism might have been connected with the decline and fall of that powerful race of men. On either side of the valley a chain of fortifications can be traced for more than twenty miles, interspersed with numerous mausoleums constructed to cover the remains of their distinguished dead.

In the towns of Leon and Conewango a number of burial mounds have been explored. Among them is one that contained eight skeletons which were buried in a sitting posture, in such a manner as to form a circle within the mound. In the center of this circle, surrounded by the mouldering skeletons, stood a pestle artistically wrought from granite. This relic was placed in a perpendicular position and encircled with twenty-four flint arrows of large dimensions. This mound is now nearly obliterated, and the ground whereon it once stood is cultivated by the white man. The fields in either direction disclose large quantities of relics designed for warlike purposes, which had been discharged, no doubt, during some terrible battle.

On the Little Conewango, about two miles from its junction with the main stream, is located the village of Randolph. The ground occupied by this beautiful village is a level plateau of land, which forms a part of the great valley of the Conewango. This ground, unknown centuries in the past, was densely populated by the Mound Builders. About forty years ago a mound was thoroughly explored in about the center of the village, and in the midst of that ancient tomb three human skeletons were disinterred, which immediately crumbled to dust after being exposed to the air. In connection with them a large block of mica was disclosed, about twelve inches square, and of sufficient thickness to weigh several pounds. Mica was no doubt regarded a sacred relic, for it is nearly always found buried with their dead; and it must also have possessed uncommon value, for it could not have been obtained in such blocks short of the mountains of North Carolina. On the apex of this mound was a tree nearly four feet in diameter, whose roots penetrated to the midst of the tomb and disturbed the remains of those great warriors who had undoubtedly slumbered in the arms of death for more than a thousand years.

It was the opinion of Dr. Cheney, with whom I have spent much time in exploring the mounds and ancient works in the vicinity of Randolph—and my own coincides with his—that the ground now occupied by the village was once an ancient city; for when the white man came he was astonished to find within its borders and adjacent to it the remains of military fortifications, mounds, caches, hearths, and various relics used for domestic and warlike purposes. In the summer of 1878, a Mr. Scudder, while plowing a piece of ground, about forty rods from the railroad depot, discovered a nest of arrow heads under the remains of a large pine stump, and, by exploring, unearthed one hundred and sixty-seven. Subsequent to that time about fifty more have been found, together with blocks of mica, stone axes, etc. That these relics were buried before the growth of the tree is very apparent. The tree was one of the largest in the country. From as correct measurement as can be made, it was about eight feet in diameter and had fallen from age long before the axe of the white man was brought to bear upon the forest trees in Randolph.

On Elm Creek near the village of East Randolph, is an embankment and trench of circular form two hundred and eighty feet in diameter. From the appearance of a successive growth of timber it would indicate a remote date of construction. Within and adjacent to this work numerous caches and hearths have been discovered, some of which contained the remains of charred corn. In the vicinity where the ground has been cultivated, hundreds of relics used by the ancient warriors have been found.

Near the residence of J. E. Weeden, Esq., and about one mile from the village of Randolph, is a fortification that surrounds about three acres. The ditch was about eight feet deep, and numerous trees of great size were found growing upon the parapet and in the midst of the entrenchment. This work was well defined when first discovered in the wilderness, where it had lain in solitude for more than a thousand years, undisturbed only by the hurricane as it toyed with the monarchs of the forest.

About forty years ago Dr. Apoleon Cheney, in a survey made of the village of Randolph, discovered the remains of a redoubt, sixty rods in length, that extended across the village plateau, on either end of which is a small rivulet fed by living springs. On the north side of Jamestown street, Dr. T. A. C. Everet, while ditching his land and removing stumps, found blocks of mica and great quantities of relics, which had long been hidden in the ground from one to ten feet below the surface. About six rods from a pure and singular spring a number of hearths were disclosed, one of which contained several loads of stone which had been subjected to fire. Within a mile surrounding the village of Randolph, thousands of relics made for warlike and domestic purposes have been found.

All of the towns in Cattaraugus and Erie counties are rich with relics left by the ancient people. On the north side of Cattaraugus creek, on lands of the Indian reservation, is standing at the present time, a group of mounds, which have never been disturbed, save by the action of the elements, and trees of the forest, which always attain an uncommon size when found among these tombs.

The most extensive of these tumuli is on the terrace, which is elevated about fifteen feet above the stream. It is oblong in shape, fifty four feet in length by thirty-six in breadth and fifteen feet in height. Another tumulus, situated about seventy rods in a southerly direction, is circular in form and about one hundred and twenty feet in circumference and sixteen feet in height. Other works of less interest to the archæologist are found in every direction.

The Indians of this reservation have a superstition with regard to opening these receptacles of the dead. They say their fathers desired them to remain undisturbed, hence no one will be guilty of violating the sacred spot where the remains of some venerated chieftain is mouldering to dust. Not only in civilized, but in savage life, the desire to perpetuate the memory of the departed seems a powerful element indigenous to the nature of man.

Although these mausoleums have stood since a score of great forests have lived and perished, let them rest, for they will feast the eye of the antiquarian thousands of years after our generation shall have passed away.

"How sleep the brave who sink to rest,
With all their country's wishes blest—
While spring, with dewy fingers cold,
Returns to deck the hallow'd mould."

In Ellington, the town next west of Conewango, the relics and works constructed by the ancient inhabitants are very numerous. On a hill, about a fourth of a mile from the village, are the remains of a fortification which was no doubt constructed for defensive purposes. It occupies an eminence of more than a hundred feet above the waters of Clear creek, and commands a view of the circumjacent country for many miles.

To the east, for several miles, is spread out the great valley of the Conewango, clothed with its native forests; to the westward is a broad ravine cut by the waters of a clear stream that rises among the hills which divide the valley of the Conewango from that of the Cassadaga. According to a survey made by Dr. Cheney, in 1868, this work is in the form of a parallelogram, and is six hundred feet in length by two hundred and ninety in width. The intrenchment, as it lay in the forest, was several feet deep. On the southern side was a wide gateway with an elevation on either side to guard the entrance. Within the intrenchment human bones have been discovered in large quantities, and in such a stage of decay that they readily mingled with the soil. The land occupied by this fortification is noted for its great fertility, and marks the ground where once the tide of battle raged. This work presents more than ordinary interest to the antiquarian, on account of the great number of implements of ancient warfare found in the vicinity.

About a mile and a half up the valley of Clear creek, and near its junction with a mountain stream, are two other works, about sixty rods apart. One of these stands upon an eminence, seventy-five feet above the copious mountain stream. The vallum surrounds nearly two acres. It is in the form of a parallelogram, and when first examined, the parapet was three feet high. The location of this work was well selected for defence against the near approach of an enemy.

Near the summit of a hill, about half a mile west of the narrows, in the town of Napoli, is a tumulus about one hundred and twenty feet in circumference. From its elevated position—more than six hundred feet above the valley of the Conewango—it commands an extensive view of the surrounding country for several miles in either direction. This mound has never been thoroughly explored; but a few years ago a small amount of soil was removed from near its base, which disclosed some relics, among which was a flint spear head more than six inches in length and wrought with remarkable skill. This mound, no doubt, contains the remains of some venerated dead who have slept for unknown centuries in the wild solitude.

About eighty rods in a westerly direction from this tumulus is a rapid stream that winds its way to the Allegheny river. As we cross the river and pass up the Red House valley, on an eminence, about two hundred feet above the level of the stream, we find an ancient fortification from which can be seen the surrounding hills and the waters of the great river. This work is very extensive, being one hundred and sixty feet in circumference. The parapet is about three feet in height, and the ditch two feet in depth. Two rapid streams which rise in the deep ravines nearly encircle the eminence upon which this work is located. Near the center of the enclosure is a copious spring, which was selected to supply the ancient warriors with water during a protracted siege.

Several miles below the Red House creek, the remains of an ancient work can be traced. This is circular in form and about three hundred feet in diameter. Before it was disturbed the wall was four feet high and the ditch about six feet deep. Near the center of this enclosure various relics have been found, many of which point to a civilization much higher than of those located in the Conewango valley.

In the year 1859, while exploring some tumuli in the vicinity of Red House valley, we found numerous singular and interesting relics, among which were spear heads, six inches in length, with double barbs composed of masses of native copper; also several blocks of mica, which were in about the same condition as when chiseled from the granite of the mountains.

It was near this valley where was found one of the most interesting relics ever discovered among the works of the ancient inhabitants. It was a flat piece of native copper, six inches in length by four in width, artistically wrought, with the form of an elephant represented in harness engraved upon it, and a sort of breast collar, with tugs on either side which extended past the hips.

The great amount of copper implements and blocks of mica that have been found contradicts the theory of Mr. Squire, that the tumuli situated in western New York are not the work of the Mound Builders. I am satisfied, beyond a doubt, that the Indian races never mined for mica or copper, neither did they bury either of these articles with the remains of their distinguished dead. The Mound Builders, for a long period of time, made the great lakes a highway of travel and transported the copper mined at Lake Superior to the northern borders of Lake Erie, thence by land to the Cassadaga lake and down the creek to which it gives rise, to its junction with the Conewango. The circumstance of the Conewango and Red House valleys being on and near the different routes to the southern rivers, may be the cause of the lavish distribution of copper in those sections.

Among the remarkable relics found in the vicinity of this last mentioned work, may be included an image chiseled from gray sandstone, which, for artistic design and elaborate workmanship, will compare favorably with modern art. It is given life-size, and, no doubt, was designed to represent the form of head and face of the people then living. I have spent, with uncommon satisfaction, many hours in examining this wonderful specimen of ancient art. The head and features have a broad outline with high front. The brow is encircled with a plaiting of fanciful ringlets that cluster round the intellectual forehead. Rough and primitive as is the school of art to which this image belongs, it carries unquestionable marks of a much higher civilization than any of the Indian races that have been discovered. Several archæologists who have examined this singular specimen, are of the opinion that it was an idol, one of the gods of their mythology, and worshipped in the mystical rites pertaining to their religion. As this ancient people worshipped the sun, it seems difficult to account for it on that hypothesis. But if it should prove to be an idol, we have a key to unlock one of the mysteries connected with a people once more numerous than the present population of America; a people, the sun of whose empire once rose beyond the northern lakes and extended south to where great rivers send down their turbid waters to meet the ocean's tides; and further still, to a land of flowers, where the golden fruits hung in tempting clusters, unborn of human toil, and thence o'er ocean's isles, ere it is lost in the western wave.

Notwithstanding every climate on the continent of America has once been densely populated by a numerous people, their footprints are fast fading away. The last vestige of these wonderful inhabitants will soon be lost in oblivion, which has already cast its shadow across the "Acropolis of ancient Athens and the Colosseum of imperial Rome."

"The long haired Greeks

To him upon the shores of the Hellespont,
A mound shall heap; that those in aftertimes
Who sail along the darksome sea shall say
This is the monument of one long since Borne to his grave, by mighty Hector slain."

One of the most extensive sepulchral mounds bordering the Allegheny river, in the State of New York, formerly stood on the west side of the river, in the town of Cold Spring. This tumulus was located about five hundred feet from the river and some twenty feet above the highest flood. The location is grand and interesting. To the south and west is a broad level plain, embracing nearly two thousand acres of the most fertile land to be found in Cattaraugus county. This great interval is flanked on either side by precipitous hills which are cut asunder in but three directions; once by the great river that flows to the south, to the north and west by a branch of the Conewango and the Cold Spring creek.

For a description of this tumulus, as it appeared more than a hundred years ago, I am indebted to Gov. Blacksnake, the great chief of the Six Nations. According to his estimate it was about two hundred feet in circumference and twenty feet in height, and one of the largest trees he ever beheld was growing near its base, whose roots penetrated its side for fifty feet or more. When this mound was explored more than seventy years ago, it was found to contain a vast quantity of human bones. According to the recollection of the old chief and that of his son (then a very aged man), then living on the Indian reservation, "cart loads" of bones were discovered, many of which were in such a stage of decay that they crumbled to dust when exposed to the air. Great quantities of relics, such as gorgets, flint axes, arrow heads, and a great number of copper implements, artistically wrought from masses of native copper which was brought from the mines of Lake Superior, were found with the bones.

This great tumulus is now leveled down and the place where it stood is a cultivated field. The earth of which it was composed is distributed over an acre of ground. So rich was this mound with decaying skeletons and relics of curious workmanship, that now, after more than seventy years have passed away, fragments of human bones, arrow heads and copper relics are found in large quantities at each successive plowing. In the spring of 1879, a few days after the ground had been plowed, in company with two boys we found fifteen arrow heads, a curious piece of copper and nearly a peck of fragments of human bones, all of which had been distributed in the soil during about fifty years of cultivation.

That this mound was very ancient is apparent from the condition of the remains being found in such a stage of decay, and from the size of the trees found upon its summit, and adjacent to it. If the great tree referred to by the Indian chief was nearly ten feet in diameter, as he supposed it to have been, that alone would reach back in the past nearly a thousand years, and it is not improbable that many generations of forests have grown and perished since that ancient tomb closed over scores of the dead.

At one of my interviews with Gov. Blacksnake, which lasted several hours, I derived much valuable information. This great chief was a man in possession of vast native talents. He was familiar with the location of every prominent mound and fortification in western New York, Pennsylvania and the valley of the Ohio. In fact he was one of the most intelligent archæologists with whom I have come in contact. The subject under consideration was the antiquity of the works of these ancient people, and whether they were in any way connected with the native Indians of America. In answer to the question, "Is there any alliance between the Indians and Mound Builders?" he said: "We have no knowledge of these ancient people, only from the mounds and fortifications that are very numerous in every section of country with which I am acquainted. We have no reliable traditions in regard to them, though we have traditions reaching back for a long period of time."

Question. "If a race of people as much developed in civilization as the Mound Builders appear to have been, by their works which they left behind, had lived in this country a thousand years ago, would not that fact have been transmitted to your generation?"

Answer. "It is the custom with all Indian tribes to impart such information to their children, when very young, and if those ancient people were contemporary with the American Indians that fact would undoubtedly have passed through thousands of years."

It was the opinion of this old chief that the Indian tribes originated in America, and came in some mysterious manner long after the Mound Builders had passed away.

About two miles from the Allegheny, up Cold Spring creek, are two mounds, one of which has never been thoroughly explored. The other was leveled to the ground in the fall of 1879. This tumulus is on the farm of Wm. M. Brown, Esq., and was originally about ten feet in height, and one hundred feet in circumference. At the time this mound was leveled, with the aid of Mr. Brown, we found a quantity of bone dust mingled with coal and ashes. This was a very interesting discovery, as it shows that ancient people practiced cremation to a certain extent at least.

Opposite the village of Limestone in the town of Carrollton, in the valley of Tunaengwant creek is a circular fortification about one thousand feet in circumference. Some ten rods to the north is Limestone creek, a mountain stream, that winds its way to the Tunaengwant. A large gateway with breastworks opened toward this stream. In the midst of this fortification once stood a number of pine trees of giant size whose heads towered far above the surrounding forest, several of which were about twelve feet in circumference. About forty years ago a cellar was dug within the boundaries of the fortification, and human bones were exhumed in great quantities, in such advanced state of decay that they offered but slight resistance to the shovel and pick. Several years ago, the man who dug the cellar informed me that the bones were several feet in thickness, as far at least as the cellar extended.

The ground now occupied by the village of Olean was, no doubt, once densely populated. The line of the Genesee Valley canal at this place passed through a sepulchral mound that disclosed human bones in the last stage of decomposition. This tumulus was oval in form, about forty feet wide and sixty long and nearly ten feet high.

In the town of Hinsdale near the west bank of Olean creek, about five miles from Olean, a part situated on the lands of S. S. Peake and a part on the lands adjoining, of Mr. Gould, are the remains of an ancient fort that surrounds about three acres. This work shows unmistakable evidence of great antiquity; for more than sixty years ago pine trees, nearly four feet in diameter, were growing within the entrenchment. In and around this fort large quantities of relics peculiar to those lost and wonderful people have been found.

In the town of Persia, on Cattaraugus creek near Point Peters, situated on an elevated plateau, are the remains of an ancient fort. When first discovered in the forest, the embankment stood in bold relief full three feet high. The contiguous country surrounding this tumulus, for several miles in every direction, contained numerous and curious relics of this ancient and distinct race. The scenery at this point along Cattaraugus creek is rugged, bold, and grand. Mr. John S. Ackerly informed the editor of this work, that while cultivating his farm, he has found numerous arrow heads, stone axes, stone implements for skinning game, and a curiously wrought stone rasp. On his farm there are also several deep pits, excavated long before the advent of the white man. In possession of Mr. Ackerly's neighbor is an image of a small bird, artistically carved in stone, which was found in the earth in the neighborhood. It is a fine specimen, but unlike any of the feathered songsters found in western New York at the present day.

Space in this work will not permit us to extend the investigation of this lost but interesting race, to any great length, beyond the bounds of Cattaraugus county. Suffice it to say their empire extended far to the west, and southwest across the continent.

At Martin's Ferry, Ohio, nearly opposite the city of Wheeling, West Virginia, is a more extensive work than I have before had occasion to mention. It is located on the second terrace which is about fifty feet above high water mark. This work is nearly square with two corners facing a hill to the westward rounded off. It is elevated some ten or twelve feet above the surrounding plateau and occupies about three acres. In fact it is a pile of earth artificially raised with gentle slopes on every side. This embankment, on the top, is as level as the floor of a house, and to all appearances has changed but little since its construction long ages ago. Near one of its corners, so as to be almost connected, is a mound much more extensive than any that have been discovered in the State of New York. In 1875, while spending several days in that locality, I made an estimate of about four hundred feet for the circumference of this mound, and for height thirty feet. Many years ago the mound was partially opened, but from appearances the center has never been disclosed. I was informed by several parties residing here that human bones, copper implements and other relics were found. The Rev. J. P. Maclean is of the opinion that works of that character were devoted to some kind of amusement. If such is a fact, it would seem singular that they should build such stately tombs by its side. From its mode of construction, and its general characteristics, it is highly probable it was devoted to a far different purpose, a purpose in some way connected with religion. In every section of the country where the ancient works are found many of them show a religious significance. The religious element is so strong in the nature of man that it does and has always shown itself. Up the Ohio river, for several miles above Martin's Ferry, is a broad valley of alluvial land, which, to all appearance, was once extensively cultivated; done very probably by the people who built these mounds and fortifications.

Twelve miles below the city of Wheeling on the West Virginia side of the river, we reach the village of Moundville, formerly known as Grave Creek, on account of the sepulchral mounds which it once contained. As the traveller arrives at this enchanting location of Nature's handiwork, his attention is at once drawn to a singular hill, symmetrical in form, which towers to the height of seventy feet. This imposing eminence is situated amidst a level plateau that contains more than a thousand acres, and is artificial, and is one of the largest sepulchral monuments constructed by human hands. This mammoth mound is located about half a mile from the Ohio river and some forty feet above its banks. Its base is a true circle and about twenty rods in diameter. It is conical in form, and before the top was leveled off it stood eighty feet high. The time that has passed away since this great work was built is shrouded in mystery; but it is not improbable that since its construction, Rome, Greece and Thebes have fallen and their gorgeous palaces, rotundas, obelisks and colosseums have gone down in a common sepulchre.

In the year 1838, a Mr. Tomlinson, who claimed a legal title over the Mound Builders by adverse possession, excavated a tunnel from its base to its center. The soil, composed in part of clay and being perfectly dry, showed no signs of caving in, so they readily reached the center, and to the astonishment of all concerned came to a vault or room twenty feet square, the bottom of which was covered with a dark material made from decayed timber, which had long been reduced to ashes by the destructive influence of time. After removing some of the debris and making a search, they discovered two human skeletons in almost a perfect state of preservation. One was that of a male and the other that of a female. They lay side by side in a horizontal position with their heads to the south, separated the distance of about ten or twelve inches. When deposited in that dark and silent vault, the arms of the corpses were laid carefully beside the bodies, where they had reposed for centuries before Columbus dreamt of a western continent. Four bracelets made of copper artistically designed surrounded the wrists of the skeletons. In the spring of 1841, I visited this mound and found it open for exhibition, by Mr. Tomlinson, the owner and proprietor, a gentleman of education and very much an antiquarian, who had been to a very large expense in preparing the place for the reception of visitors. He had caused the bones of the two skeletons to be wired and put in the most favorable position for exhibition. These two skeletons were the best preserved of any that have ever been taken from any mound in this country and were calculated to open a new field of investigation. By the aid of them we can arrive more closely at the size of that ancient people, and as they were undoubtedly prominent personages we can form a very reasonable opinion of their mental abilities. The two were apparently about the same age, perhaps about fifty years, indicating that they died in the heyday of life. The male, judging by the skeleton, was a man about six feet in height, or perhaps a trifle more. The female was estimated to be five feet seven or eight inches in height, with bones which would denote a powerful frame. The intellectual and moral regions were exceedingly well developed. Benevolence and reverence were large, which would indicate the possession of a strong religious nature. The organ of juvenile love, was uncommonly large; combativeness and destructiveness were only moderately developed. Such a head would indicate a person of strong moral feelings; one that would love the right and despise acts of cruelty and oppression; would love the young with more than ordinary mother's love, and at the sight of a suffering child would be melted to compassion. If a mother she would devote her life to her children. The head of the king (if he was a king) was less developed in the moral qualities than that of this queen of the Mound Builders. The animal organs were rather large and the intellectual fairly developed. Such an organization would give considerable force of character, and if devoted to politics, would be no more likely to jump the track of honesty and virtue than many of our members of Congress, bank directors or present day political leaders.

The skeletons and copper bracelets were not the only relics found in the vault in the midst of this great mound. More than three thousand beads of curious and artistic workmanship, together with two hundred and fifty blocks of mica and large quantities of flint and copper implements were disclosed. But one of the most interesting relics ever found in any mound in this country was a block or flat stone containing three lines of unknown characters engraved upon it. This stone lay near the skeletons, and it was thought by Messrs. Tomlinson and Schoocraft that it proved a written language, designed to be read by the inhabitants of the spirit world. So great was the interest taken in this stone and the characters engraved upon it that it was submitted to the learned professors of Europe, Rafu, of Copenhagen and M. Jomal, of Paris, who came to the conclusion that the stone contained twenty-two alphabetical characters which they were unable to interpret.

It is stated in a paper written by Dr. Cheney in 1859, that the skeletons found in the mounds at Cassadaga were those of giants, and that one in particular measured seven feet and five inches. I suppose he got that information from some who saw them at the time they were exhumed and who had their organs of marvelousness greatly exalted. That the Mound Builders were a little larger than the present type, is very probable; but that they were giants eight and ten feet high is all fabulous. I have seen many skeletons from mounds in different states, but have seen none that will much exceed the people now living. At the centennial, in one of the annex buildings, was a large amount of fragments of skeletons from the ancient tombs in West Virginia, Missouri, Ohio, and the Mississippi valley, and I saw none that would exceed the size of the Indian tribes of America. The subject under consideration has quite enough of the marvelous about it to gratify almost any imagination without resorting to giants.

The fact that the mastodon was contemporary with the Mound Builders is admitted by all antiquarians. It is my opinion that in all probability they tamed and used that powerful beast to haul heavy burdens. I am confirmed in this opinion by the fact that in his organization he possessed a mild disposition, and that, like the African elephant, he could have been tamed when young and brought under subjection with as little trouble as is required for the ox or horse. The inhabitants of Africa, who stand much lower in the scale of development than the ancient Mound Builders, use the elephant as a beast of burden. This hypothesis is further strengthened by the finding of the copper relic before mentioned, in the town of Red House, on the Allegheny river, with the form of the mastodon engraved upon it, represented in harness.

When we look over the continent of America and find a race of people who once held empire over this broad domain, now slowly and surely passing away; and then into the midnight of the past, and find such unmistakable traces of a once numerous and powerful people now lost in oblivion; and then again that we, as a people, may be standing on the brink of ruin, with religious and political leaders lost to every principle of honor, and slowly undermining the glorious fabric of American greatness; who knows but in the distant future America with its colossal structures will be in ruins, when we consider the warlike spirit of man and the strange and dreadful convulsions of nature, that carry in their train vast and sudden destruction? I am aware that we, as a people, believe that we are crowned with everlasting safety, on account of our republican institutions, our liberty of speech, and our great range of religious and political freedom. The ruined cities of the ancient world no doubt thought so once; but "hearken to the voice of history." Look at Babylon, once the praise of the whole earth. But "Babylon has fallen."

How nations sink by darling schemes oppress,
When vengeance listens to the fool's request,
Fate wings with every wish the afflictive dart,
Each gift of nature and each grace of art;
With fatal heat impetuous courage glows,
With fatal sweetness elocution flows.
Impeachment stops the speaker's powerful breath,
And restless fire precipitates in death.

CHAPTER III.

DISCOVERY OF THE IROQUOIS BY THE FRENCH. THEIR PROWESS, SUBJUGATION AND THEIR RELIGION.

JACQUES CARTIER, a distinguished French explorer and navigator, in the service of France, in 1535, entered the great gulf of Canada, to which he gave the name of St. Lawrence, sailed through it and up the river of the same name which he called the "River of Hochelaga," and explored the country as far as the city of Montreal, ascended Mt. Royal, from which he was the first white man to gaze upon the magnificent prospect which continues to delight the tourist, and was the first to behold in the panorama stretched before him, a part of the territory of our Empire State. In 1540 Cartier again visited Canada and made an abortive attempt to found a colony. No further attempt was made to establish a settlement until 1608, when Samuel Champlain, a French nobleman, with others, founded a colony at Quebec. Champlain, restless for adventures, and equally anxious to make further discoveries in the new world, waited only for spring, and an opportunity, to enter upon a long cherished plan of explorations, with the high hope of finding a way to China.

In the last part of the autumn he was visited by an ambitious young chief from the vicinity of Ottawa, (then unknown), who prevailed upon him to join him in the spring in an expedition against his enemies, the Iroquois, the Five Nations, composed of the Mohawks, Oneidas, Onondagas, Cayugas and Senecas, and of whom all the Indian tribes stood in mortal fear.

On the 28th day of May, 1609, the expedition set off, Champlain in a small shallop carrying himself and ten others, armed with guns. They passed up the St. Lawrence, and entered the mouth of the Richelieu river. Here his ease-loving warriors encamped for two days, hunted, fished and feasted, and regaled their French allies with fresh fish, venison and wild fowl—and quarrelled, too. About three-fourths took to their canoes and paddled towards home. The remaining force consisted of sixty warriors with twenty canoes. This expedition pushed onward up the Richelieu, entered the beautiful lake which Champlain gave his name, and were then in the country of the Mohawk nation, who kept the eastern door of the Long House of the confederacy of the Five Nations. The party then traveled only by night. June 29th, they embarked at twilight from the west shore of the lake, near the site of Crown Point. They discovered a flotilla of Iroquois canoes about ten o'clock in the evening; each recognized his mortal enemy, and their mingled war-whoops made "night hideous." By common consent the battle was deferred until daylight, when the allies, confident of their success, marched with steadiness to the conflict. They opened their ranks, and Champlain and his two friends passed to the front with their carbines. The astonished Iroquois stared at the unwonted sight in amazement. The guns were leveled and discharged; two of the chiefs fell dead. The brave Iroquois stood firm, and filled the air with their arrows; but the fire-arms continued their deadly work; their terrific reports quailed their stout hearts; they broke and ran, and the victory was won. Thus the French foolishly rushed into war with the mightiest and most powerful Indian confederacy the world ever beheld. This act engendered a hatred of the French on the part of the Iroquois that descended to generations then unborn, and eventually led to the annihilation of many of the Canadian tribes and to the weakening of the Iroquois.

They were generally on the war-path. They drove out and annihilated the powerful Neuter nation and the warlike Hurons. About 1655 they extended their victories over the immense territory reaching to the Father of Waters on the west; south to the Tennessee river, north to the St. Lawrence and east to the Hudson.

In exterminating the Eries, the policy of the Iroquois seems to have been to remove a powerful rival rather than to acquire territory. Because the country of the Eries lay adjacent to the Senecas, it was given to that nation, and for many years after the exodus of their enemies it was only occupied by them as an occasional hunting ground and where deer, bears, and wolves held unmolested possession.

This was the zenith of power of the Iroquois; and until the expedition of Marquis de Nouville, who with his army from Canada administered a just retribution to the Senecas, in 1687, for ravages committed on French settlements on the Illinois river, the Iroquois were invulnerable to any force that came before them. Then a decisive battle was fought between the French and the Indians, in Ontario county, in which the victorious French struck terror to the hearts of the Senecas, and burned many flourishing Indian villages. The Indians through fear abandoned these villages in dismay, and retired further into the interior, and possibly as far as the territory of Cattaraugus county, so long left vacant by the Eries.

The Iroquois were the allies of the English, and were instigated by them, who offered them a bounty for Yankee scalps during the war of the Revolution, to constantly harrass the American settlements, and commit the most cruel and barbarous atrocities, among which was the massacre at Wyoming.

During the winter of 1777-8 the Indians wintered at Niagara, and early in May assembled under their leaders at Seneca Castle in pursuance of the order of Col. Guy Johnson, and marched forth to do their murderous work. They spread death and destruction in the valley of the west branch of the Susquehanna river, at Cobleskill, at Cherry Valley, and Wyoming. They spared neither age nor sex, and their fiendish atrocities were seldom equalled, and never surpassed.

Vigorous measures for subduing these savages, who had become fiends in their thirst for blood, were demanded by the entire nation. Accordingly Major General John Sullivan was entrusted with an expedition against the Iroquois. He entered their country, met them in several battles, and defeated them in every one, and as the most efficient means of their subjugation he resorted to that questionable war measure of burning over forty Indian villages, with 160,000 bushels of corn, destroyed their orchards, loaded with ripening fruit, and devastated their country all along his line of march.

At the close of this expedition, that power was broken for ever, and the country passed from the possession and dominion of the Indians to the white man.

This brave simple people, except when on the war-path, busied themselves with the vocations of peace, hunting, fishing, and in tilling the ground in their primitive way; and in worshipping the Great Spirit as taught them by their ancestors, for how many generations back they and we know not.

They had the vices of barbaric life and they also had its virtues. That they were superstitious and are yet is admitted without a question; but they were never idolaters; neither is the Indian stupid. He recognizes Ha-wen-ni-yu, the Great Spirit, and believes in a future life; He-no the Thunderer, Ga-oh, the spirit of the winds, a protecting spirit of fire, of water, of medicine, of all the trees and shrubs, and that each Indian has a protecting spirit appointed to take care of him by the Good Ruler.

* The religious system of the Iroquois, notwithstanding it originated with the untutored savages, has the elements of great sublimity. It sees the Great Spirit not in a personality, but as a great and loving spirit, whose extended arms encircle the universe. The Indian believes that his God controls the motion of the stars, and that he watches their every interest with fatherly care; and that he will escort their spirits to the charming hunting grounds beyond "the river of death," where beautiful birds make vocal the hills and valleys with their enchanting songs. They also believe that he has supplied the invisible world with innumerable deer, bears and all other animals useful for food; and has endowed the good Indian with ability to climb the rugged mountains and never tire; and to sport upon the shimmering lakes and sinuous rivers that would never fail to supply them with fish.

For the countless blessings that the Great Spirit conferred upon them, they met at stated intervals to do him honor. Six annual festivals were held by the Iroquois. The New Year's feast and the White Dog dance, in the olden time lasted nine days, and was the greatest festival of the year.

A week before the ceremony, two grotesquely dressed persons called at every house, with corn-pounders in their hands, with which they knocked on the floor to command silence, and then said these words: "Listen! listen! listen! The ceremonies which Ha-wen-ni-yu commands are about to commence. Prepare your houses. Clear away the rubbish. Drive out all evil animals. Should your friend be taken sick and die, we command you not to mourn nor allow your friends to mourn. Lay the body aside. When the ceremonies are over we will mourn with you." These commands were actually obeyed. On the first day of the feast a white dog "without spot or blemish" was chosen and strangled, that no bones should be broken or blood shed. The body was painted with spots of red and decorated with feathers. Around the feet were wound strings of wampum and beads. The dog was then elevated on top of a pole twenty feet high where he remained until the fifth day. Then they built an altar of wood upon which the body of the dog was laid and burned. As they did this the great thanksgiving address was made, and tobacco was constantly thrown upon the fire that the prayers might ascend in the clouds of smoke: "Hail, Ha-wen-ni-yu! hail! Listen with open ears to the words of thy people. Continue to listen. Give us zeal and fidelity to celebrate the sacred ceremonies which thou hast given to us. We thank thee that we still live. We thank our mother earth which sustains us. We thank the rivers for the fish. We thank the herbs and plants of the earth. We thank the bushes and trees for fruit. We thank the winds which have banished disease. We thank our grandfather He-no for rain. We thank the moon and stars which give us light when the sun has gone to rest. We thank the sun for the warmth and light by day. Keep us from evil ways that the sun may never hide his face from us for shame, and leave us in darkness. We thank Thee O mighty Ha-wen-ni-yu, our creator and our good ruler. Thou canst do no evil. Everything thou doest is for our happiness."

During this feast there were social hours, and times for games. On one day all the people went into each others houses carrying wooden shovels, with which the ashes upon the hearth were stirred and scattered, while invoking a blessing upon the household.

They amused themselves at this time in guessing dreams, and with a great variety of games. The war-dance was also a part of this festival. They acted war. The war-song was sung which aroused all the fire of the young warriors and then the arrows flew thick and fast, the tomahawk was lifted, the dead and dying were upon the battlefield, the scalps were taken; and then could be heard the shout of victory and the dirge for the slain. This was made to be real by various devices of paint, false scalps, etc., and was very exciting; but a joyful time.

"Keepers of the faith" are elected by the people whose duty it is to prepare and appoint the feast.

At the maple festival in the olden times the leader made this speech: "Friends, the sun, the ruler of the day, is high in his path, and we must hasten to our duty. We are here to observe an ancient custom handed down by our forefathers and given to them by the good ruler, Ha-wen-ni-yu. He requires us to give thanks for the blessings we receive. We will be faithful to this command."

Friends: "The maple is yielding its sweet waters. We join in thanksgiving to the maple and also to Ha-wen-ni-yu, who made this tree for the good of the red man."

Then came the prayer by the leader. Whenever the Great Spirit was addressed, and then only, they burned incense by throwing tobacco on the fire. The following was the prayer for this occasion. "Ha-wen-ni-yu, listen now to our words. The smoke of our offering arises. Listen to our words as they arise in smoke. We thank thee for the sweet water of the maple. We thank thee for the return of the planting season. Let our corn and beans and squashes grow. Ha-wen-ni-yu! Continue to listen for the smoke yet arises. Preserve us from pestilential diseases. Preserve our old men and protect our young. Ha-wen-ni-yu! Thou dost love thy people and hate their enemies. Thou hast given us the panther's heart, the eagle's eye, the moose's foot, and the cunning of the fox; but to our enemies thou hast given the eye of the owl in the daylight, the foot of the turtle, the heart of woman, and the stupid brain of the bear in winter."

The strawberry feast in ancient times consisted entirely of the wild fruit eaten with maple sugar. Before partaking the leader returned thanks for the people to the Great Spirit. The green corn festival consisted of succotash, a soup of corn and beans; and Ha-wen-ni-yu was thanked for corn, beans and squashes.

All of their festivals were opened by the meeting of the tribe in order that each one might repent of his past sins and resolve that in the future of his life he would avoid the snares and pitfalls into which he had fallen in the past. To make their promises binding one of their leading theologians would take in his hand a "string of white wampum" and facing the audience would confess his various infirmities and sins. The wampum was passed from one to the other, until every person in the audience had made confession.

The belief in a presiding deity is indigenous to the soil of every clime. All nations have a God, but some, through ignorance of the laws that govern the universe, have converted him into a malignant spirit. The Indian idea of God is a sublime conception. He is their tender loving father who watches the interests of his children with the care bestowed upon the infant reposing in its mother's arms; and, whilst he continually holds in his hands the scales of eternal justice, which he metes out to every son and daughter of the forest, he inflicts upon the wicked and those who have gone astray no sanguinary punishment, but holds out the hand of forgiveness to the worst of sinners, after they have been scourged with the whip of justice, tempered with mercy.

Handsome Lake, a half brother of the famous chief Cornplanter, was born in 1735, and had been a very dissipated man. He reformed after a long illness, and after spending three days in the forest, where he claimed he was taught by the Great Spirit, he returned to his people as his prophet, with a message. He taught them temperance, restricted them to one cup of fire-water in the morning, one at noon and one at night. He insisted on a close observance of the marriage relation, and that death only should separate husband and wife. He taught them to give of their abundance to those who lacked substance, to care for orphans and adopt one if they had no children, and to welcome strangers to their homes, speak kind words to them, and always mention the good ruler, Ha-wen-ni-yu. He claimed to have been taken in a vision to the happy home; it was filled with Indians; the white people were all shut out. He claimed also to have visited the house of torment, where he saw many kettles of boiling lead, into which people were plunged. He saw there a drunken Indian, and the evil spirit was in the act of pouring a cup of boiling lead down his throat, and he saw flames burst from his mouth as he screamed with agony. There were many who believed in the divine mission of Handsome Lake, and to this day many of the pagan portion of the Seneca nation are his disciples.

CHAPTER IV.

INDIAN OCCUPANCY OF CATTARAUGUS COUNTY. THE INDIANS AS THEY APPEAR ON THEIR RESERVATION TO-DAY.

[By REV. J. W. SANBORN, Manager State Indian Exhibit at World's Fair.]

THE GRADUAL encroachments of the whites upon Indian territory, and the march of a too often unscrupulous civilization, led to the defining of Indian boundaries by treaty stipulations. In 1784 a treaty was enacted on the site of what is now Rome, N. Y., (then Fort Stanwix), between the commissioners of the United States and the chiefs of the Six Nations. By the terms of that treaty the Iroquois were to be left in undisturbed possession of the greater portion of what is now the State of New York, and had the right of possession guaranteed to them by the United States, of all territory west of a line called the "property line" running nearly parallel with, and less than eighty miles west of the Hudson river. Thus it appears that the early occupancy of what is now Cattaraugus county was co-equal in time with that of the entire State of New York. Cattaraugus county was organized March 11, 1808, and was taken from territory known as Genesee county.* Subsequent treaties narrowed down the territory of the Iroquois until in 1845 we find the Senecas removing from the Buffalo Creek reservation to the Cattaraugus reservation.

As early as the year 1600 the Indians of western New York were visited by French missionaries who discovered that an extensive strip of territory lying between the domains of the Hurons and Iroquois (who were deadly enemies) was occupied by another tribe to which the French gave the name of the "Neuter nation," or as the Senecas called them "the Kah-kwas," or Eries. They appear to have held their territory against both the Senecas and Hurons, and the remains of their forts and cemeteries are discoverable along the south shore of Lake Erie even to the Allegheny and Ohio rivers. There is hardly a town along the picturesque county of Cattaraugus that has not been the scene of some interesting event in the Indian history. Its streams, well stocked with fish, its magnificent scenery, hardly surpassed by another county in the State of New York, its fertile soil, its dense forests once teeming with all sorts of game, made Cattaraugus county a veritable paradise to the red man.

Of her memorable journey from Ohio to the Genesee country, Mary Jemison, the famous "white woman," whose line of march lay directly through Cattaraugus county, says: "From Conewango we came to a place called by the Indians Che-na-shun-ga-tan on the Allegheny river, at the mouth of what is now Cold Spring creek, in the town of Napoli, (now Cold Spring, Cattaraugus county,) and from that to Dee-yu-no-weh, (Eddy-not-strong), i. e. Carrollton. Having rested ourselves two days at that place, we came to Caneadea."

Olean was one of the favorite resorts of the Senecas and many are the traditions which they relate of the wonderful cures effected by the magic spring at Cuba. The liquid from the spring had marvelous curative properties and was called Seneca oil. It was from a petroleum spring containing other elements and its efficacy was never called in question.

Passing over interesting historical incidents of those early days, let us glance at the Senecas as rulers and statesmen, and of course this will bring us to the consideration of that matchless alliance known as the Iroquois confederation which has been characterized by one American statesman as "the most consummate piece of statesmanship ever devised by the wit of man."

Wearry of destructive attacks upon one another, the Iroquois established the confederacy for the better protection of themselves and for the securing of peace. The whole scheme is said to have originated in the brain of Hiawatha. While it is doubtless true that the beginnings of the system originated with him, it is more than probable that the wisdom and experience of others added to its completeness from time to time. However, before Columbus discovered America, this confederation was in full operation and was bidding fair to establish a magnificent civilization in the heart of the wilderness. The conflicts between the English and French for the possession of this territory seriously interfered with the peace-dealing confederation, and in large measure broke it up. The best description of this league is that of Mr.

L. H. Morgan, who says: "The government of the Six Nations when they were in the zenith of their prosperity and power was an oligarchy composed of a mixture of elective and hereditary power. The government was administered by chiefs, each tribe having two, one of whom was hereditary, the other elective. His term of office was during good behavior. The elective sachem was a military chieftain, whose duty it was to attend to all military affairs of the tribe, and to lead the warriors to battle. Both were members of the general council of the confederacy, as well as of the national council, which met as often as necessity required, and settled all questions involving matters in which their own nation only had an interest; but the general council of the confederacy met once a year except in cases of emergency. In the settlement of difficulties the chiefs must be of one mind.

"At the institution of the league, fifty permanent sachemships were created with appropriate names, and in the sachems who held those titles was vested the supreme power of the confederacy. To secure order in the succession, and to determine the individuals entitled, the sachemships were made hereditary under limited and peculiar laws of descent. The sachems themselves were equal in rank and authority, and instead of holding separate territorial jurisdiction, their powers were joint, and co-extensive with the league. As a safeguard against contention and fraud, such sachem was 'raised up,' and invested with his title by a council of all the sachems, with suitable forms and ceremonies. Until this ceremony of confirmation or investiture, no one could become a ruler. He received, when 'raised up' the name of the sachemship itself, as in the case of the titles of nobility, and so also did his successors from generation to generation. The sachemships were distributed among the Five Nations; nine to the Mohawk, nine to the Oneida, fourteen to the Onondaga, ten to the Cayuga, and eight to the Seneca. The sachems united formed the council of the league, the ruling body in whom resided the executive, legislative, and judicial authority. It was an oligarchy, i. e., 'the rule of the few,' and, while more system is observable in this than in the oligarchies of antiquity, it seems also better calculated in its framework to resist political changes.

"Next to the sachems in position, stood the chiefs, an inferior class of rulers, the very existence of whose office was an anomaly in the oligarchy of the Iroquois. The office of chief was made elective, and the reward of merit, and without any power of descent, the title terminating with the individual. After their election they were 'raised up' by a council of the nation; but a ratification by the general council of the sachems was necessary to complete the investiture."

Although these customs and forms of government have given place to more modern methods, it is still true that an Indian and his wife may not properly belong to the same clan. And this, from earliest days, has been a bar to political corruption, because all the children, being regarded as a part of the woman's personal property, always belong to the clan of the mother, hence no chief can be succeeded in office by his own son. A vacancy occurring, the eldest woman in the clan makes the nomination of the person to be 'raised up' to the chieftainship.

On the 22d of October, 1868, the Seneca nation adopted a new constitution, whereby the form of government was radically changed. This government has a legislative, executive, and judiciary department. The legislative power is vested in a council of sixteen members, called the councillors of the Seneca nation of Indians. Eight of these are elected annually for the Allegany reservation, and eight for the Cattaraugus reservation. The executive power is vested in a president, whose duty it is to execute faithfully all laws applicable to the nation. To him is given power to fill vacancies that may occur in the council either by death, resignation or impeachment of any of the members, until such vacancy shall be filled by election. The judiciary power is vested in a court known as the peacemakers, composed of six members, three of whom are from the Cattaraugus reservation, and three from the Allegany. They are elected annually for a term of three years. Two peacemakers have power to hold courts, differing from courts of justices of the peace, in that they have the further power to prove wills, to settle estates of deceased persons, and to settle questions relating to real estate, and they are also empowered to grant divorces. But all their determinations and decisions are subject to appeal to the council, whose decisions are final. The council has power to make treaties subject to the approval of at least three-fourths of the legal voters, and the consent of three-fourths of the mothers of the nation. Besides the president there are a clerk and treasurer, and two marshals, one from each reservation. The president is elected every year, on the first Tuesday in May, and any male person in the tribe who is twenty-one years old or more is eligible to this position. The choice of a chief alternates between the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations as the tribe is very nearly equally divided between the two reserves. The Seneca council convenes the first Tuesday in June, and continues its sessions until the business is transacted.

The Cattaraugus reservation is partly in the county of the same name, but principally in Erie county north of the Cattaraugus creek. The Allegany reservation is wholly within Cattaraugus county and is forty miles long, by about one mile wide. Not far from one thousand Indians, principally Senecas, occupy this reservation. There are about fifteen hundred Indians on the Cattaraugus reservation, and they, with the Indians of the Allegany reservation, constitute one nation, hence the division of officers between the two reservations. The population on both these reservations is increasing. The births exceeded the deaths by thirteen in 1891. Within the bounds of the Allegany reservation there are 30,469 acres of land, not all fit for cultivation. The good timber is gone for the most part, and many of the Indians are compelled either to work for others for wages, or to till the soil, or both.

Cattaraugus county is peopled by whites who are deeply interested in education, and a strong sentiment in its favor prevails. It is doubtful if any county in the State has better public schools, and this sentiment in favor of education has exerted its wholesome influence on the Indians, awakening among many of them a like interest. There are several State public schools on the reservations in Cattaraugus county, and in addition to these there is a prosperous industrial school at Quaker Bridge, sustained by the Society of Friends. This school accommodates about forty children of both sexes, and furnishes instruction to the boys in farming, and the girls in housework, in addition to a good course of study.* Other religious bodies exert no small influence on behalf of education throughout this county; among which should be mentioned the Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists.

Although the ancient customs of the aboriginal occupants of Cattaraugus county are fading away, still you may find among the older Indians a strict adherence to the usages of old. Nearly all of the things which we are about to describe are still in use, and a pictured reproduction of them will add interest to this chapter.†

The Saddle.—The saddle of the aboriginal Cattaraugus county Indian excites a white man's curiosity, and with good reason, for it is a very ingeniously constructed affair. It is distinctively Indian in all its characteristics. In its construction our red brothers select a good sized tree with a crotch of the right spread. They whittle down the wood, and fit it to the angle of the beast's back-bone. The pommel is shaped from the solid portion from which the spreading limbs of the tree project. Back of the pommel an opening extends the whole length of the saddle. A piece of wood, sometimes a crotched stick, is whittled down and fitted over the sides of the saddle at the other end. The girth, crupper and stirrup-straps were originally of horse hair or buffalo hair, more latterly of thongs, and in modern times are of ordinary rope. The stirrups are made of hickory saplings split and bent in triangular shape. The sides of the saddle are eighteen inches long and six inches wide. The pommel is five inches high.

The Rattle.—There are two kinds of rattles made by the Cattaraugus Indians, the squash-shell rattle, and the turtle-shell. To make the squash rattle the Indians cut a hole in one end of a hard-shelled squash and remove the seeds and interior. Dried beans, kernels of corn and sometimes cherry-pits are put in, and the aperture is plugged. This rattle is too frail for violent pounding and so is used as an accompaniment to songs of lamentation for the dead. The turtle-shell rattle is a remarkable production. The turtle's legs, tail and body are carefully dissected, the skin is sewed up, after a goodly number of cherry-pits have been put in, then the neck is stretched to its utmost length; hickory strips are placed upon the stretched neck to retain it in that shape for a handle. Thongs are wound tightly around the whole making a rigid handle. The eyes are dug out and a thong is passed through the sockets to serve as a loop by which to hang the rattle up. This rattle is used in war-dances and medicine-dances.

The War-Club.—The Indians no longer have use for war-clubs, except as they gratify the white man's curiosity and brandish them to show how their fathers fought. The clubs were about two feet long, of iron-wood, with a knot at one end which they shaped like a ball. A bunch of feathers was tied at the end of the handle.

The Tomahawk.—The tomahawk has from earliest times been the favorite weapon of the Indians. Before coming in contact with the French, tomahawks were of stone, but afterwards more often of iron, steel or brass. The tomahawk of Red Jacket, represented in the accompanying sheet of engravings, was surmounted by a bowl which served as a pipe, the handle forming the pipe-stem. The handle was inlaid with silver ornamentation. Chief Brant's pipe-tomahawk is also shown.

The tomahawk and fire-brand have ever served as emblems of war. Burying the tomahawk means peace; lighting the torch and raising the tomahawk and throwing dust in the air, are the signals for immediate conflict. Happily, among the Cattaraugus Indians there are now no tomahawks, because the spirit is gone which resorts to such weapons, and peace pervades the breasts of chiefs and people.

The Head-Strap.—Basswood and slippery elm grow plentifully on the Indian reservation in Cattaraugus county. From the earliest times bark ropes have been made and used by the Senecas; woven or plaited into wide bands, they serve as head-straps for the support of burdens carried on the back. Head-straps are commonly used at the present day, but are constructed of yarn woven into a belt about fifteen feet long. The wide part of the belt is placed over the forehead, and the ends are tied to the burden to be carried on the back.

The Sap-tub.—One of the principal religious festivals of the Indian year is the "Adoration of the Maple." The sweet sap, after the cold winter has passed, is Nature's first exhibition of tenderness to the "Children of the Forest." The sap-tub is of bark. The rough bark is left on except where the ends and sides are turned up. The side of the bark next the tree forms the inside of the tub. The picture shows how the ends are gathered up and fastened.

The Tray.—This is of bark, and is a useful utensil of household economy, being used as a mixing tray in the preparation of corn-bread. After the loaf is cooked, it is placed in a platter made of braided strands of corn husks. With the possible exception of a bark barrel, the bark tray is the most useful and most generally used of household articles.

Games.—The Indians are enthusiastic experts in playing certain games. The ring and rod represented in the engraving are used in the javelin game. The ring is usually five or six inches in diameter. The rods are made of saplings sharpened and cut four to six feet in length. The Indians choose sides. One person steps out and rolls the ring midway between the contending parties. The Indians who are on the opposite side from the one who rolls the ring shoot their javelins, and if one of them hits the ring or sends his javelin through it, all on the other side at once throw their javelins at the ring, and if they fail, or as many of them as fail to hit the ring, or to send a javelin through it, they give up their javelins as forfeits to the other side, and they throw these captured javelins at the ring. As many of these last as hit the ring step out of the play, and cannot again enter for that game. And the captured javelins which do not hit the ring are at once returned to their original owners. The winning side must now roll the ring, and the game continues until all the javelins on one side are forfeited. This is a summer game.

One of the finest winter games, barring the betting which usually accompanies it, is the game of snow-snake. I have often wondered that the whites do not take it up. A level place is selected, generally by the roadside, and a small log is dragged along in the snow, and thus a track is made in which to shoot the snakes. From hickory saplings shafts are cut, made to represent a snake. The head is elevated slightly,—as shown in the engraving,—and “loaded” with a few ounces of lead. The snakes are from six to eight feet long, and quite slender, but perfectly straight, and are polished with beeswax to facilitate their gliding over the smooth track prepared in the snow. At the small end of the snake is a slight notch to fit the finger. With this end resting on one finger, and firmly grasped with the other fingers and the thumb, the Indian steps back a few feet, makes a short, sharp run of—say twenty feet—and sends the snake along the glassy snow-track at a fearful velocity. Every man’s snake bears his name or private mark, and sides are chosen, and a tally kept of the snakes which make the longest run. Each snake is credited with a certain number of points, and those which outstrip the others bring credit to the side to which they belong. Snow-snakes have been thrown twelve hundred feet in one of these slippery tracks. The game is exhilarating, exciting, and very healthful.

In the use of bows and arrows the Indians of Cattaraugus county have ever been famous. Arrow-heads of hornstone—sometimes called flint—have been found in vast quantities in all parts of the county, and they give us a hint of the past, and prove that this mode of bringing down game, and exterminating their enemies, has been employed from the earliest times by this historic people. One gets a good idea of the strength of an Indian by attempting to bend his bow. This is generally a very difficult thing to do. The average length of an Indian bow is four feet. The arrows are three feet long. At the bow-string end of the arrow a small twist of feathers is bound, causing the arrow to whirl in its flight like a rifle-ball. With arrows pointed with stone heads, or even with wood whittled to a point, an Indian could easily kill large game.

Indian boys have their games, varying according to the season of the year, just as the white boys have, but the standard sport among the former, take it year in and year out, is bow and arrow shooting. Knocking pennies off a post, and pocketing the pennies as a reward—whenever they can find anyone willing to put up the pennies—is a favorite sport.

Corn-Pounder.—The Cattaraugus Indian women still prefer to make their corn-meal in a corn-pounder, notwithstanding the fact that the grist-mills of the white man can be heard in the distance humming at their toil. And it is interesting to watch, on a summer day, Indian women pounding corn in the shade of their fruit trees, and sifting the poundings through queer looking baskets. The engraving gives an excellent idea of the corn-pounder as now used by the Cattaraugus county Indians. These pounders vary in size from two feet to thirty inches in height, and are from eighteen to twenty inches in diameter. The "upper," as it is called, is of hard wood, four feet long, slender at the center for convenience in handling. The opening is made in the end of the log of wood by red-hot coals, which the Indians pile up in a circle until the charred wood can be easily broken away and gouged in the shape of a mortar and made smooth. The dried corn is thoroughly pounded by dashing the "upper" up and down. The poundings are then put in a coarse-meshed basket and shaken or sifted through, the coarser portion being made into hominy and the finer into bread and puddings. The Indians grow three kinds of corn, viz: sweet corn, red flint, and white flint, or "squaw" corn. The first is for succotash, the second for charring, and the third for bread and puddings.

Indian Drum.—The drum is a favorite accompaniment to the Indian dances, more especially the war-dance, and with it the time is beaten. The drum is about one foot in height. A skin, tanned in smoke, is drawn over one end of the drum body, and a tightly fitting hoop wound with strips of thong is pressed down over the soft leather. Modern Indian drums are made by sawing a small paint keg in two, and stretching leather over the open end. Holes are made in the closed end "to let out the music"—as one Indian put it.

Husk Bottles.—The engravings also show an article of Indian manufacture which is somewhat rare at the present day, nevertheless there are families which make use of husk-bottles for storing away salt, parched corn, etc. These bottles are made of woven strands of corn husks. Some of these are so tightly braided that by smearing them with clay prepared for the purpose, they will hold vinegar and other liquids. The wide mouths of the bottles in the engraving will be observed by the reader; these bottles are for holding not only salt and parched corn, but also meal and a very nutritious preparation of powdered corn and maple sugar, a favorite article of food under long marches, or in severe physical labor. And the horse jockeys in the tribe refresh weary trotting horses, and revive them for another spurt on the track, by giving them water to drink in which a few handfuls of powdered corn and maple sugar have been mixed. There is certainly virtue in this preparation for man and beast.

Pipes.—The Indian furnished to the world tobacco and corn, but the whites taught them to chew. The Seneca Indian name for tobacco is O-yeh-quaa-weh, meaning "the only tobacco." They consider Indian tobacco the best grown, but are generally not unwilling to smoke any kind. Native tobacco is easily grown. If started from seed-planting one year, it will thereafter propagate itself. Aboriginal remains, wherever found, are accompanied with pipes.

It may not be uninteresting to the reader to study Indian types as presented in the child-group shown in the engraving. Here are twenty-seven children, and they are from the following tribes: Cornplanter, Seneca, Onondaga, Cayuga, Oneida, Tuscarora, Stockbridge, and Mohawk. This group was taken on the Cattaraugus reservation, and the group comprises the infant department of the Thomas Orphan Asylum, and the picture was taken in the early part of the summer of 1890.

Under ordinary circumstances it would be regarded as a mark of too great self esteem in a writer to insert his own portrait in an historical article like this, but hoping it may be excusable under present circumstances, I present myself to the reader in the garb of the medicine man. (See engraving.)

Medicine Man.—The false face of the medicine man is cut from a solid block of wood, and dyed with Indian red. On top are bags of tobacco, which is scattered in the fire as a part of the ceremony of the cure of the sick. In one hand is a turtle-shell rattle, and when ten or more Indians enter a sick room wearing as many masks, they certainly make an impression on the beholder, and why should they not also impress the bad spirit which, according to them, locates itself in the diseased part! The theory is that by these incantations the bad spirit is frightened away, and the patient is left to get well. The carving of these faces is, in many instances, very skillfully done, and must call for a remarkable exercise of patience.

In closing this chapter, I should say what must be plain to all, that I have not attempted to give an exhaustive relation of the aboriginal occupancy of Cattaraugus county, but have endeavored to present only a cursory glance at this people, who are remarkable for many things, and of whom it may be said that one of the most remarkable is the mystery of their origin. One thing we know, and there can be no difference of opinion about it, and that is, the Indian is a human being, created of God with susceptibilities, with capacity for improvement, and these are good and sufficient reasons why the stronger race, —stronger because more self-asserting—should throw no obstacles in the pathway of a better civilization for the red brothers, but rather promote positive progress, by demanding for the Indian the rights and privileges which we insist on for ourselves.

CHAPTER V.

THE ALLEGANY RESERVATION.* THE MISSION OF THE FRIENDS.

THE Allegany reservation is in the county of Cattaraugus and lies along the Allegheny river for a distance of about thirty-five miles, the eastern terminus being near Vandalia, and the western at the boundary line between New York and Pennsylvania. It varies in width from one to two and a half miles, the reservation lines being run so as to take in, so far as practicable, all the bottom lands along the river. There are 30,469 acres in this reservation, and according to the census taken in January, 1892, there are residing within its borders nine hundred Senecas, and seventy Onondagas. It is estimated that there are eleven thousand acres of tillable land, but not more than one-half of this is cultivated or in pasturage by the Indians. Considerable portions of it are covered with brush or second growth timber, the first growth having been cut off and sold. All valuable timber has been thus disposed of.

The people on this reservation are not as a rule engaged extensively in agriculture. There are only a few farms of any considerable size, but there are quite a number of small farms with comfortable buildings. The people have but recently begun to develop their lands, having for many years supplied their actual necessities by selling timber, bark and ties. They have been making fair progress in farming for two or three years past, and material improvements can be seen in many quarters.

The Allegany reservation is traversed by several important railroads. The Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad follows the south boundary of the same the entire length of the reservation. The New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio railroad runs along the north boundary for some twelve miles westward from Salamanca. The New York, Lake Erie & Western railroad runs along the north boundary eastward from Salamanca to the eastern boundary of the reservation, a distance of about thirteen miles. The Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad runs eastward from Salamanca along the north boundary to Carrolton, a distance of about six miles; it then crosses the reservation to the south, running to Bradford, Pa., and the coal fields of McKean and Crawford counties in that State. The New York, Lake Erie & Western railroad also has a branch running southward from Carrolton into the same regions.

When these railroads were built through the reservation, several stations were established, and around these stations towns grew up of greater or less importance. The lands were leased from individual Indians, but the leases had no legal value, and a good deal of trouble grew out of that condition of affairs. In 1875, February 19th, Congress passed an act legalizing the leases for a period of five years and providing for a renewal of the leases at recurring intervals of twelve years, beginning in 1880. Under this act of Congress, a commission was appointed by the president to establish the boundaries of the several villages provided for in the act. This commission laid out and established villages at Vandalia, Carrolton, Great Valley, Salamanca, West Salamanca and Red House. The acres in the several villages are approximately as follows: Vandalia, two hundred and forty acres; Carrolton, twenty-two hundred acres; Great Valley, two hundred and sixty acres; Salamanca, two thousand acres; West Salamanca, seven hundred and fifty acres; Red House fifteen acres. In 1890, the act of 1875 was so amended as to give authority for renewing the leases when they should expire in February, 1892, for a period not exceeding ninety-nine years.

When the Seneca nation council met in February, 1892, they declined to grant leases for so long a period, but after repeated conferences with committees representing the white leases, it was decided to make the leases for that time, which was done. The aggregate amount of rentals under the new arrangement has not been ascertained, but it is estimated that it will reach $8,000 or $10,000, and perhaps more. These are paid to the treasurer of the Seneca nation, and the funds coming into the national treasury are disbursed upon orders issued by the president and clerk, authorized by vote of the council. Some dissatisfaction is expressed by members of the Seneca nation that none of the funds coming into the national treasury from these rentals and other sources, are distributed among the families of the nation. It is alleged that the council is extravagant in its expenditures, and that a proper accounting is not made by the officers having the funds in charge. It is probable that the foundation for these allegations is largely attributable to loose ways of doing business, and a failure to collect all the rents due the nation. A new set of books, with improved forms, has been recently procured, and it is hoped that a better showing may be made in the future.

None of the villages established under the act of February 19, 1875, have attained any considerable size, except Salamanca. This being an important railroad center, there has grown up a city of about five thousand inhabitants, with all the adjuncts of a small business town. It has many fine brick business blocks, a $35,000 brick school house, city water works, sewers, etc. An electric light plant is being put in, and is expected to be in operation in November of this year. Vandalia is a mere hamlet, but is the shipping point for considerable quantities of lumber, bark, etc. Carrolton has a population of three or four hundred. There are two or three hotels, several places of trade, a kindling wood factory, saw-mill, etc.

At Great Valley, the village proper is off the reservation, and there are within the limits of the village established under the act of 1875, only a small population, a saw-mill and planing-mill, and a few more industries. West Salamanca has a population of about four hundred. It has the usual complement of hotels and stores, and there is located here the Salamanca stock yards, one of the feeding points for live stock shipments from the west.

At Red House there is simply a station on the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio Railroad, and a hotel. When the Western New York & Pennsylvania was built on the south side of the river, the business of the place was mainly transferred to the station of that road, and a small village has grown up at that point. There are two or three hotels there, two or three stores, a blacksmith shop, etc. There are perhaps one hundred white people living in the hamlet. They are on the reservation without authority of law, but have leases from individual Indians. A bill was introduced by Congressman Hooker in the winter of 1891-92 to extend the boundaries of the village established under the act of 1875, so as to take in this village, but it is strenuously opposed by the Indians, and is not likely to become a law. Much complaint is made of the sale of liquor to Indians by parties at Red House. The attention of the prosecuting officer of Cattaraugus county has been repeatedly called to these complaints, and he has repeatedly promised to put an end to this illegal liquor selling, but up to this time it has not been done. The State law is ample to remove from the reservation all parties outside of the villages authorized by the act of 1875. It is possible that the failure of the Seneca nation council to permit the district attorney to remove the offending parties may account for his non-action.

The descendants of the noted Seneca chief, Cornplanter, occupy a small reservation in Warren county, Pennsylvania, just over the State line. It lies on both sides of the Allegheny river, and is about two miles long and half a mile wide, and includes two small islands. There is nominally seven hundred and fifty acres in this reservation, but this includes the river bed and some worthless shoals. The reservation was donated to Chief Cornplanter by the State of Pennsylvania, March 16, 1796, for his valuable services to the white people. Cornplanter's descendants own the reservation in fee, and it is divided in severalty among them. The Cornplanter Indians are Senecas, and are enrolled on the Alleghany reservation census, and vote on that reservation. There are ninety-eight Indians on this Cornplanter reservation.

The Senecas own a small reservation located on the eastern boundary of Cattaraugus county, partly in this county and partly in Alleghany county, known as the Oil Spring reservation. It has six hundred and forty acres, and the title is in the Seneca nation, unincumbered by any preëmption right. The land is leased to whites.

On the Alleghany reservation there is a Presbyterian church at Jimerson-town, three miles west of Salamanca, with a membership of seventy-three persons. Rev. M. F. Trippe is the missionary in charge, but is unable to preach at this point only one Sunday in four. Rev. Wm. Hull, of West Salamanca, who has been a missionary among the Indians more than fifty years, fills the pulpit the remaining Sundays. A Presbyterian church edifice is in construction at Old Town under the supervision of Mr. Trippe, which will be ready for dedication in a few weeks. The church organization at this point has forty-six members. The Baptists have a missionary station at Red House, with a church organization containing twenty members. Rev. Harvey Blinkey, a native preacher, has the spiritual oversight of this little band of worshippers.

On the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations there are sixteen Indian schools supported by the State of New York. The number of children of school age is seven hundred. Of that number four hundred and fifty attended school some portion of the year, with an average daily attendance of two hundred and ten. The schools were taught the past year by sixteen teachers. The total expense for maintaining these schools was $5,096.56.

The first settlement in the county by white people was made in May, 1798, under the auspices of the Society of Friends, of Philadelphia. Their mission was one of benevolence and good-will. They banished themselves from civilized society, from friends and from home, to take up a life among the "untutored," with the only hope that they might make the life of the Indian like that of the white man. They were heartily welcomed by the eminent chief, Cornplanter, who resided a few miles further down the Allegheny on his own reservation, and by the other Seneca chiefs, who gave them lands to work at Genesinguhta, now known as Old Town, a deserted Indian village, from which most of the inhabitants had removed to Cornplanter's reservation. Here they found about one hundred and fifty acres of bottom lands had been partly cleared, and having negotiated with an Indian woman for her dwelling, they began their self-imposed duties of instructing the Indians in agriculture, in the mechanical arts, in clearing and fencing their fields, and in the enjoyment of civilized life. The Friends continued at this location, improved the farm, erected buildings, and taught the natives, until 1803. They then thought it best for themselves and the Indians, whom they desired to benefit, to own in fee simple a home of their own. Accordingly they purchased six hundred ninety-two acres on Tunesassa creek of the Holland Land Company, who had put their large tract on the market about that time, and removed to it. Without any remuneration, they left for the use of the Indians one set of blacksmith tools, agricultural implements and all their improvements. In 1805 the Friends had completed both a grist-mill and a saw-mill at their new location, where the grinding and sawing was done for the Indians without toll or fees of any kind. The Friends have also sent to this mission from time to time disinterested, self-denying, Christian women, who resided there for the purpose of promoting the welfare of the Seneca nation, by instructing them in the useful arts of civilized life. They taught them to spin, and a few of them learned to weave. They also instructed them in cleanliness and good housekeeping. The Friends also made an early effort to assist the Indian youth in school education, but owing to the opposition of the pagan portion of the Indians, this enterprise met with little success, although Joseph Elkinton labored persistently for sixteen years to keep a school for their benefit; sometimes with little opposition, and sometimes so violent that he was threatened with personal injury if he did not desist. Since they adopted their present system of taking the Indian youth into the family, the mission school has been fairly successful, as may be seen in the accompanying article contributed by James Henderson, the present superintendent of the mission. All the long years since May, 1798, the policy of the Friends, a course of disinterested friendship and open-handed benevolence, has never changed. Although they may not have accomplished all they desired, they may congratulate themselves and the Indians too, on the improved condition of the "Red Man."

Superintendent Henderson contributes the following interesting account: The first settlement of Friends on the Allegany reservation was made near the Indian village called Genesinguhtha, now known as Old Town, on the west bank of the Allegheny river, about five miles above the state line, in the latter part of May, 1798.

Three young men, Joel Swayne, Halliday Jackson and Henry Simmons, the two former from Chester county, Pennsylvania, and the latter from Bucks county, Pennsylvania, assisted by John Pierce and Joshua Sharpless, also from the neighborhood of Philadelphia, selected the site and made preparations for a home. In a few weeks John Pierce and Joshua Sharpless returned home. The latter kept an account of this journey, which has been printed, in which he remarks upon taking leave of Cornplanter and other Indians at Buffalo, on the 16th of June: "We now took an affectionate farewell of the chief and of the Indians present, who parted with us with much respect, and I can truly say, the longer I have been among that people, the more near and united they have felt to me, and now on parting they feel like brethren with whom I have been intimately acquainted, and for whose welfare I feel ardent wishes."

Henry Simmons returned home in 1799, and in that year Jacob Taylor and Jonathan Thomas, who had lived three years with the Oneida Indians, near Stockbridge, New York, went to the Allegany reservation. Halliday Jackson returned home in 1800. John Pennock, also from Chester county, Pennsylvania, spent a few months there in 1802, returning again in 1804. At this settlement the efforts of the Friends had been mainly confined to instructing them in agriculture, and in a more sober, industrious and comfortable way of living, and the use of mechanics' tools.

In 1803, the committee of Friends in Philadelphia who were engaged in carrying out the concern of the yearly meeting in the welfare of the Indians, believing that advantages would result from removing their settlement to land of their own, adjoining the reservation, after consulting with the Indians and obtaining their approbation, concluded upon a suitable location, a few miles further up the river. After some examination, the four Friends who had been appointed on this business, viz: Isaac Coates, Isaac Bonsall, Thomas Stewardson and John Shoemaker, Jr., as stated in their report, upon returning to Philadelphia: "On viewing a creek called Tunesassa, which falls into the Allegheny river on the east side about two miles above Genesinghta, found sufficient water to work a saw-mill, and a convenient situation to build one, about half a mile from the Indian reservation, and navigable for canoes to and from the river at many seasons. The creek is bounded on the south by a mountain which it winds round the end of. On it are some fine white pine trees, near where the dam is proposed to be erected; it will require a dam fifty yards long and about twelve feet high to obtain a fall of ten feet. On the north side of the creek is a body of good farming land, the bottoms abounding with white pine and other timber, among which are some sugar maples; there is a low ridge on which there are many white oaks. Although the land is not generally of the first quality, and to secure the water of the creek we must include a part of the mountain, yet we believe a very good farm may be made there, and the situation for our purpose is superior to any we met with, therefore we fixed on this place."

The tract contained, according to the deed, about six hundred and ninety-two acres. Joel Swayne and Jonathan Thomas removed to it from Old Town in the early part of 1804, and shortly afterwards took steps to erect a saw and grist-mill on the property, which were in operation early in 1805. Jonathan Thomas returned from Tunesassa during the year 1805, after having been among the Indians for several years.

The following Friends have resided at Tunesassa for a longer or shorter period, having the principal charge of the concern. A number of other Friends have also been at the institution as teachers and care takers of the children, and helpers in the family during the past eighty years.

Benjamin Cope and wife, Rachel Cope, went to the institution in May, 1805; Jonathan Thomas, May 14, 1809; Jonathan Thomas and wife, Ann Thomas, September 12, 1816; Robert Clendenon and wife, Elizabeth Clendenon, May 30, 1812; Joseph Elkinton, September 12, 1816; Joseph Walton, and wife, Abigail Walton, May 10, 1825; Robert Scotton,* May 8, 1822; Joseph Battey and wife, Rebecca Battey, October 26, 1836; Ebenezer Worth,* May 1, 1843; Solomon Lukens and wife, Susan Lukens, in October, 1849; John Wood and wife, Susannah L. Wood, November 23, 1852; Samuel Whitson and wife, Rachel Whitson, November 6, 1854; Reuben Battin and wife, Eleanor Battin, May 21, 1858; Abel H. Blackburn and wife, Caroline Blackburn, in December, 1859; Abner Woolman* and daughter, Abigail Woolman, April 4, 1860; George W. Mott and wife, Abigail Mott, in May, 1872; Aaron * Returned to the Institute subsequently for a longer or shorter time.

P. Dewees and wife, Eunice Dewees, in October, 1873; George W. Mott and wife, Abigail B. Mott, in September, 1880; Aaron P. Dewees and wife, Eunice Dewees, in September 1882; Aaron Dewees and wife, Miranda G. Dewees, April 1, 1886; James Henderson and wife, Eunice Henderson, and Rebecca W. Bundy, in October 1889.

In 1807 the committee remark: "It is supposed near one hundred new houses have been built within a period of about three years; most of them are well put up of hewn logs; many of them two stories high and covered with shingles; some have panel doors, and a great many have glass windows—and kept much cleaner than formerly. Their farms are enclosed under good fence, from seven to ten rails high; a much greater proportion of corn is planted this year than has been heretofore, and it generally looks well; divers of them have raised wheat, oats, etc., and land is now clearing in many places to sow with wheat this fall. They have a number of horses and a good stock of cattle and swine, so that we believe an evident change for the better has taken place, and may, with satisfaction on returning, note that in the course of our journey we have not seen one Indian the least intoxicated with liquor."

In 1809 the Friends residing at Tunesassa mention that "a very satisfactory progress has been made among the women and girls in learning to spin, several have purchased wheels and commenced spinning at their own houses." In 1811 it is stated: "Out of one hundred and ten women residing on this reservation, upwards of fifty have come forward to learn to spin, twenty-five of whom are capable of making good yarn."

In 1812, Joseph Harlan had a school among them, which was soon dropped, as the chiefs informed the Friends that they could not attend to sending their children. In 1813, the Indians are said to have raised and sold considerable quantities of grain to white people. A school was maintained at this time, though attended regularly by but few children.

In 1815, the committee state: "The residence of our Friends among the natives during the commotion occasioned by the war appears to have been especially useful, as is manifested by the speech of an old chief to the visiting committee in the ninth month last, who expressed the great satisfaction they had that the Friends who lived beside them had remained so steady with them through their difficulties. That although the great guns had roared so loud as to shake the ground whereon they stood, yet they remained quiet, which convinced them that our Friends must be under the protection of the Great Spirit. We feel thankful to them, said he, for staying by us; if they go away we shall be alarmed and fly also."

In October, 1816, Joseph Elkinton opened a school for Indians, which was continued during the winter, fifteen to twenty young men and children generally attending daily. This was continued for some years, but owing to the opposition of those who adhered to their old customs, it was discontinued in 1821. It was reopened in 1822. In 1817 there were seventy families on the Allegany reservation. In 1823 a school was taught by one of the Friends in a house erected by the committee on land belonging to Friends, attended by a daily average of twenty children. A workshop was also erected near the school. In 1831 the property at Tunesassa, including the saw and grist-mill, was rented to Ariel Wellman, Jr., and Lewis P. Thorp and Joseph Elkinton returned to Philadelphia. In 1835 one of the chiefs remarked "that they were two-thirds more comfortable than they were forty-five years ago."

In the autumn of 1835 a heavy rainfall, continuing with but little intermission for three days, caused a great flood in the Allegheny river, by which the flats along it were inundated, and a number of the Indians were compelled to leave their homes and seek an asylum on higher ground. This was considered a greater flood than had occurred for thirty-two years. The loss of crops on the reservation was very great, and it was evident that unless some relief was speedily furnished, many of the Indians and a great part of the cattle must suffer, and perhaps perish from want. Two Friends visited them at this time and inspected their condition. These reported that there were on the reservation and at Cornplanter's, three hundred and thirty-seven adults and three hundred and fifty-three children, and the provisions saved from the flood were estimated at less than one-third of the whole, and that of the corn which was saved, a great part was so damaged as to be unfit for use. In this emergency the committee authorized the purchase of grain, etc., for immediate support and for seed; and eight hundred and ninety-five bushels of corn, forty tons of hay and one hundred and fourteen bushels of potatoes were procured for their use and distributed among them. In June, 1836, another unusual flood occurred, and Friends again assisted in relieving many of the Indians from want.

On the 26th of October, 1836, Joseph Battey and his wife Rebecca arrived at Tunesassa, and with Robert Scotton, during the following winter, made arrangements for erecting a more comfortable house, to take the place of the log house, which had become much dilapidated. In the autumn of 1842 another destructive flood occurred, and Friends again supplied the Indians with potatoes, oats and corn, which there is reason to believe were in some instances the means of preserving both them and their cattle from perishing.

The use of intoxicating drinks by the Indians and the sorrowful effects of it has long been a cause of much anxiety and trouble. The committee remark in 1848 that most of the white people who trespass on the reservation "consider it their interest to encourage the natives in the use of ardent spirits; and regardless of the law which prohibits it, frequently keep the article to sell to them. Influenced by the temptation thus presented to him, and by the example and solicitation of wicked and designing men, the feeble resolutions of the Indian are soon overpowered, and he becomes the victim of this degrading habit."

In 1852 it was concluded to take some children as boarders in the family, and a school-house which had been built some years before, near the river, was moved into the yard adjoining the dwelling and neatly fitted up, and a school was opened in it on the 23d of December, 1852, with fourteen children from the neighborhood and six girls from a greater distance admitted as boarders. The number of day scholars soon increased to thirty-six. It was soon found necessary to enlarge the building, which was done in 1853, and accommodations provided for a larger number of scholars in the family. It was soon found desirable to discontinue the day scholars, and for a number of years past all of the children attending the school have resided in and formed a part of the family.

In 1863 there were fourteen girls and four boys thus receiving instruction; in 1873, twenty-four girls and five boys; in 1885, twenty-five girls and ten boys; in 1889, twenty-five girls and fifteen boys; in 1890, twenty-five girls and twenty boys; in 1870 a new tenant house was built; in 1878 a new barn was erected, twelve acres of land were cleared; in 1882, the school-house having become too small for the increased number of pupils, it was removed and a two-story frame building, capable of seating forty children, erected on its site.

In 1883 the saw and grist-mill, which had become quite dilapidated, was taken down, and some of the timber suitable for the purpose used in making an addition to the barn. In the nine years previous to 1884 seventy-five acres of land were cleared by Aaron P. Dewees, and put under cultivation, thus nearly doubling the area of the farm land, and other valuable improvements were made.

On the night of February 24, 1886, the dwelling-house and school-house adjoining it were destroyed by fire, together with nearly all of their contents, yet all of the inmates escaped unhurt. During the summer of that year a new building was put up at a cost, including the necessary furniture, of about $12,500. This house is seventy-five feet in length from north to south, and fifty feet in width, two stories high with a basement and attic, warmed by a heater in the basement, and was ready for occupancy in the latter part of November, 1886, when the school was again opened with twenty-five girls and ten boys. A one-story frame building was added to the dwelling-house in 1890 for laundry purposes.

The crops during 1891 "included ninety-two bushels of wheat from twelve acres, two hundred and fifty-six bushels of oats from six and one-half acres, about one hundred and fifty bushels of shelled corn, and ninety-two bushels of buckwheat from eight acres, sixty loads of hay from thirty acres, one hundred and ninety bushels of potatoes from two acres, and five hundred bushels turnips and seventy-five bushels carrots from one and one-half acres. The work on the farm as well as the gathering of the crops has chiefly been done by the help of the boys, who in this way, and in the necessary care of the live stock, obtain many useful lessons in farming, and a training in habits of industry; while the girls in the performance of much of the work in the family, acquire valuable instruction in household duties, etc. The total amount of cleared land on the farm is about one hundred and ninety-six acres, of which sixty-five acres may be considered as under cultivation, and the balance of one hundred and thirty-one acres as pasture land, from about fifty acres of which the stumps have not yet been removed. The area of the tract, including the woodland, is about four hundred and sixty-four acres, some two hundred and twenty-five acres having been sold at different times within the last twenty years."

CHAPTER VI.

TOPOGRAPHY OF CATTARAUGUS COUNTY.

[By CHARLES G. LOCKE, Civil Engineer.]

IF IT were possible to produce a truthful and authentic history of the successive geological changes through which this country has passed, and the interesting incidents connected therewith could be fully described, what a volume both of interest and value it would be. No imaginary embellishments by ingenious writers would be necessary to give it a warm welcome in every library. Yet without this complete knowledge of what has transpired in past ages, enough is known at the present day of the structure of the earth, its present physical conditions, its unchangeable law of cause and effect, to arrive at reasonably accurate conclusions as to some facts of its past existence. Although no branch of knowledge is more interesting than that which teaches the physical constitution of the world, no branch has been more neglected. If the reader expects that a scientific treatise on this subject is to follow, he will be doomed to disappointment. It would not only be inconsistent with the nature of this article, but would be another edition of geology, which had much better occupy a separate volume. The intention of the writer is to give a description of the physical characteristics of that part of the great State of New York known as Cattaraugus county, and in doing so he is fully aware that he is a follower and not a leader, as several descriptions have already been given, and were it not owing to the fact that his life thus far has been spent among its hills and valleys, not as one whose business confines him to one locality, but as one who has visited nearly every portion of the county, measuring thousands of its acres, ascertaining and examining many of its physical characteristics either in a professional capacity or out of personal desire to become better acquainted with its past history, he would not undertake so difficult a task.

It is the desire of the writer to give facts as he understands them, and although a follower, as before stated, he must beg leave to differ with his predecessors whenever he feels that justice and duty to the subject demand it, saying, however, in honor to them, that he fully believes their intentions were honest and their endeavors earnest, and if their descriptions were in any way misleading, they made them so only through a misunderstanding or misconception of their subject.

Cattaraugus county, lying in the southwestern part of the great State of New York, presents to one standing on an eminence a succession of hills and valleys. To the careless or thoughtless observer it might seem as if this uneven surface was moulded at creation's dawn, when the mighty upheavals of the eozoic time gradually grew less and the surface was solidified and became as it now exists. The student of science after a careful examination finds that this county is rich in all that goes to prove its past life. He finds its present topography dates only back to the post-tertiary period, and that its present outline was entirely formed during that period, which is the latest in geological time. The different epochs may be traced by a careful examination of the contents of the sand pumps of the many oil wells which are being and have been drilled in the southern part of the county. In 1888 a well was drilled in the town of Little Valley, near what is locally known as Little Rock City, to a depth of twenty-seven hundred feet. At twenty-four hundred feet the drill encountered what had every appearance, as its fragments were drawn to the surface, of the well-known Trenton limestone, being gray in the upper beds and black in the lower. At different depths were found valuable specimens of brachiopods (spirifer arcnosus) and one fossil which appeared to be the lingula antiqua. It is needless to say these specimens are carefully preserved. This county is similar in topography to others known as the southern tier, and lying next to the State of Pennsylvania. Nearly the entire surface of the county lies upon the upper members of the New York system of sedimentary rock and generally all the series above the Hamilton group and limestone series. It is really a vast system of watersheds, whose drainage is at different angles with the main streams.

The Allegheny river is the largest of the main streams which flow through the county and drains the most territory. It enters the county from Pennsylvania, crossing the south line at a point two miles west from the southeast corner and flows north and west to its extreme northern point, which is at the junction of Bucktooth creek. Here it takes a southwesterly course and leaves the county at a point five miles east from its southwest corner. The valley of the river is mostly occupied by the Allegany Indian reservation. The hills bordering this valley are generally high and abrupt, and it is a singular fact that the valleys of the tributaries of this river present the same feature of being bounded by hills almost as precipitous as those along the river itself, only that nearer the head waters of these tributaries the mountainous aspect becomes modified. This is especially noticeable in case of the Ischua creek, where in the town of Machias the hillsides bounding the valley are no more than gentle slopes. The country lying along Great Valley creek retains a remarkable similarity in appearance to the river valley for a distance of more than seventeen miles from its junction with the river, and that of the Little Valley creek for about nine miles. The next stream in order of size is the Cattaraugus creek, which rises in Wyoming county, and as it flows westerly after entering this county it forms the natural boundary between this and Erie county. The larger tributaries of this stream pass through valleys whose environing hills, although somewhat irregular and broken, are by no means so high and abrupt as those bordering the Allegheny and its tributaries, if we except that portion of the affluent called the south branch, which passes through what is known as Skinner Hollow and on to the main stream.

In respect to Cattaraugus creek a very interesting chapter might be written, but space forbids. The pencil of the artist could best portray its various windings through its narrow valley, its boundary sharply defined by perpendicular cliffs, whose walls were so well constructed by the artisan of nature. Some portions of its course along the northern border of the county are marked by alluvial flats, but these are exceptions. By far the larger portion of the distance traversed by the creek is noted for strikingly wild and picturesque scenery, more especially that portion bordering the creek between the towns of Otto in Cattaraugus and Collins in Erie county, where for several miles it flows through a gorge whose sides are from one hundred and fifty to three hundred feet in height and in places the edge at the top overhangs the sides at the bottom.

The next stream we will notice is the Conewango creek, which term "Conewango" signifies in Indian phraseology, "walking slowly." Where is the white man who could have given a name more appropriate, and where is the stream that walks more slowly for a distance of thirty miles? A part of this stream takes its rise in Chautauqua county and is augmented by tributaries flowing northerly from the interior of this county into Chautauqua, where after winding about in nearly every direction the stream again enters Cattaraugus county, and after flowing in a remarkably serpentine course for about twenty-six miles it leaves the county at a point only five miles south from where it enters. There can be no doubt that the valley of this stream was once the bed of an ancient lake and even at the present time the annual overflow of this stream gives to the valley a very lake-like appearance, as thousands of acres are submerged for a time.

The valleys in the southern part of the county extend in a northerly and southerly direction, while those in the northern part are not confined to any particular compass points, being east and west as well as north and south, yet the final drainage is northerly in the northern part of the county. Extending across the county in an easterly and westerly direction is what is called the dividing ridge, which commences in Allegany county and extends westerly far into Chautauqua. This high table-land, lying in places at two thousand feet above the sea, forms the divide between the waters flowing into the Cattaraugus creek on the north and into the Allegheny on the south. This ridge is not a clearly defined continuous extension, but is broken by numerous valleys through which flow spring brooks and small creeks, and many whose waters flow northerly take their rise at points far to the south of others whose waters flow south from extreme northern points. There are locations along this divide where an ordinary sized dwelling might be built with the usual double roof, whose northern and southern slopes would shed the rain in such a manner that the water falling from one side would reach the sea at a point more than four thousand miles distant from the place where the water which fell from the other side would reach it. This table-land was originally covered with a heavy growth of deciduous trees intermixed with hemlock and some pine, and this same description of the original forest would apply to the entire northern portion of the county, excepting that the pine was generally found along the low-lands. The southern part of the county was covered with forests of the choicest pine and hemlock, with a mixture of deciduous trees. Here we find the home of the white and red oak and chestnut, which apparently did not like to cross the dividing ridge, as very little of this timber is found in the northern part of the county.

The soil is generally a loam and varies greatly in depth and strength in different localities. The hills in the northern part of the county are covered with a much darker colored soil than those in the southern part, and perhaps for certain cereals the dark soil might be better and more lasting; yet there are no better grazing lands in the county than some of the hills lying south of the dividing ridge. The soil in the valleys is mostly a gravelly loam, and with proper care is highly productive, and everywhere in the county the land sloping toward the north and east is stronger and better for either grass or tillage than that facing the south and west, owing to the fact that the prevailing wind is from west to east and southwest to northeast, carrying leaves and fine particles of earth from the western slopes to the eastern and northern, thus creating a deeper soil. In winter the snows are blown from the western slopes and lodged on the eastern, thus protecting vegetation with its mantle of warmth, yet much good land may be found toward the south and west.

One important physical feature of this county seems to have been ignored by the early settlers, and that was its elevation above the ocean. Perhaps it was not well understood by them. Their methods of farming would lead us to believe that they were ignorant of the fact, as they attempted to pursue the same system that was pursued in counties lying in the eastern and central portions of the State and more than one thousand feet lower in altitude. After vainly trying to make this a winter wheat country, many moved away, still clinging to the notion that the trouble was wholly in the soil. Those who remained soon learned that this was a grass country, and adopted a course of farming such as nature had so plainly pointed out.

The average height of the hills is about two thousand feet above tide, and some of the highest points, strange to say, are not on the dividing ridge, but south of it. The highest land the writer has ever found in the county is in the town of Napoli, on a sub-division of that town known as lot four. The view from this point is fine beyond description, and will repay any one the work of climbing to the summit. The view is best looking north, west and east, as the southern view is somewhat obstructed by a near-by forest. From observations taken with a transit telescope brought to a level, there was no land in sight but what fell below the range of level, and a sight was taken so far that the distant highlands of Canada could be faintly discerned across the blue expanse of Lake Erie at a point a short distance west of Buffalo. This point must be fully twenty-six hundred feet above tide, according to deductions made from the levels taken by the Erie railway survey, as much more reliability can be placed on this method than by barometric observations. There are hills in Great Valley of nearly as great an altitude, and in the northeastern part of Mansfield. The lowest point in the county is at the northwest corner of the town of Persia, where the Cattaraugus creek, flowing northerly into Erie county, ceases to become the northern boundary of Cattaraugus county. This point is about seven hundred and forty feet above the sea, and in spring foliage and vegetation are two weeks in advance of that on the high lands in the interior.

As to whether a country possessing such features as above described would be preferable for the home of the tiller of the soil to the prairies of the far west, taking into account the extra expense of removing the forest and fitting the soil for the production of food supply, must be answered by those in occupancy, and even they are divided on this question. Many in possession of good farms here bewail their mistake that they tarried here when the treeless prairies with greater inducements invited them there and gave promise of greater rewards for less labor; but that is not a question which should take much time for discussion in an article like this. Owing to the fact that there are now thousands of homes built up in places where a few years ago stood the forest trees, and these homes are filled with an intelligent people who have by their energy and thrift built institutions of learning all over this land, it seems that already proof enough is before us to satisfy each and all that a country lying high above the sea and back from the seaports and lakeports of the mother State possesses certain powers, when properly developed, to make its people prosperous and happy by means created within its own borders and by its own people.

CHAPTER VII.

GEOLOGY. ROCK FORMATION. PETROLEUM.

AMONG men of science it has become the common if not the prevailing opinion, that in the beginning all the elements with which we meet were in an ethereal or gaseous state; that they were slowly condensed, existing for ages as a heated fluid, by degrees becoming more consistent; that the whole earth was once a dense ball of fiery matter; that in the course of time it was rendered very compact, and at last became crusted over as the process of cooling gradually advanced, and that the interior is still in a molten condition. Thus, if the view suggested be correct, the entire planet in its earlier phases, as well as the larger part now beneath and within its solid crust, was a mass of molten fire, and is known to geologists as elementary or molten. Following this came another age, in which the molten mass began to cool, and a crust to form, called the igneous period. Contemporaneous with the beginning of the igneous period came another epoch. The crust thus formed would naturally become surrounded with an atmosphere heavily charged with minerals in a gaseous or vaporous condition. As the cooling advanced the etheralized matter would condense and seek a lower level, thus coating the earth with another rock. This is named the vaporous period. At last, however, another age was ushered in, one altogether different from those that had preceded it. The moist vapor which must of necessity have pervaded the atmosphere began to condense and settle, gathering into the hollows and crevices of the rocks, until nearly the whole surface of the earth was covered with water. This is called the aqueous period. As these waters began to recede, and the land began to appear, the long winter that intervened, while the sun was obscured by heavy clouds, would cover the earth with mighty ice-floes and glaciers, forming a drift or glacial period.

A great difference also exists in the consolidation and structure of the rocks thus formed. The very newest consists of unconsolidated gravel, sand and clay, forming alluvium. A little farther down we come to the tertiary strata, where are some hardened rocks and others more or less soft. Next below the tertiary is found thick deposits, mostly consolidated, but showing a mechanical structure along with the crystalline arrangements of the ingredients. These are called secondary and transition. Lowest of all are found rocks having a decided crystalline structure, looking as if the different minerals of which they are composed crowded hard upon one another. These rocks are called metamorphic, hypozoic, and azoic.

J. E. Hazard, of Randolph, kindly furnishes the following from the pen of Prof. Hall of Albany, New York State Geologist: "The rocks of Cattaraugus county are mostly of Chemung age (Upper Devonian). This formation constitutes the rocks of the lower portion everywhere in the county. In the southern townships, west of the Allegheny river, the highest hills are capped by the rocks of the sub-carboniferous age. East of the Allegheny river the greater elevation of the hills takes in the base of the coal measures. This base of the coal measures is the "Olean conglomerate" (zeral conglomerate) millstone grit, the true base of the productive coal measures, below which it is useless to look for coal. It is not probable that any coal measures are to be found above it, as no hills rise much higher. Everywhere in the county, so far as I know, all of the rocks have a nearly south dip of thirty to forty feet in a mile, and are conformable. There are no elevations high enough west of the Allegheny river to catch the Olean conglomerate, but east of the river the higher elevations of the hills reach up to and a short distance above it, but not enough to catch the productive coal measures' shales. North of the river, the northern rise of the rocks carries the entire coal measures above the highest hill-tops; and they are capped by rocks of the sub-carboniferous age. Below this the Chemung age constitutes the entire rock system. Nowhere in the county, so far as I have examined, do the rocks show any disturbance or tilting. All of the hills and valleys are made by erosion of the streams which have swept the missing materials down the main drainage streams. The rocks of Randolph and South Valley townships are almost exclusively of Chemung age; only a few of the highest hills are capped by the sub-carboniferous age. The rocks are sand-stones, conglomerates, flags and shales with some red bands. The red rock mined by the Elko Mining Company is one of these red bands, but its composition here is somewhat different from what I have observed in some other localities, where it is of coarser texture and more sandy and consequently unfit for paint."

Kerosene oil, produced by the process of distilling petroleum, has constantly decreased in cost, and is now the illuminator of the people of nearly the whole earth. "It blazes in Polynesia and Cathay; in Burmah, Siam and Java the bronzed denizens toil and dream, smoke opium and swallow hasheesh, woo and win, love and hate, sicken and die under the rays of this wonderful product of our faithful caverns."

This wonderful illuminator has been stored away in nature's great magazine, the bowels of the earth, until the progress in our civilization required it. The Indians of the Seneca nation discovered its existence on Oil Spring reservation before they ceded the territory of western New York to Robert Morris. This reservation is one mile square and lies on the line dividing Cattaraugus and Allegany counties, and near the village of Cuba. On this reservation is their famous oil spring, which they long prized for its medicinal qualities. The Indians gathered the petroleum by spreading a blanket over the surface of the spring until it became saturated with the oil, and then wrung it out and sold it as an efficacious medicine, which they properly named "Seneca Oil."

Petroleum exists in several localities in Cattaraugus county. The valley of Tunaengwant creek, in the town of Carrolton, lies on the northern border of the "Bradford oil belt." In 1864 Dr. James Nichols, Henry Renner and James Smith leased one thousand acres of land in the vicinity of Limestone and sank a well on the Baillett farm. They reached oil at a depth of five hundred and seventy feet, but not in paying quantities, probably because they did not bore deep enough. It only developed the fact that oil did exist, and, strange to say, the project was abandoned. In the fall of 1865 a well was sunk by the Hall Farm Petroleum Company, three-fourths of a mile west of the village before mentioned. This well, ten hundred and sixty feet deep, yielded oil part of one day at the estimated rate of two hundred barrels per day, but was ruined by accident before its capacity was fully known. The property of this company was purchased by Job Moses, a capitalist from New York, the leading stockholder in the company, who purchased nine thousand acres in addition to the Hall tract of twelve hundred, and leased one thousand acres besides. He bored other wells, but his operations were unsuccessful financially.

The successes of oil producers farther south impressed the people that these wells were north of the oil belt. In 1875 an oil company began operations on the farm of Hiram Beardsley, on the west side of the creek, and near the State line, and another on the farm of William Beardsley, also near the State line. These wells when completed proved to be remunerative. New companies, or combinations, were formed by the impulse given by this success, and in a few months a forest of derricks covered the upper part of the valley in Carrolton. In the fall of 1878 there had been two hundred and fifty wells bored in the town. The Eureka and the Irvine Farm Companies, each producing one hundred and fifty barrels per day, were the most prolific. These have gradually diminished in production to but a few barrels. Many of these wells are pumped daily, although the average yield probably does not exceed three or four barrels each. In the town of Allegany, a large number of producing oil wells have been drilled, which aggregated about twelve hundred barrels daily. The production is now pretty well exhausted. Wells have been drilled at Rock City, and on Whig street in Little Valley, where gas and a show of oil was found. Oil has also been found on Cattaraugus creek, at or near the little hamlet of Zoar. Several wells there produce large quantities of gas. Wells bored near Salamanca have produced gas only.

CHAPTER VIII.

ORGANIZATION OF THE COUNTY, AND CHANGES IN CIVIL JURISDICTION.

CATTARAUGUS county is situated in the southern tier of counties of the State of New York and with the exception of Chautauqua, is the most southwestern county of the State. It is bounded on the north by Erie and Wyoming counties, on the east by Allegany county, on the south by the State of Pennsylvania, and on the west by Chautauqua county. It contains an area of thirteen hundred and thirty-four square miles, and is two hundred and sixty miles from the State capital in nearly a western direction.

Cattaraugus county was formed by an act of the Legislature of the State of New York, March 11, 1808, from territory taken from Genesee county, and existed on paper only until 1817. The territory of the county, by the act of its formation, was provisionally annexed to Niagara county, and was to remain a part of said county until there were within the borders of Cattaraugus county five hundred taxable inhabitants, qualified to vote for member of Assembly, and that thereafter the said territory should be organized as a separate county.

For judicial purposes, and the convenience of such of the inhabitants in the eastern part of the new county as were obliged to "tend court," the eastern half of Cattaraugus county was annexed to Allegany county, by an act of the Legislature passed June 12, 1812. We quote the following portion of this act: "All of that portion of the said county of Cattaraugus lying and situated east of the east boundary line of the seventh range of townships of the Holland Company's lands in the said county of Cattaraugus, shall be annexed to, and is hereby considered as a part of, the county of Allegany, for all purposes whatsoever."

The act of the Legislature dated March 11, 1808, forming this county, also erected its entire territory into a town which was named Olean. June 16, 1812, the Legislature confirmed the resolution of the voters of the town, passed at a special town meeting held for the purpose on May 16, preceding, dividing the town on a line between the third and fourth townships and creating the town of Ischua, which comprised that part on the north side of said line, Olean to remain and embrace the part south of the line.

April 13, 1814, the Legislature formed the town of Perry from the west part of the towns of Olean and Ischua, on the line between the sixth and seventh ranges of townships.*

The county having acquired its requisite number of taxable inhabitants,

* This is a part of the provisions of the same act that annexed the eastern half of the county to Allegany.

(five hundred), qualified to vote for members of the Assembly, the county was duly organized by "an act organizing the county of Cattaraugus," passed March 26, 1817, which declared "That the freeholders and the inhabitants of Cattaraugus county shall have and enjoy the rights, powers and privileges which the freeholders and inhabitants of any other county in this State are by law entitled to have and enjoy." Since then Cattaraugus county has remained a separate "body politic."

A commission composed of Jonas Williams, Isaac Sutherland and Asa Ransom was appointed to locate a county seat, and they selected the site of the present village of Ellicottville, which was determined upon as the most eligible, and to mark the spot a large iron-wood post was there erected.

The territory now embraced in the limits of Cattaraugus county prior to its erection into a separate county, like most other uninhabited and new countries, has been subjected to numerous civil and municipal changes. In 1683 the Colonial Assembly of New York erected the twelve original counties: Albany, Cornwall, Dukes, Dutchess, Kings, New York, Orange, Queens, Richmond, Suffolk, Ulster and Westchester. Under the sovereigns, William and Mary, in 1691, these counties were reconstructed and Albany county included "the manor of Rensselaerswyck, Schenectada, and all the villages, neighborhoods and Christian plantations on the east side of the Hudson river from Roeloff Jansen's creek, and on the west side from Sawyer's creek to the outmost end of Saraghtoga." Later acts extended its boundaries so as to include all of New York to its northern and western limits. Tryon county was erected from Albany in 1772, and included all of the province west of the Delaware river, and a line drawn northwardly through Schoharie, and along the eastern boundaries of Montgomery, Fulton and Hamilton, and continuing thence north to the line of Canada. In 1784 the name was changed to Montgomery in honor of the hero of the battle of Quebec.

In 1788 White's Town was formed in the western part of Montgomery county, and was bounded "Easterly by a line running north and south to the north and south bounds of the State, and crossing the Mohawk river at the ford near and on the east side of the house of William Cunningham (in Genesee street, Utica), and which line is the western boundary of the towns of Herkimer, German Flats and Otsego; southerly by the State of Pennsylvania, and west and north by the bounds of the State."

Cattaraugus county's territory underwent another change in 1789, when Ontario county was erected from the western part of Montgomery (and the western part of Whitestown), and contained all of Allegany, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Erie, Genesee, Livingston, Monroe, Niagara, Ontario, Orleans, Steuben, Wyoming, Yates and a part of Schuyler and Wayne.

The town of Northampton in Ontario county was formed of all the territory of the Holland Purchase, the Morris Reserve and the Mill Seat Tract. March 30, 1802, Genesee county was formed from the town of Northampton.

CHAPTER IX.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS AND INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

ADAM HOOPS, January 30, 1803, contracted with the Holland Land Company for about twenty thousand acres of land lying in townships No. 4 of the second and third ranges, No. 1 and No. 2 in the fourth range, No. 1 and No. 2 in the fifth range, and No. 2 in the sixth range. Major Hoops was a bachelor and had served in the Revolutionary war, and was influenced to make the purchase by his nephew, Adam Hoops, Jr., who had been employed as a surveyor by the Holland Land Company. As will be seen at a glance at the map of the county, that part of his purchase in the second range of townships lies in Allegany county, and all that part in Cattaraugus county, except township No. 4 in range three, lies mainly in the valley of the Allegheny river and includes the flourishing village of Olean.

A settlement was commenced in 1804 at Olean Point by David Heuston, who was associated in the land purchase with Major Hoops and Robert Hoops, who was the agent of his brother, Adam Hoops. Mr. Heuston was accidentally killed in 1807, while engaged in getting out timber for spars. In consequence of his early death, Mr. Heuston did not become very much identified with the new settlement. Major Hoops was attracted to the location by reason, as he supposed, that it was situated at the head of steamboat navigation on the Allegheny river, and was an important point in transit from the east to the undeveloped west and southwest, a supposition that was never realized to any extent. It is true that until the completion of the Erie canal emigrants in considerable numbers came to Olean in time of high water to take the easier and cheaper way to Cincinnati, en route to the Western Reserve in Ohio, by working their way as helpers on the numerous lumber rafts that descended the Allegheny, when its banks were filled with the melting snow and heavy spring rains. There were times, the writer is informed, when the population of Olean was temporarily more than doubled by emigrants who had arrived too soon for a "rise" in the river, and on one occasion at least two thousand were there, hoping for water to float them away. Then even the "Old Boat House" kept by mine host, Ebenezer Reed (who had a snug little family of only twenty-four children!), was not long enough to shelter them all. They were distributed around where they could find entertainment, and when every house was filled shanties were built of boards for temporary use. Much hardship and suffering was endured at these times, and pork sold for $50 per barrel and flour brought $25.

In 1807 the Allegheny river was by authority of law made a public highway, and that year Jedediah Strong, Bibbins Follett and Dr. Bradley ran the first raft from Olean Point down the Allegheny to Pittsburg. This successful enterprise induced other lumbermen to try the new waterway and lumbering became for many years the leading business of the people of Cattaraugus county. This industry increased until 300,000,000 feet annually floated upon the face of the Allegheny to Pittsburg. Necessity compelled those engaged in this business to purchase supplies at Pittsburg, which were brought up the river in flat-boats. This laborious process of going against the current was so expensive that the cost of transportation of one hundred pounds of merchandise from Pittsburg to Olean was $1.25, while from Olean down the river to Pittsburg it was done for twelve and one-half cents.

The settlement made under the auspices of Adam Hoops and David Heuston at Olean did not increase rapidly, although their lands were offered for sale on very reasonable terms and at a moderate price, as were the lands of the Holland Land Company. The settlements at first were made within the belt of the pine lands with the exception of the McClure settlement, (the site of the village of Franklinville,) and perhaps because lumbering was the leading business little attention was given to the herculean task of clearing away the heavy forest. The early settlers here as in other new countries were without means, and the offer of remunerative wages in the mills and lumber woods offered quicker pay than could be realized by the slow and laborious process of clearing and then waiting for a crop to grow. Besides, no bright young man thought himself accomplished until he had mastered the intricacies of river navigation of rafts and was known as an expert pilot. Another and serious hindrance to the growth of the pioneer settlement was occasioned by the inability of Mr. Hoops to give titles in fee to his lands, which were encumbered by mortgages to the Holland Land Company. It is related by a preceding historian (Everts) that John King, of the King settlement, urged as a reason why the fertile bottom lands lying in the valley of the Allegheny river were so slowly settled, was the ready facilities that the river afforded for removal and getting away from the country; that when the discouragements incident to a new country overtook them they could step aboard of a flat-boat or raft and glide with the current away from the scene of their hardships, and begin again in some imaginary better country, only to be again disappointed. Those who had energy and courage, and came to stay, and possibly a few who were too poor to remove, had reason to congratulate themselves years later that they stayed and prospered.

In 1814, ten years after the settlement was made, the total population of the county was only 537. In 1820, 4,000; 1830, 16,724; 1840, 28,872; 1850, 38,950; 1860, 43,886; 1870, 43,909; 1880, 53,806; and in 1890, 60,866.

The pioneers who came and cleared up their farms, built school-houses, highways and bridges, had a hard time without a doubt. They were hampered with poverty, had bad roads, or no roads at all, and no markets, nor but little to sell. About the only commodity that sold for money was black salts, manufactured by leaching the ashes from the burned timber and boiling the lye until it became a solid substance. The hunters derived an income for killing wolves, which were an annoyance to the settlers and a terror to domestic animals. A bounty of sixty dollars per head was paid for wolf scalps, and some of the lucky Nimrods of the early days drove a thriving business in hunting them. The forests then abounded in game; bears, deer, and land and water birds were here in profusion. The rivers and brooks were filled with speckled trout and other delicious fish. All of these have disappeared before the march of all-conquering civilization.

As food, clothing and shelter are imperative necessities in civilized life, the first care after the settlements of the several towns of the county was the erection of grist-mills to reduce the farmers' grain to meal, saw-mills to cut lumber, and wool-carding and cloth-dressing mills to furnish clothing. The wool-carding and cloth-dressing establishments took the farmers' wool, prepared it for spinning, then received it from the hands of the busy housewives, after they had woven it into flannel, and fullled, dyed and pressed it into completed "homespun."

It is true, the early settlers had the hardships of pioneer life, but they were not without enjoyment. While they worked hard and lived plain, the demands of society were few. All were poor alike, and no caste existed. They were often called together at "raisings and bees," when the entire neighborhood in a circuit of several miles, including both sexes, was all there. When the ladies of the day assembled at their quiltings they deemed it absolutely necessary to partake of their "toddy" at every roll of the quilt. All went well until after the third rolling, when their tongues were usually swifter than their needles, and they resolved the meeting into a committee of the whole for the good of the neighborhood. On one of these occasions a good old lady was so much interested in the meeting that she unconsciously departed for home with her bonnet hindside before. In those early days spirituous liquors were considered a necessity in every family. It was then used to keep out cold and to keep out heat. It was necessary at raisings, bees, quiltings, parties, weddings, neighborly visits, funerals, sheep washing, butchering, and to entertain the minister when he called to inquire of the spiritual welfare of his parishioners.

If these early pioneers did not find their lands ready cleared, as do the pioneers on the western prairies, the first tree they cut was generally used towards building a snug log house, which they made warm and comfortable. When they had their house completed, they had this advantage of the man on the prairie, that they owed no one for their humble domicile, and besides had made a small clearing. They went slow, but had the satisfaction of seeing the forests disappear year by year, and their cleared land correspondingly increase.

As soon as they had a few acres cleared the fertile virgin soil supplied their wants, and by a generous plan of the Holland Land Company, who gave them more than the current price for their surplus cattle, they were able to gain a clear title to their farms, although it generally required years of toil to support and raise their families and accomplish it.

The navigation of the Allegheny river by rafts down the current, and by flat-boats both up and down, is the only use that has been made of this beautiful waterway as a bearer of burdens; although one small steamer, on one occasion, ascended as far as Olean.

The completion of the Erie canal in 1825, connecting Buffalo with New York, opened to emigrants a new region embraced in the State of Michigan, and in Northern Ohio and Northern Indiana, by way of the canal and Lake Erie, and virtually closed the Allegheny river route for west-bound emigration. This had the effect to shock the sensibilities and to dispel the illusion of all such as had so long considered that the route of the Allegheny river, westward, was superior to all others. The advocates of this river as a valuable waterway next bent their energies to connect it by a canal with the Erie at Rochester. The friends of the measure kept the project before the State Legislature until finally a petition of twenty-five hundred of the inhabitants of the city of New York, and resolutions passed by the American Institute and the common councils of New York and Brooklyn strongly recommending its construction, influenced the Legislature to order a survey of the route in 1834 and the commencement of the Genesee Valley canal in 1836. It was finally completed in 1856. Again the inhabitants of Olean entertained high expectations of soon seeing their little village swell to the size of an imposing inland city. The canal was completed to Olean in 1856. By the efforts and great influence of Hon. Samuel J. Mersereau, late of Portville, the canal was extended to the hamlet of Millgrove, and was there connected with the Allegheny river. The canal was continued until 1878, when it was closed and abandoned by the State. It never realized but a small fraction of what its friends expected of it, and never returned to the State but a small part of what it cost for repairs.

April 24, 1832, the Legislature of the State of New York granted a charter to Samuel Swarthwout, Stephen Whitney and their associates, representing the New York and Erie Railroad Company, to construct a railroad from New York city through the southern tier of counties in this State, passing through Owego, in Tioga county, to Lake Erie. The preliminary surveys were commenced in 1834, and finally fixed the western terminus at Dunkirk. In the spring of 1836 the only portion of the whole line which was located without a possible doubt was between the mouth of the Callicoon and Deposit. This section was then put under contract for construction. Such were the discouraging natural impediments to overcome that nearly all of the remaining line was changed (some of it several times) from the original survey. The company was insolvent in 1842, and obliged to suspend payment, and its affairs went into the hands of assignees. The State, under certain conditions, had by an act passed April 25, 1838, granted the company a loan of $3,000,000. In 1845 the State released its lien upon the road for its three millions on condition that the company would complete the road by May 1, 1851. The company was successful in obtaining the necessary funds, and the road was completed to Dunkirk early in April, 1851, and the directors made their first excursion over the division from Hornellsville to that city April 22. A correspondent of the New York Evening Post, who was one of the party, thus reported the incidents of the journey: "At Cuba the convoy reached the untried and entirely new portion of the road. The distance thence to Dunkirk, on Lake Erie, is seventy-nine miles. As the train passed various sections of the road, the resident and superintending engineers and contractors joined the party. At Olean the rushing waters of the Allegheny met their view, covered with rafts floating on the great Father of Waters, and on its banks gathered in groups the wondering children of the forest. For several miles the road follows its banks through the Indian reservation, and the Indians, whose attention was arrested by the shrill whistle of the locomotive, as it thundered through their hitherto quiet domain, gazed with a sort of melancholy interest. There were no expressions of surprise in their countenances at the rude disturbers of their peace, the precursor of their fate, the exterminator of their race—the genius of mechanism. Throughout the whole valley, called 'Little Valley,' the eye and attention are deeply interested, and the exclamation 'Look! Look!' was constant.

"At Dayton, twenty miles more beyond, we came in view of Lake Erie, lying before us and extending as far as the eye can reach. As the party caught the first glimpse of the lake three hearty cheers broke from the directors, engineers, contractors and the entire company of guests."

The final and triumphant celebration occurred on May 15, 1851. The following notable guests passed over the entire line with the officers of the company and others: Millard Fillmore, president of the United States; Daniel Webster, secretary of state, and all the other members of the president's cabinet; Washington Hunt, governor of New York, and other State officers. The people turned out en masse along the entire length of road and greeted the party on the train with bands of music and the booming of cannon, and made it a day of general rejoicing.

Up to this time Cattaraugus county had no means of reaching the markets of the eastern cities, and what little surplus in agricultural products the farmers produced was nearly consumed by the cost of hauling it to Buffalo with their teams, which required four or five days to make the round trip under favorable circumstances. This railroad has proved to be the main artery of commerce for the county, and has added millions to its valuation, and has infused life, activity and energy into every branch of business.

The New York & Erie railroad was constructed under its charter name, and soon after its completion it was changed to that of the Erie railroad, by which cognomen it was known until it again went into the hands of a receiver and passed to the present proprietors, with the name again changed to New York, Lake Erie & Western railroad; but is more generally known under its old name, "The Erie." This road and the leading thoroughfare of this county enters the county at the northeast corner of the town of Hinsdale and follows down the valleys of Oil and Olean creeks to the village of Olean, thence down the valley of Allegheny river, through the towns of Allegheny, Carrolton and Great Valley to Salamanca. From the village of West Salamanca its line is through the town of Little Valley, across the extreme southwest corner of Mansfield, through New Albion, the south part of Persia, the northeast part of Dayton, where it makes a junction with the Buffalo & Southwestern Division, and leaves the county about mid-way on the west line of the town of Perrysburg.

The successful completion of the Erie railroad seemed to inspire the people of the western part of this county and the inhabitants of Chautauqua county with enterprise and a spirit for improvement. A meeting was held in Jamestown on June 27, 1851, to favor the project of constructing a railroad connecting with the Erie at the village of West Salamanca, and passing through Randolph and Jamestown to the city of Erie, Pa. Several meetings were held, which resulted in the organization of a company under the name of the Erie & New York City railroad. Funds were raised by subscription and by bonding the towns along the line. Ground was broken for its construction at Randolph, May 19, 1853. This worthy enterprise dragged along for lack of funds, with the last dollar expended, until 1858, and the road not completed, when Sir Morton Peto, the head of an English company of capitalists, purchased the road and it became a part of the "Atlantic & Great Western Railway," and was completed in 1861. In 1864 its junction with the Erie road was extended from West Salamanca to Salamanca. It is now known by the name of the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio. This railroad is leased by the New York, Lake Erie & Western, and forms a part of the Western Division of that company's grand system, commonly known as the "Nypano" Division of the Erie railroad.

The Buffalo & Pittsburg Railroad Company was organized for the purpose of connecting the city of Buffalo with the coal fields of Pennsylvania. It received its charter and the work of construction was commenced in 1852. Quite an amount of grading was done, but for want of means the project was abandoned. March 14, 1856, the Buffalo & Bradford railroad was chartered. On the 22d of March, 1859, the two railroads above named were consolidated with the name of Buffalo, Bradford & Pittsburg railroad, and were completed from Carrolton to Bradford, Pa., about 1865.

Later this company, through the Erie managers, extended their road to Buttsville, and the Erie continued the line to Johnsonsburgh, where it connects with the Pennsylvania railroad lines. The Buffalo & Pittsburg is leased by the Erie and the whole line from Salamanca to Johnsonsburgh, Pa., is known as the Bradford Division of the New York, Lake Erie & Western.

The Buffalo & Southwestern railroad now forms a part of the Erie system. It was chartered in 1872, as the Buffalo & Jamestown railroad, and completed in July, 1875. The road was sold at auction in September, 1877, on a judgment issued by the Supreme Court, to a committee representing the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company of Buffalo. The committee made one and the only bid, and the road was struck off to the company at its bid of one million dollars. The name was changed to the Buffalo & Southwestern Division of the Erie. The road enters the county at the village of Gowanda, in the town of Persia, crosses the extreme southeast corner of the town of Perrysburg and travels diagonally across the town of Dayton to near the southwest corner, where it passes into Chautauqua county. In its course it again enters Cattaraugus county, in Conewango, and after traversing that town over five miles it again enters Chautauqua county and passes on to Jamestown.

Besides the New York, Lake Erie & Western railroad and its branches, which in Cattaraugus county have a center in Salamanca, another important thoroughfare to this county is the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad, which has its center in the county at Olean. This road was chartered in 1865, and completed about 1874. It connects Buffalo with Emporium, Pa., and connects with the Pennsylvania railroad system, and opens a way to the coal and iron districts and the great hemlock belt. The road was built largely with Buffalo capital, and opens a large portion of productive country to the trade in Buffalo. The coal and lumber tonnage on this road is very large.

The Rochester Division of the Western New York & Pennsylvania leaves the main track at the village of Hinsdale, and is built along the bed of the abandoned Genesee Valley canal, and terminates at Rochester. The Olean and Oil City Division of this road passes from Olean down the valley of the Allegheny river to Oil City.

The Olean, Bradford & Warren, a narrow gauge railroad, was chartered in July, 1877, and completed February 1, 1878. It gains an altitude of one thousand feet in a distance of five miles. This project originated in the mind of Hon. Charles S. Cary, who was its first president. The road is owned by the Western New York & Pennsylvania.

The Rochester & State Line Railroad Company was organized in 1867, and was intended to connect Rochester with Salamanca, passing through the towns of Le Roy, Warsaw, Machias, and Ellicottville. In August, 1872, arrangements were made with the Cattaraugus Railway Company, and the road was completed from Machias to Salamanca, and was re-organized as the Rochester & Pittsburg. It again changed ownership and is now the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad.

The Buffalo Division of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg enters the county at the north line of Ashford, and passes through that town into Ellicottville, where it forms a junction with the Rochester Division at Ashford Junction. The Rochester Division enters the county from Rochester near the northeast corner of Freedom, crosses the track of the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad at Machias Junction and unites with the Buffalo Division at Ashford Junction. From Ashford Junction the company runs regular trains to Punxsutawney, Pa., passing through Ellicottville, Great Valley, Salamanca, Carrolton, Limestone, in this county, and Bradford, Pa., to its terminus. On the return of passenger trains to Ashford Junction, trains are prepared simultaneously and start immediately for their respective destinations, Rochester and Buffalo.

Lackawanna & Pittsburg is the present name of the narrow gauge railroad that extends from Olean to Bolivar. It was chartered under the name of Lackawanna & Southwestern railroad.

CHAPTER X.

CIVIL LISTS. EDUCATIONAL. RELIGION. CARE OF THE POOR.

MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.—Timothy H. Porter, 1825-27; Staley N. Clarke, 1841-43; Asher Tyler, 1843-45; Frederick S. Martin, 1851-53; Dr. Henry Van Aernam, 1865-69 and 1879-81; Nelson I. Norton, 1875-77; William G. Laidlaw, 1890-92.

STATE SENATORS.—The Senate of the State of New York consists of thirty-two members who are elected in November of every alternate odd numbered year, and hold their offices for two years from the first of January next succeeding. The State is divided into thirty-two districts, each electing one senator. The senators receive the annual salary of $1,500 and also one dollar for each ten miles traveled in going to or returning from the place of meeting once in each session. Ten dollars per day in addition is allowed when the Senate alone is convened in extraordinary session, or when acting as a court for the trial of impeachments. The lieutenant-governor is ex-officio president of the Senate, and has the casting vote therein.

Cattaraugus and Chautauqua counties comprise the Thirty-Second District. Those who have represented it from Cattaraugus county are: Timothy H. Porter, one year in 1823, and 1828-31 (then the 8th District); Chauncey J. Fox, (filled vacancy) in 1835, was elected 1836-39 (8th District); Thomas J. Wheeler, 1846-47 (old 6th District); Frederick S. Martin, 1848-49; Robert Owen, 1850-51; Roderick White, 1856 (died in office); John P. Darling, 1857 (filled vacancy), and served in 1858-59; Horace C. Young, 1862-63; Norman M. Allen, 1864-65; Allen D. Scott, 1870-71; Norman M. Allen, 1872-73; Albert G. Dow, 1874-75; Commodore P. Vedder, 1876-77 and 1884-91; James T. Edwards, 1892-93.

MEMBERS OF ASSEMBLY.—The Assembly consists of one hundred and twenty-eight members, who are elected annually by districts. Each county is entitled to at least one member. Their compensation is $1,500 per annum and one dollar for each ten miles traveled in going to and returning from the place of meeting, once in each session. Should they be called upon to serve as managers of an impeachment, like the senators in such service, they are entitled to ten dollars per day additional. The Assembly chooses its officers at the opening of the session.

From the formation of Cattaraugus county until 1822, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua and Niagara counties formed but one Assembly district, and was represented by a single representative until 1815, when the district was allowed two representatives. This continued until Cattaraugus county became a separate Assembly district, with but one assemblyman, until 1836, when under the new apportionment it was entitled to two representatives. In 1892 it was again reduced to but one representative.

In 1814-15 Joseph McClure represented the district composed of the three counties first named. Those named in the list following represented Cattaraugus county after it became a separate Assembly district:

Stephen Crosby, 1823; Phineas Spencer, 1824; Daniel Hodges, 1825; James McGlashen, 1826; John A. Bryan, 1827; James McGlashen, 1828; Flavil Partridge, 1829; Stephen Crosby, 1830; Russell C. Hubbard, 1831; George A. S. Crooker, 1832, 1839-40; Chauncey J. Fox, 1833-34; Albert G. Burke, 1835; David Day, 1836; Tilly Gilbert and Phineas Spencer, 1837; Nelson Green and Timothy H. Porter, 1838; George A. S. Crooker and Hollis Scott, 1839; Timothy H. Porter and G. A. S. Crooker, 1840; Alonzo Hawley and Chester Howe, 1841; Samuel Barrows and Lewis P. Thorp, 1842; Alonzo Hawley and Elijah A. Rice, 1843; James Burt and Marcus H. Johnson, 1844; Roderick White and Seth Field, 1845; Gideon Searle and E. A. Rice, 1846; Rufus Crowley and Joseph E. Weeden, 1847; James G. Johnson and Marcus H. Johnson, 1848; S. R. Crittenden and Horace C. Young, 1849; F. S. Martin and Horace C. Young, 1850; A. A. Gregory and William J. Nelson, 1851; S. S. Cole and Alexander Sheldon, 1852; Daniel Hickox and M. H. Baker, 1853; William H. Wood and James Kirkland, 1854; Alexander Storrs and James Kirkland, 1855; L. D. Cobb and Daniel Bucklin, 1856; Alanson King and Rufus Crowley, 1857; Henry Van Aernam and William Buffington, Jr., 1858; Marsena Baker and William Buffington, Jr., 1859; Ulysses P. Crane and James M. Smith, 1860; Nelson I. Norton and Franklin Philbrick, 1861; Andrew L. Allen and Addison G. Rice, 1862;

Andrew L. Allen and Albert G. Dow, 1863; Smith Parish and Albert G. Dow, 1864; William P. Angel and E. Curtiss Topliff, 1865; William McVey and E. Curtiss Topliff, 1866; Heman G. Button and William E. Hunt, 1867; Jonas K. Button and E. Curtiss Topliff, 1868; William H. Stuart and C. V. B. Barse, 1869; George N. West and Stephen C. Greene, 1870; Stephen C. Greene and Claudius V. B. Barse, 1871; Commodore P. Vedder and Enoch Holdridge, 1872; C. P. Vedder and John Manley, 1874; C. P. Vedder and Samuel Scudder, 1875; Harrison Cheney and Edgar Shannon, 1876; Thomas J. King and Edgar Shannon, 1877; Thomas J. King and Simeon V. Pool, 1878; Wm. F. Wheeler and Simeon V. Pool, 1879; Charles P. Ingersoll and James Prendergast, 1880; Zenas G. Bullock and J. Miller Congdon, 1881; Samuel H. Bradley and J. M. Congdon, 1882; Elisha M. Johnson and Elijah R. Schoonmaker, 1883; Charles S. Cary and Elijah R. Schoonmaker, 1884; Frederick W. Kruse and Eugene A. Nash, 1885 and 1886; Frederick W. Kruse and Erastus S. Ingersoll, 1887 and 1888; Harrison Cheney and James S. Whipple, 1889; Burton B. Lewis and James S. Whipple, 1890; Burton B. Lewis and James S. Whipple, 1891; William E. Wheeler and Solon S. Laing, 1892; William E. Wheeler, only, 1893.

COUNTY JUDGES.—Until the change in the constitution of the State in 1846 the presiding officer of the county courts was styled "First Judge," and officiated by appointment. Since that date the office of county judge has been elective by the voters of the county.

First Judges.—Elijah Miller, appointed March 13, 1817 (did not serve); Timothy H. Porter, March 28, 1817; James Adkins, June 1, 1820; Alson Leavenworth, January 25, 1823; and Benjamin Chamberlain, February 15, 1833.

County Judges, and when elected.—Rensselaer Lamb, June, 1847; Chester Howe, November, 1851; Nelson Cobb, November, 1855; Allen D. Scott, November, 1859, appointed, vice Cobb, removed from the county; William Woodbury, November, 1859; David H. Bolles, November, 1863; Rensselaer Lamb, appointed January, 1866; Samuel S. Spring, November, 1870; William H. Henderson, appointed, vice Spring, deceased; Allen D. Scott, elected to fill vacancy, November, 1875. He was elected for a full term in November, 1876, and succeeded by O. S. Vreeland, the present judge of the county.

DISTRICT ATTORNEYS.—John A. Bryan, 1818; Timothy H. Porter, 1819; Samuel S. Haight, 1822. The dates following are when the officers qualified: Timothy H. Porter, June 16, 1824; John A. Bryan, June 19, 1827; Anson Gibbs, October 13, 1829; James Burt, October 10, 1834; Daniel Reed Wheeler, February 5, 1841; William Pitt Angel, February 7, 1844; William H. Wood, December 23, 1850; Alexander Sheldon, November 29, 1853; William Pitt Angel, January 3, 1857; Samuel S. Spring, elected November, 1859; Merrill T. Jenkins, elected November, 1865; William G. Laidlaw, November, 1871; Frank W. Stevens, November, 1878; George M. Rider, 1884; and James H. Waring, present incumbent.

SURROGATES.—Jeremy Wooster, appointed March 28, 1817, and February 12, 1821; Walter Wood, June 1, 1820; Moses Beecher, April 16, 1830; Robert H. Shankland, February 9, 1838, and 1847. The duties of this office by the amended constitution devolved on the judge of the county at the close of Mr. Shankland's term, until 1857, when the county had a population of more than 40,000, when Allen D. Scott was appointed to the office April 28, 1857, and was elected to the position in November, 1861. His successors are Arunah Ward, elected in November, 1865; William Manley, November, 1869; James D. McVey, November, 1873; Hudson Ansley, October 14, 1879, succeeded by Alfred Spring, January 1, 1880; Charles D. Davie, present incumbent.

SHERIFFS.—The sheriffs for the county were appointed until 1822. Since then the office has been filled by election except in cases of vacancy occurring in unexpired terms. Israel Curtis, appointed March 28, 1817; Benjamin Chamberlain, February 17, 1820, and February 12, 1821, and elected 1825; Jacob Downing, June 1, 1820; Ebenezer Lockwood, 1822; Henry Saxton, 1828; Henry Wooster, appointed, January 19, 1831, in place of Mr. Saxton, resigned; John Hurlburt, appointed in place of Mr. Wooster, deceased; Samuel Barrows, 1831; Abram Searle, 1834-40; Richard Wright, 1837; George W. White, 1843; John Palmer, appointed in place of White, deceased; Alonzo A. Gregory, 1846, 1852 and 1858; Addison Crowley, 1849 and 1855; Benjamin McLean, November, 1861; Richard Welch, November, 1864; William Cooper, Jr., November, 1867; William M. Brown, November, 1870; William W. Henry, November, 1873; George L. Winters, November, 1876; Gilbert L. Mosher, November, 1879; John Little, Jr., November, 1882; Adelbert E. Darrow, November, 1885; M. N. Pratt, November, 1888; William B. Hughes, November, 1891.

COUNTY CLERKS.—The dates given are the time the clerks began the duties of the office. Sands Bouton, May 28, 1817, and January 1, 1823; Ebenezer Lockwood, July 21, 1820; Joseph McClure, March 3, 1821; John W. Staunton, January 2, 1826, January 1, 1829, January 1, 1832, and January 1, 1835; Francis E. Bartlett, January 1, 1838, January 1, 1844, and January 1, 1847; George W. Gillett, January 1, 1841; James G. Johnson, January 1, 1850; Enos H. Southwick, January 1, 1853; Thomas Morris, January 1, 1856; Enos H. Southwick, January 1, 1859; Thomas A. E. Lyman, January 1, 1862; Samuel C. Springer, January 1, 1865; Enos C. Brooks, January 1, 1868; William W. Welch, January 1, 1871; Eugene A. Nash, January 1, 1874; Arthur H. Howe, January 1, 1877; Warren J. Rich, 1880; Charles W. Terry, 1883; Albert T. Fancher, 1886; Henry S. Merrill, 1889, re-elected November, 1891.

COUNTY TREASURERS.—Sylvanus Russell, March 28, 1817, to 1821; Daniel Hodges, 1821; Staley N. Clarke, 1824 to 1841; Marcus H. Johnson, 1841; Truman R. Colman, 1844; Daniel I. Huntley, 1847; Charles P. Washburn, 1848; John P. Darling, 1851; Stephen McCoy, 1854; J. King Skinner, 1857, 1863 and 1866; Dr. Lambert Whitney, 1860; Alonzo Hawley, 1869, and appointed to fill vacancy February 22, 1878; Jarius Strong, 1876; Henry O. Wait, elected in November, 1878, is the present incumbent, has held the position continuously to the present time (1893) and has just entered upon another term of three years.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF SCHOOLS.—By an act of the State Legislature passed April 17, 1843, the office of superintendent was created, and the law then enacted made it the duty of the Boards of Supervisors to make appointments of superintendents of common schools in their respective counties throughout the State. The office was held in the West District of this county by Elijah A. Rice of East Otto and Samuel Ewing of Randolph, and in the East District by Joseph H. Wright of Machias and Edward Taylor. This office was abolished March 13, 1847, and the supervision of the common schools was delegated to town superintendents until the office of school commissioner was formed by act of the Legislature, and the first election was held under its provisions in November, 1859. Those who have filled the office successively in the First District of this county are Duncan R. Campbell, Lyman Packard, Thomas Edgerton, William G. Laidlaw, Frank A. Howell, Newton C. McCoon, Sanford B. McClure, J. H. Challis, G. W. Boyce, and S. N. Wheaton. Second District: S. N. Slosson, Norman M. Allen, George A. Gladden, John Archer, Jerome L. Higbee, Henry M. Seymour, Reuben J. Wallace, Joel J. Crandall, Henry A. Soule, and Clark D. Day.

EDUCATION.—Simultaneous with a neighborhood of half a dozen pioneer families appeared the primary school, taught in some abandoned log cabin, or in the living room of a public spirited family, who for the education of their children would generously open their door for that purpose. When the settlement had increased a school district was formed, and a log school-house was erected by calling together the entire neighborhood, which proceeded to build the structure by placing log upon log until the desired height was reached, and then roof it over with hand-made shingles. The seats and desks were not the modern patent easy luxuries, but slabs from the nearest saw-mill, pierced with holes with a two-inch auger, in which were inserted round wooden legs cut from the adjacent forest. The writing counter was a plain board placed against the wall of logs, at a proper height, with the inner edge inclined from a level towards the pupils. The bench was arranged in front of this counter, and when the youth wished to improve his "hand writing" by plying his gray goose-quill he turned around to his table by swinging his feet over his seat, and was generally started off by his teacher with the admonition to "take pains and write slow." The three R's usually comprised the curriculum, viz.: Reading, 'Riting and 'Rithmetic. These primitive log structures answered the double purpose of a school-house and a place of public worship. They have long since become a thing of the past, and the present well painted and neat school edifice, with the stars and stripes floating over it, is one of the pleasant objects we see at intervals of two or three miles all over Cattaraugus county.

The common school system of the State of New York was first placed under the supervision of a State superintendent in 1812, and Gideon Hawley was appointed to the position. The sum of $50,000 was annually distributed to the counties of the State, and the Boards of Supervisors were required to raise an equal amount. The school system has been amended and improved from time to time, until the doors of our common schools—the people's colleges—have been thrown wide open, and every son and daughter of school age in this State is invited freely to enter and receive a substantial education. The State appropriation of $50,000 in 1812 has increased to the sum of $3,779,393.75 in 1891. Cattaraugus county, on a valuation of $17,613,593, paid into the State treasury for the support of common schools $17,613.59 and received back from the State for the support of schools from the tax paid by the whole State on the basis of one mill on each dollar of valuation, or $51,588.32, and from the Common School Fund the further amount of $3,841.37, or a total of $55,429.69. Besides this amount there was raised by taxation in the districts of the county, for school purposes, the sum of $108,382.24. The territory of the county is divided into 284 school districts, which are under the supervision of two school commissioners, each having jurisdiction over a special commissioner district. Schools are maintained in all of these districts, taught by 421 teachers during the past school year. There are residing in the county 18,894 children between five and twenty-one years of age. The number of school-houses in the county is 297, of which sixteen are fine brick edifices, 280 are framed buildings, and one is a log-house. These with the sites on which they stand are valued at $364,281.

RELIGION.—It appears that the early pioneers of Cattaraugus county, as a whole, had neither the ability nor inclination to do anything towards the support of Christian religion. They claimed that they had quite enough to do in keeping "the wolf of hunger" from their humble cabins by laboring seven days every week. It became a proverb, and was often quoted, that "the Sabbath day did not extend westward beyond the Genesee river." Like other new countries the neighborhoods were so sparsely settled that for years it was impossible to gather the settlers into congregations of any considerable numbers; and when Sunday came, if they did not labor, they made it a holiday.

In looking over this religious dearth several religious associations sent missionaries to preach the Word to them. Among these first to come was Rev. Robert Hubbard, a Presbyterian missionary located at Angelica, who penetrated the wilderness in 1810 as far west as the present town of Lyndon, and held service at the house of Seth Markham. He is described as a considerate, benevolent gentleman, who filled one side of his spacious saddle-bags with crackers and delicacies, which he distributed to the sick whom he found when he made his pilgrimages to the lonely settlers. Rev. John Spencer, a Congregational missionary sent out in 1809 by the Connecticut Missionary Society to the Holland Purchase, found his way to Cattaraugus county in 1813. He was an acceptable missionary who died in Sheridan, Chautauqua county, in 1826, aged sixty-eight years. He was familiarly and affectionately known far and near as "Father Spencer." About 1814 Elder Nathan Peck, a Methodist missionary, held meetings at Yorkshire Corners, where he established (as is believed) the first stated religious service in this county, excepting that of the Mission of the Friends, established at Tunesassa in 1798. The first building devoted exclusively to divine worship was erected in the town of Napoli about the year 1823. It was constructed of logs, and was situated about a mile southwest of the postoffice. In September, 1831, a new frame building was erected by the same society (Presbyterian) in Napoli Center, which was the first framed meeting-house in the county. The first organization of a Protestant Episcopal church was in Ellicottville in 1827. Their earliest rectors were Revs. Reuben H. Freeman and Alexander Frazer. Among the prominent early Baptist clergymen were Elders Beckwith, Eliab Gowing, and Ebenezer Vining. The Freewill Baptists were represented by Elder Judah Babcock in the town of Yorkshire as early as 1817 and by Elder Richard M. Carey in 1820. This denomination held meetings in Perry in 1816 and in Machias in 1818. Rev. Joseph Bartlett was the pioneer preacher of the Christian church in 1815, in the town of Otto. As early as 1835 there was a Universalist clergyman, Rev. J. Todd, stationed in Ellicottville, Rev. C. Morton, of the same sect, in Conewango, and Rev. S. A. Skeele in Farmersville.

The Dutch Reformed church was organized in Farmersville as early as 1835. Rev. O. H. Gregory was then the officiating clergyman. The Roman Catholic church was planted in the county by Bishop Timon about 1845, and as near as now ascertained the first church organization was that of St. Phillip Neri's church in Ellicottville on September 20, 1848.

Sketches of the graded schools and academies, and of the churches, are given separately in the respective towns where they are situated.

THE COUNTY ALMS-HOUSE AND FARM.*—Those who from age, infirmity, or otherwise become unable to support themselves, and are so unfortunate as to be obliged to rely upon public charity for support, are cared for, in conformity with the laws of the State, at the county alms-house. The buildings are ample, airy and comfortable and warmed with steam. The inmates are comfortably clothed and kindly cared for by the present keeper, Claude C. Trumbull, who is ably assisted by his wife. The board is good and wholesome. The inmates are expected to be cleanly and to observe sanitary rules. On the whole they are made welcome, and feel that the house is their home.

The Cattaraugus County Alms-House and Insane Asylum is in the town of Machias, upon the westerly shore of Lime Lake, a clear, beautiful body of water about one and a half miles in length and one-half mile in width, navigable for steam and sail boats, and a great pleasure resort in summer. The county farm proper contains two hundred acres of fine level farming land, bordering upon the lake. The alms-house and insane asylum is located upon a slight elevation near the shore of the lake. The farm was purchased and the site located and established in 1833, and buildings erected and first occupied as an institution for the poor and insane in 1834, all under one management. The first keeper was Mr. Farley, of Conewango, and the first superintendents of the poor, having the construction and management of the building, were E. Harmon, Levi Peet, and Thomas J. Wheeler. The subsequent keepers were Mr. Hill, Howard Peck, Moses Durfee, Nathan Hadley, L. G. Peck, Pardon T. Jewell, J. E. K. Button, William Follett, and Claude C. Trumbull, the present incumbent. The subsequent superintendents of the poor, having the oversight and management of the county farm and poor department, are W. M. Farrar, John A. Kinnicut, Calvin Converse, John Palmer, H. G. Button, Nathan Follett, N. M. Allen, James M. Smith, C. T. Lowden, Jerome B. Jewell, Arunah Ward, Hiram Velsey, David Lang, John H. Groves, Mr. Merrill of Dayton, A. S. Lamper, S. C. Green, Frank Strickland, Fred Truby, and H. J. Trumbull, the present incumbent. The county physicians having had the charge of the medical department of the institution are Drs. Isaac Shaw, J. M. Copp, J. L. Eddy, Thomas J. King, and the present physician, Clarence King.

Since the year 1857, and up to 1885, eight insane persons who had been adjudged lunatics, and sent from this county to the State Lunatic Asylum at Utica, were there treated the two years allowed by the rules of that institution for the recovery of patients, and were declared by the faculty to be incurable, were returned as incurable to the asylum at Machias. And after being properly treated there by the resident physician and humane keepers for a seasonable time, they recovered their reason and were discharged and returned to their homes and friends.

The principal department, a fine stone building, was erected in 1868 at an expense of about $19,000. To this have been added other buildings, forming a complete system of apartments ample for the accommodation of at least one hundred and fifty inmates, including the insane. Attached to the institution is a well arranged steam laundry and bath-room. About the 5th of July, 1892, thirty-nine of the insane inmates were removed by the State authorities to the State Insane Asylum at Buffalo, at an increased expense to Cattaraugus county of at least three dollars per week for each of those thus removed. At the present time there are about ninety inmates supported in the institution.

CHAPTER XI.

THE GREAT LUMBER INDUSTRY.

[By FREDERICK LARKIN, M. D.]

WHEN the white man first began to explore the lands located in Cattaraugus county he was astonished at the vast amount of towering pines and hemlocks that dotted the hills with living green. Along the great tributaries of the Allegheny river the hillsides were resplendent with great monarchs that were ushered into life centuries before Columbus dreamed of a New World. Such a great amount of pine timber had a powerful attraction for persons desirous of engaging in the manufacture of lumber—hence, in the early part of the present century the lumber business commenced, and has been continued for more than eighty years, and has added millions to the wealth and prosperity of Cattaraugus county.

In the early days of the lumber interest there was a great drawback to a successful business in many parts of the county on account of finding a market, but the Allegheny river proved to be a thoroughfare that has floated upon its crystal waters hundreds of millions of the most valuable lumber that America has ever produced.

The first saw-mills located in the county were run by water, and located on streams that pay tribute to the great river. The mills were mostly made to run with a single saw, about six or seven feet long, and were able to cut from three to four thousand feet in twenty-four hours. A great change has taken place since the advent of steam and circular saws. Many of these mills are capable of sawing from one to two hundred thousand feet of lumber a week.

The town of Olean, located as it was on the Allegheny river, was the first section of Cattaraugus county that attracted the lumber interest. Here were magnificent forests of pine, many of which were from three to four feet in diameter, and reaching towards the heavens more than two hundred feet. In 1804 Major Adam Hoops purchased of the Holland Land Company a tract of land comprising twenty thousand acres, on a portion of which the village of Olean is now located. At that time the eastern people, mostly from Connecticut, were settling on and near the banks of the Ohio river. Marietta, the first permanent settlement, was attracting a great number of enterprising emigrants to that new Eldorado. As the land route was over the mountainous part of Pennsylvania, the pilgrims selected the Allegheny river, whose waters would land them in safety upon any of the fertile banks of the Ohio. The place of embarkation was Olean, which was soon alive with a busy throng building rude rafts to float them with speed and safety to their place of destination.

Olean at that time had a wonderful boom, and demanded lumber in considerable quantities to build structures to accommodate the people that were watching the moving of the waters of the river. So great was the rush of people that six hundred could be counted frequently at one time. To supply all these with facilities to float down the stream, there was a great demand for lumber, hence Major Hoops, with every facility within his reach, erected a saw-mill on Olean creek, which at first was designed to supply lumber for building up the village and those that were converting portions of the great wilderness into cultivated farms. At that time Pittsburg, located at the junction of the Monongahela and the Allegheny, had become a prominent and growing town, and as the soil there was not adapted to the growth of pine timber that city called loudly upon the great pine forests located upon either side of the upper Allegheny river. During the months of winter the sound of the woodman's axe could be heard leveling the great pines that had defied the winds and storms of more than five hundred years.

In 1807 Willis Thrall and William Shepard erected a saw-mill on the Olean creek, about three miles above its mouth. This mill was the first that manufactured lumber to be floated down the river to find a market. After disposing of a portion to build boats to supply the numerous travelers waiting for a passage upon this great and picturesque thoroughfare, the remainder was formed into "rafts" and floated down to a southern market. The lumber platforms in the upper Allegheny were rafted sixteen feet square and, for pine lumber, twenty courses deep. These platforms were coupled together to the number of ten, which would make a length of a hundred and sixty feet. Had the river been straight, double that length could have been run with safety; but on account of its deviating or crooked course they would have been driven by the rushing waters against the winding and rocky shore.

In those early days in this wilderness country the raftsmen encountered numerous difficulties, the most prominent of which was the difficulty of obtaining ropes to land and hold the raft in some place of safety; and they were frequently compelled to be exposed to the darkness of the night without being able to land the raft. These ten-platform rafts were generally run to Warren, where the Conewango tributary mingles its waters with those of the Allegheny. When the mouth of the Conewango was reached three of these ten platforms were coupled together, which, in raftsmen language, comprises an Allegheny fleet. The rafts were usually supplied with a comfortable shanty, containing a good supply of provisions and apparatus for cooking the same. An Allegheny fleet required six oars with a stout and vigorous man to each. The pilot or captain must be a man familiar with the islands, bars and other obstructions liable to stop the raft or dash it in pieces.

After the business of manufacturing and running lumber upon the waters of the Allegheny became firmly established, Judge Benjamin Chamberlain, James Green and others commenced operations on the Great Valley creek, where they constructed saw-mills, and in a few years leveled down many of the monarchs of the primeval forest. This creek in the early days afforded much more water than at the present time, surrounded as it was by a magnificent forest which obstructed to a large extent the evaporating rays of the summer sun. The great pine forest located on either side of the Great Valley creek, and affording millions of stately pines waiting for the saw, soon became one of the most prominent lumber sections in Cattaraugus county. The first saw-mill was built in the year 1812 by James Green, and soon after was purchased by a Captain Howe, one of the early settlers on the Allegheny river.

In 1816 came Judge Benjamin Chamberlain, then a young man from Maine, and whose wealth consisted of a suit of clothes worth but a few dollars, a meager education, but indomitable energy and a native intellect which placed him in the front rank of the leading men in Cattaraugus county. He erected a saw-mill which manufactured a large amount of valuable pine lumber that was floated down the majestic river to the southern towns and cities.

From 1812 to 1837 seven saw-mills were put in operation upon the Great Valley creek, and it was many years later before the labor of hundreds of men was able to conquer the towering pines. At the time the lumber business commenced on the crystal streams there was in some sections a great lack of provisions. A large share of the county was then a wilderness, but many wants were supplied near at hand. The woods provided the lumbermen with venison and the streams, whose waters turned their wheels, supplied them with speckled trout.

Among the important tributaries of the Allegheny was the Tunegawant, which was remarkable for the great amount of pine timber located in the valley and on the hillsides. In 1828 Stephen and Jesse Morrison erected a saw-mill near the Indian reservation line, where nothing but the best quality of lumber was manufactured for the southern market. Since that time several mills have been built, from which more than twenty millions of feet of lumber have been floated southward.

Following the river to the north line of the State of Pennsylvania the valleys and hills on either side were rich with a splendid growth of pine. The Red House valley was about as remarkable for the great amount of pine timber as that of the Great valley. About 1840 some fourteen thousand acres of the land was purchased by a company in the city of Boston, and has since been known as the Bay State Tract. This tract was worked for a number of years and many millions of their pine timber was floated upon the Allegheny and Ohio rivers to the city of Cincinnati, and various other towns and cities located on the Ohio. The first lumbering done in the Red House valley was adjacent to the river, as that afforded the only means to a permanent market, but since the advent of railroads the vast amount of pine, hemlock and hardwood remaining on the tract has readily found a market. The valley of Creek's run has produced a large amount of pine lumber, much of which was run to a southern market "in the log." In South Valley much lumber has been manufactured. About 1865 some six thousand acres were sold by John Fenton for about $250,000. This valuable tract soon found its way into the hands of Hon. Reuben E. Fenton, who, in disposing of it, made the small sum of $20,000.

On the various streams that contribute to enhance the waters of the river much lumber has been manufactured. In early days the valleys and hills bordering the tributary streams in South Valley were dotted with magnificent pines. As these streams formed the motive power, and as the process of manufacturing was much slower than that of the present time, lumbermen ran their mills both night and day as long as the streams provided them with water.

Notwithstanding the great amount of pine timber that the county of Cattaraugus once contained it has nearly all been leveled and much of the land formerly covered with tall pines is now fenced with great stumps, and the land is divided into cultivated fields, pastures, and meadows, that give feed to numerous grazing herds of the best breed of cows that our country can produce. Since the pine timber has become nearly obliterated lumbermen have resorted to the manufacture of hemlock, which abounds in great quantities in almost every town in the county. Interspersed with the great pine forests were numerous groves of hemlock which in many places were so dense as to obscure the sunlight. Hemlock, though not so valuable as pine, is in many respects a valuable timber. The bark has a ready sale for its astringent properties which make it valuable in tanning leather, and the lumber is the best that can be obtained for the frame-work of buildings. The towns at some distance from the river contained considerable pine lumber, but on account of the distance to haul it to the river it failed to be profitable to manufacture until railroads commenced to ship it to various markets.

The only town in Cattaraugus county too far removed from the Allegheny river without a thoroughfare was Randolph, through a part of which flows the headwaters of the Conewango, one of the prominent tributaries of the great river. It has been said by the early lumbermen that where the villages of East and West Randolph are located once stood one of the most magnificent forests of pines that America could produce. The eminence where Chamberlain Institute now stands was literally covered with a vast pine forest. A. G. Bush, one of the early settlers in the town of Randolph, in commenting on the appearance of the valley where the village of Randolph is now located, said to the writer: "In 1823, as I stood upon one of the Napoli hills which overlooks the Little Conewango valley, the great pine forest which presented itself to view was the most splendid scene I ever beheld."

As saw-mills at that time had not been constructed much of the pine growing near the Conewango creek was cut into logs and floated down to mills in Chautauqua county. The land where Chamberlain Institute is located is composed of glacial drift, which contains elements well adapted to an exuberant growth of pine. Notwithstanding the great amount of pine timber once growing where the village of Randolph now stands (which would seem almost inexhaustible) it has gone, and the site now contains one of the most beautiful villages in western New York. After mills were established in Conewango valley Abraham G. Bush and the Crowleys commenced the business of running lumber down the Conewango. They usually ran two-platform rafts, which were almost invariably loaded with shaved pine shingles, the manufacture of which supplied scores of men a profitable business during the winter months. Many millions of pine lumber have been run on the waters of the Conewango, until it reached the Allegheny, where it was coupled into great fleets destined for Pittsburg, Cincinnati, or the west.

At the present time (1893) the facilities are such that the hardwood, which abounds in almost every town in Cattaraugus county, has found a market. Millions of feet are being shipped to Buffalo, Rochester, and Syracuse, and in fact to nearly all of the eastern cities. Beach, maple, oak, chestnut, cucumber, ash, and basswood are found in abundance. The lumbermen now are doing business on a different basis than those in early days. The business was formerly transacted with but a small amount of money. The leading men in the trade were generally merchants who were supplied with goods on long credit with the understanding that payment should be made when the lumber was sold. These goods stood in place of money. It was always understood by those engaged in the manufacture of lumber that their wants should be supplied at the store, and but little money would be paid until returns came in after the lumber was sold. In these days of banks and railroads a great change has taken place. Lumbermen are expected to pay cash for every day's work and for all materials used in the business. If a person can show responsibility he has but little trouble in obtaining money.

CHAPTER XII.

THE AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

[By BEALS E. LITCHFIELD.]

AGRICULTURE was instituted by the Almighty. Genesis, 2: 8 and 15: "And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden; and there he put the man whom he had formed. And the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it." Thus Adam at once became a husbandman, and reared a family of farmers. Genesis, 4: 2: "And Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground." We also learn that Jabal, son of Cain, "was father of such as dwell in tents, and of such as have cattle." Thus agriculture was the first calling of the human race and divinely established. Hence it is inferior in dignity and importance to no other, and is the basis of all pursuits. While I admit that, without doubt, there are other callings or speculations from which, if successful, large fortunes are more speedily accumulated, yet the different branches of agriculture contain all the elements and conditions necessary to bring both pleasure and wealth to such as pursue their labors in an intelligent and scientific manner. In an early period it was thought that a half idiot, who could plow, sow, mow and reap, could be a successful farmer. But opinions, as well as agricultural implements, have changed, and in our day of progress it is admitted by intelligent farmers that a scientific education is very desirable if not positively necessary for the successful cultivation of the soil. The agriculturist should know enough of chemistry, one of the most useful sciences ever revealed to man by our kind Creator, to enable him to analyze the constituent elements of the soil that he cultivates, so that he may properly apply fertilizers; and he should also be able to scientifically direct and apply labor and any and every means to unlock nature's great store-house, and thus fill his barns with the rich fruitage of the soil, and his heart with joy and gladness.

In 1831, fourteen years after the first white child was born in the town of Ellicottville, this part of the county was almost an unbroken wilderness. The woods were well stocked with deer and the streams with speckled trout, which furnished a good supply of delicious food to grace the crude tables of the pioneers. Bears were also quite numerous, and wolves could be heard almost every evening in the year howling upon the hills. In some parts of the county lumbering was becoming quite an extensive business; but, as yet, agriculture throughout the county was in its infancy, or, perhaps I might more truly say, was at that time unborn. The pioneers were clearing the timber from their land, and to convert the timber into black-salts was almost the only means they had of obtaining money. In my boyhood days, and when the snow was more than a foot deep upon the ground, I have known of men cutting, piling, and burning timber to obtain the ashes from which to make black-salts to buy bread. Upon those patches of land thus cleared were produced some of the cereals, such as wheat, rye, buckwheat, corn, and oats. Potatoes were also raised in abundance for home use. Occasionally a crude grist-mill had been erected, where farmers could get their grain ground. But the quality of flour there obtained would not, I think, please the fastidious people of the present generation; the millers had no machinery for separating the smut from the wheat, and both were therefore ground together, making the flour dark and coarse.

In some portions of Cattaraugus county the soil by nature is well adapted to raising wheat; in other parts the soil or climate, or both, render this industry unprofitable. In Franklinville, Machias, Yorkshire, Freedom, Farmersville, and Randolph wheat is produced in small quantities, too small, in fact, to supply the home demand. An agricultural writer some forty-five years ago, according to a recent publication, said: "Cattaraugus is well adapted to the culture of cereal grain excepting wheat, and nowhere else are grass, vegetables, and roots produced in greater abundance or of better quality. The system of wheat culture, too prevalent in this country, is a reproach to the farmer, and wars with the laws of reproduction. I submit if the fall wheat is not more generally sown the middle or last of October than the first of September. If the plant is destroyed by the spring frosts and heaving of the soil, if the farmer gathers chaff and smut, if his granary is empty, what wonder is it? He has sown to the whirlwind amid frost, rain, and sleet, and reaps the certain reward of his folly. Let the trial be made once and thoroughly of cultivating wheat in a wise manner, and the result will forever silence the assertion that 'wheat cannot be raised in Cattaraugus.'"

The pioneer emigrants from New England to western New York held the idea that wheat raising was the farmer's first and chief industry, and they were attracted hither by the high encomiums bestowed by Captain Williamson and others upon the Holland Purchase, only to find that Cattaraugus county did not fully meet their expectations in the production of their favorite crop. Many of them, therefore, moved to western prairies after various attempts to raise wheat in what they rather contemptuously termed "cold Cattaraugus." But they left behind a land of rich natural resources, whose agricultural interests have been constantly developed and increased, until to-day it stands well among the farming districts of not only the Empire State but of the east. Under proper cultivation wheat can be grown in every town in the county, but with present prices and the fields of the great west still yielding abundant crops there are several other industries which the Cattaraugus farmer can pursue more profitably and certainly.

While Cattaraugus county is not supposed to be well adapted to the production of Indian corn, yet good corn can be produced almost every year in some portions of the county. According to the agricultural statistics found in the Cattaraugus County Directory of 1874 there was produced in the county 197,657 bushels of corn. For sixty years I have watched the development and progress of the different interests and industries of Cattaraugus county, and lo! what a change has marked the passing years! The crude sickle and the cumbersome cradle have been consigned to the past, and the merry click of the mower and the self-binding harvester now move in noisy triumph where once the hardy pioneers toiled from sun to sun. Our sons no longer swing the heavy implements of their grandfathers, but instead sit eight or ten hours a day on cushioned seats behind well-fed horses, doing the work that it required from five to ten men to do in early days. Inventive genius has devised for the farmer labor-saving machinery for every part of his regular work. The old "bull plow" that merely stirred the ground was succeeded by the heavy cast-iron plow, which was a decided improvement. These have given place to the finely polished steel hand and sulky plows of to-day.

The scythe and cradle of our pioneer fathers were used, perhaps, longer than any other farming implement of early times. The first mower made its appearance in Ellicottville about 1857. It was the property of the late Hon. Chauncey J. Fox, and I well remember seeing it in use on his farm. It was very clumsy, and was soon succeeded by others of better construction. With the aid of such machinery from manual toil, early and late, the farmer's life has become a life of physical ease; but to cope with the times his brain must be educated and drilled in science and business to pursue successfully a calling designed by the Creator to be the most independent and exalted on earth.

As wheat could not be successfully grown, the early settlers generally turned their attention to the production of other cereals, which could be produced profitably and in reasonable abundance. Oats and corn were the chief crops, and these, until the construction of the Erie railroad, found a market in the lumber camps of the southern part of the county and of Pennsylvania. From 1850 until the dairy interests developed these products were shipped to distant markets, but since then they have been consumed principally at home by the large dairies. Buckwheat during recent years has formed one of the staple products. Potatoes at first were raised solely for home use, but in abundance. Since the completion of the railroads large quantities have found markets in Buffalo, Rochester, and eastern cities. The soil seems peculiarly adapted to the growth of large crops of fine quality.

One of the early industries for those farmers who were fortunate enough to have maple orchards on their premises was sugarmaking, and while it apparently is as much or more of a manufacturing than a farming industry it nevertheless deserves a notice here, for it often proved a convenient source of revenue. It was always in demand at the stores for either cash or "goods," and was one of the few means by which the farmer could raise a little money occasionally. Imlay, in his Topographical Description, says "that no cultivation is necessary; that no contingency, such as hurricanes or bad seasons, can disturb the process; that neither the heavy expense of mills, engines, machinery, or a system of planting is necessary at all to make the maple sugar. The process occupies six weeks, from the middle of February to the end of March, and the whole of the buildings and other articles necessary for carrying it on are to be obtained at so trifling an expense as to be within the reach of any person of common industry, whose conduct in life can entitle him to the most moderate credit." Cattaraugus has produced maple sugar and syrup which in both quality and quantity is unexcelled by any county in western New York. From the pioneer settlement until about 1870 the industry steadily increased in proportions; since then the product has gradually diminished, which fact is owing to many of the sugar orchards being converted into wood and timber. The following table of statistics shows concisely the growth and decrease of sugar-making in the county of Cattaraugus:

YEAR.	POUNDS SUGAR.	GALS. SYRUP.
1855	416,300	2,459
1865	522,193	8,121
1875	441,021	7,022
1885.	No State census taken.

The early settlers, having come from a country of orchards, quickly realized the necessity of fruit and hastened to plant fruit trees, choosing generally the bottom lands for this purpose. Their choice usually proved unsatisfactory, for the trees were shorter-lived, less reliable and more liable to blast. Later, however, orchards were set on higher ground and these established the reputation of Cattaraugus as an apple producing county, making it compare quite favorably with other counties of the southern tier. Few grapes are grown except in the town of Perrysburg, a portion of which lies within the Chautauqua Grape Belt. The land there is almost wholly given up to the culture of the vine, and there are produced as fine a quality of grapes as are raised in any locality in New York State. Excellent pears are grown in limited quantities, and in early days, before the timber was cleared off, peach trees were occasionally seen in small numbers. Plums thrive and bear well, as do also cherries and berries of all kinds. The following shows the apple production of the county in the years named:

YEAR.	BUSH. APPLES.	BARRELS CIDER.	NO. OF TREES.
1855	177,173	1,257	-----
1865	375,997	5,331	195,267
1875	492,346	9,682	361,592
1885.	No State census taken.

The larger portion of Cattaraugus county is better adapted to grazing than the growing of grain, fruit or vegetables, and it early became apparent to farmers that stock raising would become one of the principal industries. The climate, soil, and elevation secure us against severe drouths, thus affording a reliable pasturage. The first efforts in this line were the raising of cattle and sheep for market. As this cattle industry progressed some of the more enterprising farmers began the systematic improvement of their stock, gradually converting their herds from the common breeds into the more favorite strains of Devons, Durhams, Ayrshires, etc. The first blooded animal brought into the county was a fine thoroughbred Durham bull, in 1828. Among the more prominent stock breeders who once made Cattaraugus county their home may be mentioned Staunton & Johnson, owners of the "Elk Farm" in Ellicottville, and Hudson Wait, of West Valley. Judge Ten Broeck was the most extensive cattle owner the county ever possessed. He had some six thousand acres in improved farms and often wintered from six hundred to eight hundred head of cattle. In summers his stock usually numbered from twelve hundred to fifteen hundred. He gave no attention, however, to improved breeds, and in this respect his ideas have often been copied, particularly by dairymen.

The raising of young stock for market gradually increased as the farmers added to their improvements, and for a time became the leading branch of agriculture. For a time the sheep husbandry was not very successful, for the wolves made such slaughter among them that they were never safe at night, unless yarded with a fence that the wolves could not get through or over. It was not until the year 1843 that the wolves bade adieu to Cattaraugus county.

From about that time the sheep husbandry increased quite rapidly for twelve or fifteen years, when the dairy industry came to the front and has thus far held its advanced position. At the present day few sheep are raised, and those few are found only in small flocks. In 1835 there were, according to reliable statistics, 39,509 sheep in the county; in 1845, 68,609; in 1855, 59,725; in 1865, 77,682; in 1875, 17,139. In 1865 there were 262,742 pounds of wool shorn; in 1875, 73,262 pounds.

In 1830 the dairying industry was undeveloped, and for several years the small amount of butter and cheese manufactured was mostly traded in barter with the country merchant and used for home consumption. Even as late as 1846 I well remember taking in a wagon to Buffalo the product of six or eight cows and selling the cheese for  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cents and the butter for  $12\frac{1}{2}$  cents per pound. In fact, at that time, the dairying industry of Cattaraugus county was in embryo, waiting for light or knowledge from the east, or for the railroad whistle proclaiming the grand truth that Cattaraugus was within shipping distance of the sea. And soon to supply the demand of Cattaraugus for cows Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Canada, and Pennsylvania were kind enough to supply a portion necessary to meet the demand. Thus it was: the Erie railroad laid its track through the southern part of the county, and the dairying industry was born. The Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad passes through some of the northern and eastern towns, and thus adds vigor and growth to the dairying interest. The Buffalo & Southwestern railroad traverses some of the western towns, which not only adds vigor and strength to the dairying industry, but also places those towns at the very door of the Buffalo market for all agricultural products. The Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad traverses a central portion of the county, and it brings Buffalo, Rochester, Bradford and Pittsburg markets almost to our door; and under the stimulus of those markets the timber remaining upon the hills is rapidly disappearing, but instead of its being manufactured into black-salts, as it was sixty years ago, it is shipped to various manufacturing towns and converted into useful articles to supply the needs of mankind. It nets the owner many times the price it would bring if made into black-salts. In 1830 there were but few cows in the county comparatively, but I have not the means of ascertaining the exact number. According to the agricultural statistics in 1865 there were 30,569. In 1870 there were 44,463, an increase during the five years of 13,894. During the same five years the sheep in the county decreased from 77,682 to 26,739.

From 1870 to 1880 the dairying business increased in magnitude, and the number of cows were increased by many farmers changing their former mode of agriculture and stocking their farms with cows. Many new cheese factories and a few creameries were built, and the dairying interest has since taken the lead of all other agricultural pursuits in Cattaraugus county. Until about 1867 each farmer manufactured the milk from his own cows at home, either into butter or cheese; but he now commenced the cheese factory system, and though some portion of cheese is yet manufactured at home the larger portion is the product of the factories. There are some creameries where butter is manufactured. But I think the bulk of the butter in this county is made as farm dairy. Although Cattaraugus county has a broken, uneven, and hilly surface, there is probably no county in the State better adapted to the dairying business than this. The hills and valleys are well supplied with pure soft water, and the soil will (if judiciously managed) produce an abundance of the choicest grasses. Hay, in connection with dairying, has become one of the important products of the farm. Not only are vast quantities consumed at home, but hundreds of tons are each year shipped to eastern markets.

Before the advent of the railroads prices were low owing to the difficulty of reaching a market. The principal mode of trading for many years was by barter. Cheese was exchanged for flour, pound for pound. In the winter of 1830-31 butter brought twelve and one-half cents a pound. From 1835 to 1840 cheese sold for six or eight cents, while in 1846 it dropped to four and one-half cents. Butter was often as low as eight cents per pound, but in 1851 the best quality brought a shilling, which was deemed a high price.

The following statistics show the agricultural and dairying resources of Cattaraugus county. The latest State census at command is 1875:

The farmers of Cattaraugus early recognized the necessity of annual agricultural exhibits, which eventually proved unusually beneficial in fostering and developing the pioneer efforts of the agriculturist and encouraged him to greater activity and competition. On November 11, 1841, a small band of enthusiastic farmers and others met in the court-house in Ellicottville and organized the "Cattaraugus County Agricultural Society," with these officers: President, Hon. Peter Ten Broeck; vice-president, Elijah A. Rice; secretary, Daniel R. Wheeler; treasurer, Stephen S. Cole. These officers and a director elected from each town constituted the Board of Managers. This society never owned its exhibition grounds. The annual fairs were first held in Ellicottville, the public square being used for the display of stock and the court-house for the exhibition of grain, fruit, vegetables, and articles of domestic manufacture. In 1852 the location was changed to Otto, the citizens of that place giving the society the free use of grounds for exhibition purposes. Samuel Harvey, of Mansfield, was president. In 1853 the fair was held in Randolph with Asahel Crowley, president. The next year it was again changed, this time to Little Valley, with Horace Howe, president, who tendered free of cost the ground for the exhibition of stock and farm implements. The Congregational church was used for the display of articles contributed by the ladies, and Horace Greeley delivered an address. The old agricultural society held its last annual fair at the village of Little Valley in the year of 1855.

January 28, 1856, the old society was re-organized under chapter 425 of the laws of 1855, and assumed for a time the name of "Cattaraugus County Agricultural and Horticultural Society." The meeting effecting this organization was held at Howe's Hotel in Little Valley. Dr. Lyman Twomley was chairman and John Manley, secretary. April 5th ten acres of land were leased for ten years of the president, Horace Howe, for $10, with the privilege of buying the grounds within that period for $50 an acre, and in December, 1865, the purchase was duly made. A large tent was bought and used for several years to display and shelter exhibits, and occasionally rented for other purposes. The premiums offered in 1856 consisted of forty diplomas, eighty-three volumes "Transactions New York State Agricultural Society," seventy-two volumes "Transactions American Institute," two life memberships, and $358.25 in cash. April 4, 1857, a corporate seal was adopted. This year a number of prominent men in the State became honorary members of the society, among them being Gov. Reuben E. Fenton, of Chautauqua county. August 25-26, 1858, the first annual horse show was held, but did not prove as successful as expected. In 1859 the citizens of all the border counties were invited to contest for premiums and become members. October 1st of this year the corporate name was changed to the "Cattaraugus County Agricultural Society," which style it has since retained.

In 1862 the officers deemed a change of location desirable and accordingly voted to hold the fair at Olean on grounds offered by the citizens there. The fair of 1863 was also held in that village. In 1864 the society returned to Little Valley and remained two years. The fair of 1866 was held in Olean, and from then until 1876 the annual exhibits were displayed on the society's grounds in Little Valley. In 1877 another change was thought desirable and the fairs of this year and of 1878 and 1879 were taken to Randolph and held on the Driving Park. Since 1880 they have been held in Little Valley, on the society's grounds known as Beechdale Park, which was secured of John Manley in exchange for the old plat in 1875 under authority of a legislative act of April 22d of that year. The grounds lie within the village limits, contain twenty acres, and possess suitable buildings, fences, etc., and a good half-mile track for racing purposes. The annual exhibitions have generally been successful and productive of much good to farmers throughout the county. Thousands of dollars have been distributed in purses and premiums from year to year. The society is a member of the National Trotting Association. The Board of Managers consists of the four executive officers, who are elected annually, and six directors, elected for three years, two being elected at each annual meeting. This Board has power to decide all questions which may come before it. The active officers of the old society were: Presidents, Hon. Peter Ten Broeck, Abraham Searle, Hon. C. J. Fox, Gen. Alexander Chambers, John S. Harvey, Samuel Harvey, and Asahel Crowley; secretaries, Daniel R. Wheeler and John C. Peabody. Since the re-organization the officers have been as follows:

Presidents.—Horace Howe, 1856-57; J. Galusha Stanton, 1858; Nathaniel Walker, 1859-60; Samuel William Johnson, 1861-64; Isaac Reed, 1865-66; Chauncey A. Snow, 1867-69; John Manley, 1870-71; Enos C. Brooks, 1872; Halsey Safford, 1873; Horace S. Huntley, 1874-76; Hezekiah O. Burt, 1877-78; William Stevens, 1879-80; John B. F. Champlin, 1881; Frank Larabee, 1882; Ezekiel Kelley, 1883-84; Harlan D. Bryant, 1885; Myron L. Newton, 1886-87; A. D. Bonsteel, 1888-90; Fred Clark, 1891; Cyrus R. Rhodes, 1892-93.

Vice-presidents.—Dr. Lyman Twomley, 1856; Lorenzo Stratton, 1857 (resigned and Nathan Crosby elected) and 1859 (vice Horace S. Huntley, resigned), 1860-63; Horace S. Huntley, 1858, 1873; Judson Sibley, 1864-65; John Kennicott, 1866; Lorenzo D. Cobb, 1867; Isaac Reed, 1868; Halsey Safford, 1869, 1875, 1880; John C. Gardner, 1870-72; Hezekiah O. Burt, 1874; William Stevens, 1876; Alonzo S. Lamper, 1877-78; Porter B. Canfield, 1879; Erastus N. Lee, 1881; Ezekiel Kelley, 1882; Harlan D. Bryant, 1883-84; Charles H. Davis, 1885; Smith Clark, 1886; C. A. Rhodes, 1887; O. H. Smith, 1888; Fred Clark, 1889-90; C. R. Rhodes, 1891; M. B. Jones, 1892; F. E. Champlin, 1893.

Secretaries.—Henry Hoyt, 1856 and 1859 (resigned and John Manley elected to fill vacancies); John Manley, 1856-60; Horace S. Huntley, 1861-69, 1880, 1884-85; Lambert G. Whitney, 1870; A. T. Palmer, 1871-73, 1877-78; Charles H. Davis, 1874-75; M. N. Pratt, 1876; M. Van Benson, 1879; Dell Tuttle, 1881-83; Samuel B. Densmore, 1886; Samuel Dunham, 1887-90; A. D. Bonsteel, 1891; Robert F. Winship, 1892-93.

Treasurers.—S. T. Marsh, 1856 (did not qualify and Dr. Daniel Bucklin elected to fill vacancy); Dr. Daniel Bucklin, 1857-58; Eliphalet Culver, 1859 (declined, and Horace S. Huntley elected); Horace S. Huntley, 1860, 1879; George M. Fitch, 1861-62; Claudius V. B. Barse, 1863-64; Fuller Bucklin, 1865; Erastus N. Lee, 1866-69, 1880; Enos C. Brooks, 1870-71; A. W. Ferrin, 1872; Harvey Tuthill, 1873; Stephen C. Green, 1874; B. B. Weber, 1875-76; C. M. Hopkins, 1877-78, 1881; Mortimer N. Pratt, 1882-85; Isaac Winship, 1886-87; Dr. S. Z. Fisher, 1888-92; S. L. Sweetland, 1893.

The old, or first, Conewango Valley Fair Association was organized early in the 'sixties and a single exhibition held at East Randolph. Asahel Crowley, of Randolph, was president. The association was not successful, apparently, and it went down. It was revived, however, in the spring of 1880 under the same name, and has since held fairs every fall. The association leases about twenty acres of land midway between Randolph and East Randolph villages, upon which is a good half-mile track and convenient buildings, fences, etc. The officers for 1893 are C. D. Tuttle, president; Charles Merrill, vice-president; T. L. Ostrom, treasurer; L. D. Van Rensselaer, secretary. These with six directors constitute the Board of Managers.

The Franklinville Agricultural and Driving Park Association was organized March 18, 1882, and the first exhibit held on leased grounds from the 26th to the 29th of the following September. A half-mile track was laid out and constructed, and early the next year the plat, consisting of twenty-one acres, was purchased for the permanent use of the association. Exhibits open to the world have been held in the fall of each year, proving very successful in every way. From $3,000 to $4,000 in premiums and purses are offered annually. The management is invested in six directors (elected for three years each) and the four executive officers (elected annually). These latter have been as follows:

Presidents.—James H. Ferris, 1882-84; Peter T. B. Button, 1885-86; L. C. Riggs, 1887-90; P. T. B. Button, 1891; Robert F. Woodworth, 1892-93.

Vice-presidents.—Robert F. Woodworth, 1882-91; S. E. McNall, 1892-93.

Secretaries.—James H. Waring, 1882-83; George E. Spring, 1884-90; H. R. Curtis, 1891; P. T. B. Button, 1892-93.

Treasurers.—Peter T. B. Button, 1882-84; W. J. Ward, 1885-86; P. T. B. Button, 1887-90; A. P. Adams, 1891-92; S. A. Spring, 1893.

The Gowanda Agricultural, Horticultural, and Mechanical Society was organized August 31, 1865, being the result of an industrial organization formed in 1855, representing adjacent towns in both Cattaraugus and Erie counties, and holding annual fairs for several years in Gowanda. The first officers were L. S. Jenks, president; Albert Gaensslen, vice-president; Frank A. Newell, secretary; William H. Stuart, treasurer. The society purchased and fitted up twenty-five acres of land within the village corporation, and until 1875 held yearly exhibits. The property was disposed of about 1885 and the affairs of the association permanently wound up.

Various attempts have been made from time to time to establish and maintain farmers' clubs in different parts of the county, but with a few exceptions these organizations enjoyed only a brief existence. One of the most active clubs while it lived was the Farmers' and Mechanics' Club of Cattaraugus County, which was organized in January, 1874, with these officers: President, Frank Keeler, Otto; vice-president, William Stevens, Napoli; secretary, A. W. Ferrin, Salamanca; corresponding secretary, J. W. Sweetland, Little Valley; treasurer, A. H. Bedient, Little Valley. The object, as set forth in the By-Laws, was "the improvement in the theory and practice of agriculture and the advancement of agricultural interests." The club went down after two or three years, but while it existed meetings were generally held each month.

The Farmers' Agricultural Association of Cattaraugus County was organized as the Northern Farmers' Agricultural Association on February 13, 1889, at West Valley, with Christian Ehman, president, and A. O. Tillinghast, secretary. Monthly meetings were held in the different towns in the county and various modes of farming discussed. The State Department of Agriculture furnishes speakers occasionally. The present officers are O. H. Smith, Ellicottville, president; George W. Boyce, Elkdale, secretary and treasurer.

The Ischua Valley Agricultural Society was incorporated July 7, 1857, with Hollis Scott, Nelson Nourse, Elihu M. Wesson, William O. Leland and Hiram Webster, of Hinsdale; Samuel Searl, of Franklinville; and Andrew J. Davis, of Ischua, as the first Board of Directors. The organization took in the towns of Hinsdale, Franklinville and Ischua, and leased suitable grounds about a half-mile north of Hinsdale village, where annual fairs were successfully held for ten years, when they were discontinued and the affairs of the society wound up.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE PRESS OF CATTARAUGUS COUNTY.

[BY A. W. FERRIN.]

THE pioneer newspaper of Cattaraugus county was the Allegany Mercury, which was started in the village of Hamilton (now Olean) in 1818 by Benjamin F. Smead. The early number of the Mercury which I have been privileged to inspect gave evidence of enterprise and ability on the part of this pioneer in Cattaraugus county journalism. It would now be hard to realize the difficulties he must have encountered in starting a paper in this remote and sparsely settled region with its meager news and mail facilities. The same remark would apply to some extent, at least, to all the early newspaper experiments in the county. In 1819 Franklin Coudrey became interested in the paper and the name was changed to the Hamilton Recorder. After experiencing for two or three years the usual vicissitudes of such pioneer enterprises the paper suspended publication.

From the demise of the Recorder there was no newspaper in the county until 1826, when Richard Hill started a paper at Ellicottville called the Western Courier. In 1827 the name was changed to the Cattaraugus Gazette and a year or two later it suspended publication. It was neutral in politics. Cyrus G. McKay, for many years a prominent citizen of Allegany, and who is still living at Port Allegany, Pa., was an employee in this office.

Lodi (now Gowanda) gave birth to the next newspaper enterprise in the county. The Lodi Pioneer made its appearance about November, 1827. Lewis B. Edwards was the publisher, and the paper was anti-Masonic in politics. Some time prior to January, 1829, G. N. Starr became the publisher and continued as such as late certainly as February 29, 1834, although the name of the paper at that time was the Cattaraugus Freeman and Lodi Messenger. I. R. Leonard of Gowanda has a copy of the Freeman and Messenger of that date, bearing Starr's name as publisher, which disproves the statement in Evarts's History of Cattaraugus County that Starr died in 1833 and the paper was then suspended. It is worthy of note that Horace Greeley worked on the Messenger for about six months in 1830 as a journeyman printer, and in his personal reminiscences the great editor says: "I left Lodi no richer than I came."

Edwin Hough became the publisher of the Freeman and Messenger on January 3, 1839. This language in his salutatory, "having assumed the proprietorship of the Freeman and Messenger," etc., would seem to indicate that the paper had been continued up to that time, or had not long been extinct. Hough made the paper Whig in politics, and continued as editor and proprietor until November, 1840, when Eliakim Hough became proprietor, Edwin Hough retaining the editorship. In January, 1844, the Houghs changed the name to the People's Advocate and Lodi Banner and in the following March curtailed the name to the Lodi Banner. In April, 1844, the paper was discontinued, the office and fixtures being removed to Springville, where Edwin Hough published for a time the Springville Express. He subsequently removed to Hornellsville, N. Y., where he established the Tribune. He was connected with that paper for many years and died there.

The Ellicottville Republican was started in May, 1833, by a stock company. The paper was neutral in politics, and Delos E. Sill was manager. In the fall of 1834 Sill retired from the management and was succeeded by Cyrus G. McKay, an employee in the office. In April, 1835, the establishment was purchased by R. H. Shankland. In 1836 the paper was enlarged and the name changed to the Cattaraugus Republican, under which title it was published by Shankland until October, 1854, when he sold the office to Fred A. Saxton, who subsequently sold an interest to B. F. Morris. The paper was continued by Saxton & Morris until 1862, when, owing to the hard times incident to the war period, it ceased publication. The Republican was Democratic in politics from its purchase by Shankland in 1835. Morris went to Warren, Pa., where he started the Ledger, and continued as its editor and publisher for some twenty-five years.

In 1835 two brothers by the name of Cutler, both printers, came to Olean on their way westward via the Allegheny river. While waiting for passage down the river they resurrected an old press and issued a few numbers of a paper which bore the name of a former publication, the Allegheny Mercury. From what I can learn this was not a serious effort to establish a paper, but merely the pastime of a couple of enterprising young men.

In 1836 a stock company, known as the Olean Land and Hydraulic Company, having headquarters in New York city, but owning a large tract of land in Olean, sent a press and materials to Olean to start a paper to boom their enterprise. They also sent as editor of the paper Rufus W. Griswold, who afterward gained much distinction in the literary world as editor of Graham's Magazine, editor of the International Magazine, and as the author of several standard works, among them "Poets and Poetry of America" and "Washington and the Generals of the Revolution." Griswold was a Baptist preacher, and a man of varied talents, but of somewhat eccentric character. The paper was called the Olean Advocate, and under Griswold's administration was an able and spicy sheet. The first number was issued in July, 1836. The Land and Hydraulic Company owned the paper for about a year, and then sold it to an Olean company, among whom were F. S. Martin, J. G. Johnson, T. H. Porter, and R. Welch. Martin and Johnson had a controlling interest in the company. Griswold retired from the editorship about this time, but Delos E. Sill, who had charge of the mechanical department, continued with it as business manager until 1840, when he went to Ellicottville and started the Cattaraugus Whig. Carlos Woodcock, an Olean lawyer, was the editor for awhile after Griswold retired, but was soon succeeded by Dudley C. Bryan, another Olean lawyer. For a year or so, about this time, the name of Stephen Welch, who was then a young man and an apprentice in the office, appeared in the paper as publisher by the direction of the company owning it. A. M. Badger, an Olean jeweler, succeeded Bryan as editor and changed the name to the Olean Times. The Times was published until November, 1840, when it suspended. The press and materials were stored in the second story of Martin's carriage shop, and were destroyed by fire in 1857. The Advocate and its successor, the Times, were Whig in politics.

About 1837 a party of capitalists, among the most prominent of whom was Samuel P. Lyman, thought to build a city at Hinsdale. The company owned a large tract of land covering a good part of the valley about the village, which they caused to be surveyed, mapped and laid out into streets, parks, etc. In the interest of this scheme a paper was started by Joseph T. Lyman, which was called the Hinsdale Democrat. The paper did not continue long under the management of Lyman, but passed into the hands of Edward Hughes & Co., who continued its publication for about two years, when it ceased to exist. In politics the paper was Democratic.

The People's Gazette, a Democratic paper, was started in Hinsdale in 1840 by George C. Smith, and was published by him until 1842, when he removed the establishment to Geneseo, Livingston county.

The Freeman and Messenger was started at Scott's Corners, in Hinsdale, in 1843, by Edwin Fuller, in the interest of a visionary scheme known as the "Manual Labor Institute." Its publication was continued for about two years. The press and materials passed into the possession of Allen C. Fuller, who issued in 1845 the Expositor, the particular mission of which seemed to be to expose the alleged rascalities of the first managers of the "Manual Labor Institute." The Expositor's life covered a period of only about six months.

In the memorable presidential campaign of 1840 Delos E. Sill started the Cattaraugus Whig at Ellicottville, to advocate the election of Gen. William Henry Harrison and the principles of the Whig party. The Whig received a good support, and grew to be one of the ablest and most successful country weeklies in western New York. R. L. Cary was associated with Sill in the paper from 1848 to 1854, the firm being Cary & Sill. When the Whig party dissolved the name of the paper was changed to the Cattaraugus Freeman, and upon the formation of the Republican party it became the recognized exponent in the county of the principles of the new party. Mr. Sill continued in the control of the Freeman until stricken by an incurable malady, when it passed in 1864 into the hands of his son, C. D. Sill, and his brother-in-law, C. M. Beecher. In the winter of 1866 Beecher & Sill sold the press and office materials to J. T. Henry of the Olean Advertiser and the subscription list to the Olean Times, and the Freeman ceased to exist.

Delos E. Sill was born in Cooperstown, N. Y. He was a printer by trade, and prior to coming to Cattaraugus county worked in Geauga, Ohio, and Buffalo, N. Y. He came to Ellicottville in 1833, and was manager of the Republican for a year or more. During this time he married Miss Harriet Beecher, a daughter of Moses Beecher, one of the leading men of the county at that time. In October, 1835, Mr. Sill started the Democrat at Aurora, N. Y. This was not a successful venture, and the paper was discontinued in February, 1836. When the Advocate was started at Olean in July, 1836, he was made its business manager. His career as founder and publisher of the Cattaraugus Whig and Cattaraugus Freeman is fully given above. Mr. Sill was an excellent business man and political manager. In the latter respect he probably excelled any man ever connected with the press of Cattaraugus county. He was a power in the politics of the county until stricken with the disease which retired him from active life. He died in 1870, in the 59th year of his age. Under his management the Freeman was the most prosperous paper published in the county during its existence, and gave him a fair competency for the years of his retirement and for his family after he was gone. Mr. Sill was twice nominated as presidential elector, and in 1848 was appointed messenger of the electoral college of New York. In 1861 he was appointed U. S. agent for the New York Indians, which position he held until ill health compelled his resignation. Mr. Sill was not an editorial writer, but employed men who could satisfactorily phrase his sentiments and ideas. C. M. Beecher, a brother-in-law, was with him for some years, and, as already stated, was associated with his son in the publication of the Freeman after Mr. Sill became incapacitated. Mr. Beecher was a writer of much ability, and was a journalist at Wellsville and Elmira, N. Y., after leaving Ellicottville in 1866. He was editor-in-chief of the Elmira Advertiser when he died some years since. After the sale of the Freeman C. D. Sill was engaged with William Beecher, another uncle, in the publication of the Dunkirk Journal for a year or two.

The Randolph Herald was started in March, 1842, and had an existence of about five years. Its publishers were successively William Mason, Lorenzo and Julius Marsh, Fletcher Russell and J. J. Strong. The latter was publisher for about two years, when he was converted to Mormonism and removed to Nauvoo, Ill., and the paper was discontinued.

About March, 1847, the Western Democrat was started at Lodi by A. A. Ladue. It was Democratic in politics. April 26, 1848, William Van Vechten succeeded to the management of the paper, but on the 17th of May following he was succeeded by John W. Mason and Charles Aldrich. They passed the paper back to Van Vechten in June, 1848. In September, 1848, the name of the village was changed from Lodi to Gowanda, and the name of the paper was changed to the Gowanda Democrat to conform to the name of the village. The paper soon after expired. J. C. Van Duzer issued the Gowanda Persian on November 21, 1848. It was independent in politics and had only a brief existence.

In October, 1850, H. M. Morgan began the publication at Gowanda of the Cattaraugus Chronicle. It was Democratic in politics. In June, 1852, the name was changed to the Independent Chronicle, with Rev. L. S. Morgan as editor, H. M. Morgan continuing as publisher. In July, 1854, John M. Henry took an interest in the paper, the firm becoming Morgan & Henry. The name of the paper was changed to the Gowanda Chronicle, and it became the exponent of the principles of the Know-Nothing party. Mr. Henry's connection with the paper was of short duration, and upon his retirement H. M. Morgan continued as publisher until April, 1856, when he sold out to John P. Grierson, of Buffalo, who made the paper Republican in politics. The first number under Grierson was issued, and the second was in press, when the disastrous fire which swept through Gowanda, April 30, 1856, destroyed the entire establishment.

The Gowanda Phoenix rose from the ashes of the Chronicle. Rev. Louis S. Morgan was the publisher, and the first number bore date August 15, 1856. The paper was published until 1857, when the press and materials were sold and removed to Bradford, Pa., where they were used in the publication of the Bradford Miner.

While publishing the Chronicle the Morgans printed a hymn book and three or four books of the New Testament in the Seneca language. After leaving Gowanda H. M. Morgan published a paper for a time at Silver Creek, N. Y., and then removed to Chicago, where he died about 1864. Rev. L. S. Morgan, father of H. M. Morgan, died at Rutledge a few years since, at an advanced age.

The Neosophic Gem was the name of a literary journal published in Randolph from 1848 to 1852 by A. M. Shattuck.

In November, 1850, James T. Henry started the Gowanda Whig. A few months later he removed the office to Ellicottville, where he issued the Whig and Union. He soon changed the name to the American Union, and continued as its publisher until 1855, when the establishment was sold to R. H. Shankland. When first started the Union was "silver gray" Whig in politics, but when the Whig party disintegrated it became an advocate of the principles of the American or "Know-Nothing" party. In 1856 it supported Fillmore and Donelson, the "Know-Nothing" candidates for the presidency and vice-presidency. A year or so later it became a Democratic sheet, and since that time it has been a steadfast advocate of Democratic principles. In 1862 the name was changed to the Cattaraugus Union, which title it still bears. About 1869 P. K. Shankland became associated with his father in the publication of the Union. In 1879 he left the paper and went to Jamestown, where he was interested with E. A. Brooks of Ellicottville in the publication of a new Democratic journal. He is at present editor and publisher of the Jamestown Saturday Times. Upon the retirement of P. K. Shankland from the Union his elder brother, R. H. Shankland, Jr., became a member of the publishing firm. In May, 1881, the Union was removed to the rapidly growing village of Salamanca, where it is still published by R. H. Shankland, Jr.

Robert H. Shankland was actively engaged in the newspaper business in Cattaraugus county for more than forty years. He was born in Cooperstown, N. Y., October 1, 1813. He was a printer, learning his trade in Cooperstown; afterwards working in New York in the book printing establishment of the Harper Brothers and in the newspaper offices of the city. Horace Greeley was a compositor in some of these offices, and worked side by side with him. Mr. Shankland came to Cattaraugus county in 1835, and was connected with the newspapers of the county continuously from that date until his death, which occurred at his home in Ellicottville, November 1, 1889. He possessed much native ability, was a man of kindly impulses and an honorable competitor. He was a prominent figure in the Democratic party of the county, and for many years was familiarly known as the oldest Democratic editor west of Cayuga Bridge. He was surrogate of Cattaraugus county for nine years, was supervisor of Ellicottville for two terms, was a presidential elector in 1844, and was U. S. agent for the New York Indians for two years under President Polk.

The Cattaraugus Sachem was started at Randolph in June, 1851, by Charles Aldrich. It was a Democratic sheet of the "Free Soil" or anti-slavery type. The Sachem was published about one year, B. F. Morris being associated in its publication for the last six months. Aldrich then removed the office to Olean, where he issued the Olean Journal. For the first year the Journal was neutral in politics; it then hoisted the Democratic banner, but was strongly opposed to the extension of slavery into the territories. In 1856 Aldrich sold his interest in the Journal to James T. Henry, who changed the name to the Olean Advertiser and made it independent in politics. In 1857 Aldrich went to Iowa and started a Republican paper at Webster City, which he published until the autumn of 1862, when he enlisted and served in the Union army about two years as adjutant of the 32d Iowa Infantry. From 1866 to 1869 he published the Marshalltown Times, and since the latter date he has been connected with various Iowa newspapers, among them the Waterloo Courier, the Dubuque Daily Times and the Council Bluffs Nonpareil. He is at the present writing curator of the Historical Collection in the Iowa State Library at Des Moines.

During the stormy war period the Olean Advertiser favored the Democratic party, and was one of the strongest papers of that faith in the county. In 1868 the Advertiser office was for the second time destroyed by fire, and Henry then removed to Jamestown and began the publication of a new Democratic paper called the Chautauqua County Press.

James T. Henry was born in Cherry Valley, Otsego county, February 22, 1823. In 1835 the family removed to Lodi, this county, and young Henry learned the printer's trade in the office of the Freeman and Messenger. He was a workman of more than ordinary skill and taste, and worked as journeyman printer until he began business for himself at Gowanda in 1850. From 1850 to 1868 he was continuously connected with the press of Cattaraugus county as editor and publisher. He was an able and vigorous writer, and took an active part in the political controversies of the day. After leaving Cattaraugus county in 1868 he published the Chautauqua County Press at Jamestown for two years, and then went to Titusville, Pa., where he established the Courier. This he published successfully for three years, and selling his interest he started the Titusville Sunday News, which was his last active work in the newspaper line. After selling the News he engaged for several years in the oil business. In addition to his regular editorial work Mr. Henry was the author of a valuable "History of Petroleum" and a history of the "Pioneers and Supervisors of Cattaraugus County." During his residence in Cattaraugus county he was for some years a member of the Board of Supervisors, president of the village of Olean, and at one time held a State appointment on the canals. He died at Titusville in 1878. His remains were interred at Olean.

The Randolph Whig was started by C. K. Judson and B. F. Morris in July, 1853. Judson sold out to Morris, who changed the name to the Randolph Reporter and made the paper Democratic. He continued its publication at Randolph until July, 1858, when he removed the office to Gowanda with the intention of trying his journalistic fortunes there. Before the first number was issued, however, he sold the office to W. W. Henry and Frank G. Stebbins, employees in the office, and under the firm name of Henry & Stebbins they issued in August, 1858, the Gowanda Reporter. The paper was Democratic in politics. Mr. Stebbins withdrew from the firm in November, 1859, and went to Cuba, where he established the True Patriot, which he published for some twenty years, and nearly up to the time of his death. Soon after the withdrawal of Stebbins, Henry sold a half interest in the Reporter to D. F. Moody, of Perrysburg, who soon afterward sold out to F. J. Fuller. The paper continued under the proprietorship of Henry & Fuller until September, 1861, when Henry sold his interest to Charles E. Benton, an apprentice in the office, and enlisting in the 64th Regiment, New York Volunteers, went to the war. The paper was published by Fuller & Benton until 1864, when Benton went to Fredonia. In 1868 he purchased the Advertiser of that place, with which paper he was connected until his death, February 10, 1877. The Reporter was continued by Fuller for only a short time after Benton left it.

In May, 1860, some $1,200 was raised by subscription for the establishment of a Republican newspaper at Olean. Among the most prominent contributors to the subscription fund were R. O. Smith, Samuel W. Bradley, Charles H. Thing, and John G. Mersereau. A contract was made with L. M. Gano, by which, in consideration of the $1,200, he was to publish a Republican paper in Olean for a term of five years. Upon the fulfillment of the contract the type, press, etc., purchased with the $1,200 was to become the property of Gano or his assigns. The Olean Times was started by Gano under this contract in July, 1860. Soon after, A. E. Fay became interested in the paper with Gano. In August, 1862, the office was destroyed by fire, but was replaced with another purchased with the insurance money. In the fall of 1863 Gano sold his interest in the paper to Fay and went to Watkins, N. Y., where he engaged in the publication of the Express, with which paper he is still connected.

In August, 1864, Fay sold out to George D. A. Bridgeman, who undertook to move the establishment to Penn Yan, N. Y. The Olean parties who made the contract with Gano in 1860 forcibly prevented Bridgeman from removing the materials, and a suit was brought by him in the Supreme Court to recover their value. The Olean parties sold the materials to C. F. Dickinson in March, 1865, under a contract similar to that entered into with Gano in 1860. The suit of Bridgeman against R. O. Smith and others was tried in the Supreme Court at Little Valley, June 15, 1868, before Justice George Barker. A verdict was rendered in favor of Bridgeman for $1,500, subject to the opinion of the Supreme Court at General Term. The General Term, however, rendered a decision in favor of the defendants. Mr. Dickinson was publisher of the Times from March, 1865, until his death, which occurred June 10, 1871. His widow continued the business with Miles A. Davis as editor until January 1, 1872, when she sold the establishment to George W. Dickinson, her husband's brother, who was its publisher until December, 1881. In 1879 the Times was made a daily, and the daily edition has since been regularly issued. Dickinson sold the Times in December, 1881, to a stock company composed of Olean gentlemen, the company being known as The Times Publishing Company. After leaving Olean Dickinson went to Florida, where he published a paper at St. Augustine for a time, and later returned to Carthage, N. Y. For some years he has been editor of the Carthage Tribune.

When the Times was purchased by the stock company R. C. Hill merged with it the Press, which he had started in the spring of 1881, and he was made managing editor. The stock company's management was not successful or satisfactory, and in April, 1883, the establishment was leased to E. L. Vincent and George N. Wood. Hill went to Buffalo, where he was successively on the editorial staffs of the Courier and the Commercial, and was for two years editor of the Sunday Truth. Vincent was editor of the Times until June, 1884, when he went to Binghamton and took an editorial position on the Daily Republican of that city. He subsequently had a similar position on the Journal of Hartford, Conn., and later owned for a time the Advocate at Waverly, N. Y. Wood continued as business manager of the Times until September, 1884, when he purchased the establishment and was owner and publisher until September, 1887, when he died of typhoid fever. Mr. Wood devoted his time principally to the business management of the paper, and during the greater part of his administration Samuel H. Coon was local editor and Hon. D. H. Bolles wrote the editorial leaders. The paper was continued by Mrs. Wood with Coon as manager until December 1, 1887, when it was sold to S. C. Green, B. B. Weber and A. W. Ferrin, the firm name being S. C. Green & Co. The establishment is still owned by these parties, but Mr. Green having retired from the active management in February, 1891, the firm is now Ferrin & Weber. Samuel H. Coon has been city editor of the Times since it passed into the hands of its present owners. From its establishment in 1860 to the present time the Times has advocated the principles of the Republican party. A weekly issue has been continued since the daily was started.

Charles F. Dickinson, who was publisher of the Olean Times from March, 1865, to June, 1871, was born in Ontario county, December 14, 1829. He resided in Branchport, Yates county, until 1859, pursuing the vocation of a shoemaker. He then removed to Penn Yan and held a clerical position in the county clerk's office for three years. Leaving Penn Yan he purchased the Reporter at Angelica, Allegany county, which he published in connection with his brother, George W., until he purchased the Times in 1865. He then disposed of his interest in the Reporter to his brother and gave his attention to the Times during the remainder of his life. Mr. Dickinson was a man of retiring disposition, but had a warm heart and kindly nature, and was highly esteemed by those who knew him. His widow, Martha B., was a woman of unusual mental endowment, and was prominently engaged for many years in the temperance reform movement. While engaged in this work she married Hon. John O'Donnell, State senator from Lewis county, and removed to Lowville, where she has since resided.

George N. Wood, publisher of the Times from September, 1884, to September, 1887, was born at Starkey, Yates county, November 11, 1859. When about ten years old his parents removed to Burlingame, Kan., where his youth and early manhood were spent. In 1876 he returned east and entered the employ of his uncle, George W. Dickinson, publisher of the Olean Times. He was in the office of the Times as book-keeper and business and editorial assistant most of the time from that date until his purchase of the Times in 1884. He was an enterprising and energetic young man and a very efficient business manager.

In April, 1865, J. H. Melvin, of Springville, started the Gowanda Bulletin. It was independent in politics, but as the publisher once naively remarked to the writer, "It came out square-toed for the Union, and the week following its birth the southern Confederacy weakened and fell." The Bulletin lived but one year. Melvin subsequently established the Springville Local News, and has been and is now a contributor of humorous, poetical and narrative sketches to several of the Buffalo papers.

The Randolph Register was founded by Southwick & Grierson in September, 1865. When first started it was called the Rural City Budget, but the name did not strike the popular fancy, and it was soon changed to the Register. It was Republican in politics. Grierson had but a brief connection with the paper, selling his interest to Austin L. Topliff. In 1866 Topliff purchased Southwick's interest and became sole proprietor. In the fall of 1867 the paper passed into the hands of William A. Shewman, who was in control until July, 1869, when he sold out to Topliff, who again sold to Shewman in August, 1872. Topliff went to Kansas, where he was connected with various newspaper enterprises. In the presidential campaign of 1872 the Register supported Horace Greeley for president, and was "Liberal Republican" in politics until February, 1874, when Shewman sold out to F. J. Lockwood and E. J. Smith, when it again became Republican. D. D. Lockwood purchased Smith's interest in November, 1875, the firm then becoming F. J. & D. D. Lockwood. The Lockwood Brothers were publishers of the Register until April 2, 1882, when they sold to George W. Roberts and John Mishy. Roberts & Mishy were the publishers until November, 1882, when the interest of Mishy was purchased by Ben S. Dean. Roberts & Dean conducted the paper until May 30, 1885, when Dean sold his interest to Charles W. Terry and removed to Jamestown, where he founded the Jamestown Morning News, of which paper he is still the editor. About a year later Terry came into full control of the paper, which he retained until December, 1885, when he sold his entire interest to Marc D. Johnson & Co. In May, 1890, this firm purchased the Courant of W. A. Shewman, and the name of the firm was changed to The Randolph Publishing Company. In January, 1892, Marc D. Johnson acquired all the stock in the company, and has since been sole proprietor. The Courant was consolidated with the Register March 28, 1892. The Register has been Republican since 1874, and is still of that political faith.

The Weekly Pioneer was started in Franklinville in November, 1865, by H. A. Williams. A few months later A. M. Curtiss became interested in the paper, the firm name being Williams & Curtiss. Subsequently the name of the paper was changed to the Franklinville Pioneer, and in the latter part of 1867 Curtiss sold out to Williams, who shortly after removed the office to Arcade, where he published a paper for a year or two. The Pioneer was independent in politics.

In January, 1867, A. W. Ferrin brought to Ellicottville the press and materials of a defunct newspaper at Springville, and on February 7, 1867, issued the first number of the Cattaraugus Republican. The Republican supplied the need of a Republican paper at the county seat, which was seriously felt after the discontinuance of the Cattaraugus Freeman early in 1866, and it very soon took the place of that old and popular newspaper as an exponent of Republican principles. In May, 1868, the county seat was removed to Little Valley and the Republican accompanied it. January 1, 1873, B. B. Weber became an equal owner in the paper, the firm being Ferrin & Weber. In August, 1873, Ferrin & Weber opened a branch office in Salamanca and from that time on the Republican was dated at Salamanca and Little Valley. The business at Salamanca grew to such proportions that in October, 1875, the press and job department was transferred to that place, and subsequently all the work was done at the Salamanca office. In February, 1876, Ferrin & Weber became the publishers also of the Bradford Semi-Weekly Era. In October, 1877, the paper was made a daily. In May, 1878, Ferrin & Weber sold their interest in the Bradford paper to C. F. Persons, who had been local editor of the Era and had had a proprietary interest in it from the time it was made a daily. In September, 1880, the Republican office was destroyed in the great conflagration at Salamanca. In November following Hon. S. C. Green, of Little Valley, purchased a third interest in the paper, the firm name being changed to Ferrin, Webér & Green. This partnership continued to November, 1883, when Green sold his interest to Ferrin & Weber, who have been since and are still its publishers. The Republican has been a steadfast advocate of Republican doctrines from its first issue. Since December 1, 1887, Messrs. Green, Ferrin & Weber have been owners and publishers of the Olean Times.

The Portville Mirror was started in the village of Portville early in 1867 by B. D. Southwick. The paper was Republican in politics, and had an existence of about a year. Southwick removed the office to Sherman, Chautauqua county, where he published a paper for a time, and from there he went to Mayville, and later to Belmont, N. Y., where he soon after died. The paper at Belmont was continued for some years by his widow.

The Gowanda Gazette was started by John S. Fidler in June, 1867. It was independent in politics with leanings toward Republicanism. The Gazette was published by Fidler for about ten years, when he sold out to John J. Horton and E. D. Deming, who issued the Gowanda Enterprise as an independent paper. For some two years under Fidler, beginning in 1869, W. B. Howland was editor of the Gazette. After leaving Gowanda in 1871 Howland was for five years editor and publisher of the Advertiser at Kinderhook, N. Y., for seven years editor and publisher of the Courier at Chatham, N. Y., and for about five years editor and publisher of the Tribune at Cambridge, Mass. While at Chatham he founded the Outing Magazine, of which he was editor. He was also in editorial charge for two years after Outing was consolidated with the Wheelman. Mr. Howland is at the present writing the publisher and general manager of the Christian Union of New York city. Deming retired from the Enterprise in November, 1880, and engaged in various journalistic enterprises. He is now connected with the Shoe and Leather Review, published in Boston, Mass. Horton continued as publisher of the Enterprise until January 28, 1887, when he sold to S. Clay Torrance and Merle D. Colby. During the years he owned the Enterprise, and subsequently, Horton was extensively engaged in show printing and devoted his time and energies to that part of the business. For several years the editorial work was principally done by Hon. William H. Stuart. In the summer of 1891 Horton moved his show printing establishment to Cleveland, Ohio. Torrance & Colby changed the name of the paper to Our Public Interests, and made it a prohibition organ. April 5, 1888, they sold the paper to a stock company composed of Gowanda gentlemen, who changed the name to the Gowanda Herald and made it a Republican paper with James Kavanaugh as editor. In December, 1890, Horton bought the stock of The Herald Publishing Company, and continued the publication of the paper with Kavanaugh as editor until February 6, 1891, when he sold it to George I. Lincoln, who in turn sold it to Charles D. Shults of the Cherry Creek News on April 10, 1891. The Herald is published by Shults, and is Republican.

After selling out at Gowanda J. S. Fidler started a paper at Cattaraugus under the name of the Gazette, which was published for a time, and was then removed to Salamanca, where it was issued in 1880 in the interests of the Greenback party. It had a precarious existence in Salamanca for a few months only, and was then removed to Scio, N. Y.

The Town Talk, a semi-monthly independent paper, was started by A. H. McClure at Allegany in August, 1874. In May, 1875, it was enlarged and the name changed to the Allegany Journal. In August, 1875, it was sold to J. J. Barker and changed to a weekly. Barker remained in control only about ten months, when the paper reverted to McClure, who was its publisher until January, 1877, when a half interest was sold to A. Pfirsch. With the advent of the latter to the firm the Journal became Democratic in politics, but in June following it became an exponent of the principles of the Greenback party. In 1880 Pfirsch became sole proprietor, and continued its publisher until its suspension a few months later. After the suspension of the Journal McClure published the Monthly Infidel for a short time.

The Weekly Argus was established at Franklinville it September, 1875, by Francis M. Perley. It was neutral in politics and has so continued up to the present time. On April 1, 1889, Perley transferred the paper to his son, Charles A., and removed to Waverly, Tioga county, where he purchased the Advocate, of which paper he is still the publisher. When the Argus changed hands in 1889 the name was changed to the Chronicle, which name it still bears. C. A. Perley is still its editor and publisher.

With the extension of the oil development down the Tuna valley from Bradford the village of Limestone took on a new life and ambition, and among the results was the Tuna Valley Oil News, which made its appearance in 1876. Charles F. Topliff was the publisher, and in politics it favored the Greenback party. In September, 1878, the office was removed to Jamestown and used in the publication of the People's Press, a Greenback sheet that had but a brief existence.

The Limestone Times was the name of a weekly paper started in May, 1878. It was owned by a stock company composed of Limestone citizens, and Robert Troup was the editor and manager. Troup was soon succeeded by J. Hill Thompson, and in November, 1878, the name was changed to the Limestone Telegraph. It had but a brief existence thereafter.

The Limestone Reporter was published by Ferrin & Weber of Salamanca with Shep. L. Vibbard as local editor and manager, beginning in February, 1879, and closing in September, 1880. The failure of the Limestone oil field to meet the expectations of the people and operators led to an abandonment of all newspaper enterprises in that village.

The Boy's Argus was a small amateur paper started in East Randolph by O. M. Jeffords and A. H. Holt in September, 1873. In March, 1874, it was enlarged to eight pages and the name changed to the Empire Herald. In September, 1875, Holt sold his interest to Jeffords, who afterwards discontinued the paper.

The Pine Valley News was started in 1876 by E. F. Beach. It was independent in politics, and was published by Beach until 1878, when he sold to Wheeler & Wilson. In 1879 Wilson sold to Wheeler, and in 1881 Wheeler sold to Charles J. Shults. Wheeler is now on the editorial staff of the Buffalo Times. Shults published the News until November, 1885, when he removed the office to Cherry Creek and consolidated it with the Cherry Creek Monitor, changing the name to the Cherry Creek News. Shults is still the publisher of the News and also of the Gowanda Herald.

While the rag money fever was raging in the political field George W. Mason started a paper at Salamanca in 1877, which he called the County Record, devoted to the principles of the Greenback party. The Record never got much of a foothold, and expired shortly after the presidential election of 1880. Mason went to Warsaw, N. Y., and started a monthly under the title of the Pioneers, which had a brief existence.

The Olean Record was established by Henry M. McKenzie, the first issue appearing January 5, 1877. It supported the principles of the Greenback party. McKenzie continued as its publisher until November 22, 1879, when he sold to W. W. Henry and Charles F. Persons. Mr. McKenzie came to Cattaraugus county from Michigan, and was in the employ at first of the Chemical Extract Company at Vandalia in a clerical capacity. Later he filled an editorial position on the Olean Times under George W. Dickinson, and subsequently started the Olean Record as above stated. McKenzie was a journalist of more than ordinary ability, and considering what he had to do with he made the Record a first-class paper. But little is known of McKenzie's antecedents. One of his intimate friends informs us that he had a brilliant war record, having enlisted as a private in a Michigan regiment and rising to a colonelcy. When he sold the Record at Olean he went to Leadville, Col., and took the editorship of a mining journal, but died within a year of a lung trouble. Henry & Persons changed the name of the paper to the Democrat, and the politics were made to conform to the name. In 1880 a daily was issued from mid-summer until after the presidential election. Henry retired from the firm in April, 1881. When the excitement attending the opening of the Allegany oil field was at its height in 1881 Persons started a morning paper called the Daily Herald, which was particularly devoted to oil matters. Pat. Boyle, subsequently manager of the Standard Oil Company's Newspaper Bureau, was interested for a time in this daily venture. When a daily paper was started at Richburg, Allegany county, about a year later, Persons merged the Daily Herald into a Sunday paper called the Sunday Herald. The Herald office was destroyed by fire in August, 1883. Persons then bought the Sunday Mirror office and consolidated the Mirror with the Herald. In June, 1885, the Sunday issue was discontinued and the daily revived. In February, 1885, H. D. Sibley purchased an interest in the concern, but retired in July, 1886, and engaged for a time in journalistic work in Auburn, N. Y. In January, 1889, Persons went to New York as manager for the American Press Association, and a new firm was formed under the name of Persons, Sibley & Spaulding, the members of the firm being C. F. Persons, H. D. Sibley and Preston D. Spaulding. Persons retired from the firm January 1, 1891. Spaulding died May 28, 1892. In the July following Sibley purchased the interest of Spaulding, and is now sole proprietor. From the purchase of the Record by Henry & Persons in 1879 a weekly paper has been issued from the Herald office known as the Democrat, which has supported the principles of the Democratic party.

Preston D. Spaulding was born in Deerfield, Warren county, Ohio, September 10, 1867, and had lived in Olean for about fourteen years. He learned the printer's trade in the office of the Olean Times and was with the Times until 1887. He then took a course in the Poughkeepsie Business College, and in February, 1889, became one of the publishers of the Herald. His death was caused by consumption, and he died at the home of a sister in Cleveland, Ohio, having just returned to that place from Colorado, whither he went in the previous January with the hope that the climate would effect a restoration of health. Mr. Spaulding was a young man highly esteemed by a large circle of friends.

The Mirror was a Sunday paper started in Olean in 1882 by C. F. Persons. It was soon after sold to Rev. J. J. Keyes, who changed it to the Saturday Evening Mirror. Ben S. Dean was associated with Keyes in the publication of the paper for a time. It was a non-partisan sheet with Republican leanings, and its publication was continued until August, 1883, when the office was purchased by C. F. Persons, to take the place of the Herald office, destroyed by fire.

The Weekly Courier was founded by W. A. Shewman and W. W. Canfield at Randolph in January, 1878. It was independent in politics until 1884, when it came out in support of the Democratic party. In 1886 Canfield sold out to Shewman. He subsequently took a position on the Utica Observer, and is now city editor of that paper. Shewman continued its publication until May, 1890, when he sold to The Randolph Publishing Company. From that time until March 28, 1892, O. M. Jeffords was editor, and the paper was Democratic. On the latter date the paper was consolidated with the Register, under the name of the Randolph Register and Weekly Courier. The consolidated paper is Republican.

The Yorkshire Press was established at Yorkshire Center by Miss Abbie E. Hufstader in April, 1882. It was an advocate of prohibition principles and W. C. T. U. temperance work. In May, 1887, Miss Hufstader sold to W. F. Persons and went to Lockport, N. Y., where she started a prohibition paper. This venture was not a success and the paper was discontinued. Miss Hufstader still has a job printing office in Lockport, and is engaged in evangelistic temperance work. Upon its purchase by Persons the Press was made independent in politics, and so continues. Persons is at present publisher also of the Holland Review, Arcade Record and Sardinia Censor.

In 1882 H. L. Green started in Salamanca a monthly publication under the name of the Free thinkers' Magazine. It was devoted to the promulgation of free-thought principles and ideas. Since November, 1886, the publication office of the magazine has been in Buffalo.

In 1882 Robert B. Carr started an independent paper at Ellicottville under the name of the News. It was conducted by him until December, 1885, when it passed into the hands of Hollis W. Hill. It was published by Hill until May, 1886, when it was leased by Brand Brothers, who made it a Democratic sheet and continued its publication until July, 1887. At that time it passed into the hands of Hon. C. P. Vedder, but was published by E. C. Brand as an independent sheet until May, 1888, when Brand retired. It was then edited for a short time by Miss Greenman and later by W. L. Rasey. In 1889 Arthur J. Salisbury became editor and publisher, and still retains that position. It is now Republican in politics.

The Franklinville Star was started by J. A. Orr in July, 1883, as a prohibition organ. In July, 1885, Orr sold out to a stock company known as the Star Publishing Company. The paper was removed to Machias and the name changed to the Cattaraugus Star. The paper has been edited and managed for the Star Company by John C. Smith, and is still the organ of the prohibitionists of the county.

The Post was established at Ellicottville in 1884 by James Moffit & Son, the first number being dated November 24th. The paper is still issued by Moffit & Son and is Republican in politics.

In October, 1884, an independent paper was started at Cattaraugus by J. D. Jones under the name of the Cattaraugus Gazette. In the following month George Straight purchased the paper and the name was changed to the Cattaraugus Times. The paper was published by Straight, assisted by his son Charles D., until 1885, when the latter became the sole proprietor. In 1888 the name was changed to the Cattaraugus County Times, and in 1890 it was made a Republican paper. Charles D. Straight is still the editor and publisher.

The Lively Times was the title of a monthly paper started in West Valley in May, 1886, by A. O. Tillinghast, an enterprising merchant in that village. It was independent in politics and was largely devoted to agricultural matters. It was published for four years and was then merged in the Post at Ellicottville.

The Cattaraugus Journal was founded at Franklinville, August 23, 1888, by Levi T. Spring. It was Republican in politics until March, 1889, when Ward Morton purchased a half interest. It was then made independent.

Spring died August 31, 1890, and from that time Morton has been editor and manager. He has been sole owner since April, 1891. In September, 1891, the name was changed to the Franklinville Journal. Levi T. Spring was a son of the late Judge Samuel S. Spring. He was born in Franklinville, June 28, 1855. He was educated at Ten Broeck Free Academy, and learned the trade of marble cutter. In 1876 he went west, working at his trade in Kansas, Nebraska and Texas. In 1880 he returned to Arcade, N. Y., and in January, 1882, married Myra Lyon, of Dalton, Livingston county. He was for a time in partnership with his father-in-law, Plin B. Lyon, in a country store. He returned to Franklinville in 1884 and taught painting classes in that and neighboring villages for a year or two. In 1886 he opened a job printing office in Franklinville, and in 1888 he started the Journal as above noted. Mr. Spring was a bright and talented young man, and doubtless would have made his mark in the field of journalism had he lived.

In April, 1889, M. D. Colby started an independent paper at Little Valley under the title of the County Seat Chronicle. In May R. K. Godding became an equal partner in the business, and about the middle of July the paper passed into the hands of Godding and George C. Wilson, who changed the name to the Capital. Wilson & Godding published the Capital for a few weeks, when the firm dissolved and Godding became publisher. Subsequently he turned the concern over to Wilson, who ran the paper until March 21, 1890, when it was discontinued.

The Educator, a monthly journal devoted to the education of the young men and women of our country in the current events of the day, was started in January, 1889, by Prof. W. H. Smith, A. B., principal of the Portville Union School. The publication office was in Buffalo until December, 1892, when the printing was begun at Little Valley by W. H. Smith, a brother of the publisher. All the other work, including the setting of the type, is done at Portville. The matter in the Educator is all original, and the journal has attained a monthly circulation of 25,000 copies.

In August, 1890, W. S. Norton and D. McMillen started a paper at Olean under the name of the Olean Sunday Hatchet. It was independent in politics with strong Democratic proclivities. McMillen retired from the paper in September, 1890. Its publication was continued by Norton until March, 1891, when he discontinued it to accept a position on the reportorial staff of the Buffalo Courier.

The latest newspaper within the county is the East Randolph Enterprise, which was started by W. A. Shewman, formerly connected with the Register and later with the Courant. The first number of the Enterprise was issued October 7, 1891. The paper is Democratic in politics.

The preceding sketch is but a brief statement of facts with reference to the press of Cattaraugus county. If space permitted I would be glad to present some interesting personal experiences illustrating the vicissitudes of Cattaraugus county journalism, especially in the trying pioneer and war of the Rebellion periods. These vicissitudes are indicated in some degree by the frequent newspaper changes and suspensions, and in the change of names, which our brethren of the press in the early days seemed to have imagined would in some way propitiate the Goddess of Fortune and bring them success where there had been failure. Within the past twenty-five years there has been a remarkable increase in the circulation of local papers. In 1867, when the writer came into the county, it had but seven newspapers. The most prosperous and widely circulated paper in the county up to that time—the Cattaraugus Freeman—reached a circulation of eleven hundred, and this was considered to be phenomenally large. The average circulation of the other papers was considerably less. Now there are fourteen weekly newspapers and two dailies in the county. One of the weeklies has had a circulation for over twenty years of more than twenty-five hundred. Three or four others, at least, have a circulation exceeding that of the Freeman, and others approach it. It may well be said that this is a newspaper age, and it is unquestionably true that the great increase in newspaper circulation has had a marked influence in quickening and stimulating mental activity among the people.

There has also been a very marked improvement in the publishing facilities in the county. The publication of a newspaper in the days before "patent insides" or stereotype news plates were thought of, and when the edition had to be pulled off on a hand-press at the rate of "a token" an hour, required an amount of physical labor that would appal the young journalists of the present day. Large circulations under those circumstances were not desirable, and when all things are considered it must be admitted that our brethren of the press did exceedingly well in those early days. The first cylinder press in the county was put in the office of the Cattaraugus Freeman about 1864. This press went to Olean into the Advertiser office in 1866, and was destroyed by fire in 1868. The next cylinder press was put in the office of the Cattaraugus Republican in 1870. For many years cylinder presses have been almost a necessity, and nearly every office in the county is now well equipped in this respect. The jobbing departments of the offices have been improved in a corresponding degree. I am pleased to be able to say that the newspapers now in existence in the county compare very favorably with those of any rural county in the State. Most of them have passed through the experimental period and are upon a basis which warrants the conclusion that they are here to stay.

Augustine W. Ferrin* was born in the town of Concord, near Springville, Erie county, March 9, 1843. His father was Adna P., youngest son of Ebenezer Ferrin, a pioneer of Concord, who emigrated into that wilderness country from New Hampshire about 1816. His mother was Lucinda, daughter of

*By Wm. Adams.

William Sanders, a pioneer of Sardinia, N. Y., who came from Connecticut. A. W. Ferrin was born on the farm located and cleared by his paternal grandfather, but while he was a child his father removed to Yorkshire, this county, where the family resided until 1851, when they returned to the homestead. The father died of typhoid fever in 1854, and left an invalid widow and four small children. Augustine, aged eleven, was the oldest child and the only son. Owing to these circumstances he had but meager opportunities for securing an education. A few years at a country district school and three or four terms in the Springville Academy comprised all his educational advantages. The pressing necessities of the family compelled him to become a "bread winner" at the age of fourteen years. When but thirteen he spent six months in the printing office of Lucius C. Sanders, a maternal uncle, who published the American Citizen in the campaign of 1856, at Springville. The office was sold in December, 1856, and young Ferrin went back to school for a year. In December, 1857, he entered the office of the Springville Herald as an apprentice, where he remained until August, 1861, when he enlisted in Co. F, 116th N. Y. Vols., for service in the war of the Rebellion. In 1859, during leisure hours, he published for several months an amateur paper called the Penny Weekly. His mother died in the winter of 1860, leaving his sisters dependent upon him for support. The 116th Regiment rendezvoused in Buffalo and left that city in September, 1862, for the front. At Baltimore it was ordered into a camp of instruction and remained a couple of months; it then joined General Banks's expedition which fitted out at Fortress Monroe and proceeded to New Orleans for operations in the Gulf Department. Young Ferrin was with his regiment through the Port Hudson and Donaldsonville campaigns, but upon its return to Baton Rouge in August, 1863, he was sent to the hospital for disability, from which he was honorably discharged in October following. He returned to Springville in December, 1863, and in January following took charge of the Springville Chronicle as editor and publisher. April 1, 1865, he became the city editor of the Buffalo Express, but by reason of failing health he was obliged to resign that position in the following September. The remainder of 1865 and the year 1866 were spent in efforts to regain his health, which were measurably successful. In January, 1867, he purchased the Springville Herald establishment and removed the press and materials to Ellcottville, where he started the Cattaraugus Republican, the first number appearing February 7, 1867. The Republican was received with popular favor, and very soon had a substantial patronage and a large circulation.

When the county seat was removed to Little Valley in May, 1868, the Republican office accompanied it. Mr. Ferrin's health broke down again in 1870, but with the exercise of great care he was able to attend to his editorial duties. January 1, 1873, his brother-in-law, B. B. Weber, who had been an assistant in the office since January 1, 1871, became equal partner in the business, and since then the two have been partners in this and other publishing enterprises, brief mention of which are made in this chapter. Again, in 1879, the health of Mr. Ferrin became seriously impaired, and he spent a part of the winter and the early summer of 1880 on the Pacific coast, with the hope of restoration, which was fortunately partially realized; but the strain put upon him in consequence of the destruction of the Republican office by fire in August, 1880, broke him down more effectually than ever. During the winter of 1880-81 he was completely incapacitated for work, and it was generally supposed he would not long survive. There came an improvement in the following summer, and in October, 1881, he engaged to do editorial work on the Buffalo Christian Advocate. This he was obliged to give up in March, 1882, and several months were spent in outdoor occupations to aid in a physical recovery. Health came back slowly, and in the winter following he was able to resume some of his duties in the office of the Republican. When Hon. S. C. Green retired from the firm on November 1, 1883, Mr. Ferrin was able to take full editorial direction of the paper as in former years, which he has continued to the present time. Mr. Weber has had charge of the business department since he became a partner. February 25, 1891, Mr. Ferrin was appointed United States agent for the New York Indians, which position he still ably fills.

Mr. Ferrin began his business life hampered with poverty, and with but little physical power; but he has an able brain machine. By his great energy he very soon came to the front as an editor, and made the Republican the best family newspaper in the county and the reliable political organ of the Republican party. In fact his paper has few equals and no superiors in all the rural districts of western New York. As a politician he has been active, alert, and brave, but always honorable, and has generously used his great influence to help other men to high offices, but has never sought "place and position" for himself. Mr. Ferrin is liberal, public spirited, and enterprising, and in the fullest and most comprehensive meaning of the term a good citizen. His religious connections are with the Congregational church of Salamanca, of whose Sunday-school he is the superintendent, and has been most of the time since he came to the place in 1883. He also served as superintendent of the Sunday-school several years during his residence in Little Valley. September 24, 1868, he married Miss Anna E. Weber, daughter of Matthew Weber, of Springville, who died February 14, 1872. January 1, 1874, he married Miss Flavilla J. Van Hoesen, daughter of Matthias Van Hoesen, of Preble, Cortland county. A. W. Ferrin, Jr., their son, was born September 1, 1875; Susie L., their daughter, was born September 18, 1878.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE MEDICAL PROFESSION.

[By A. D. LAKE, M. D.]

IN COMPILING a history of medicine in Cattaraugus county it is to be noted that only from a comparatively recent period has it been possible to obtain accurate data either as regards methods of practice and procedure or for biographical sketches of the earlier practitioners. It has been necessary in both instances to rely largely upon tradition. It is impossible to determine definitely the first physician to locate in the county. All the evidence at command points to the probability that it was John McClure, who not only practiced medicine but taught school at McClure Settlement in the town of Franklinville as early as 1806 or '07. Norman Smith followed his profession in Olean in 1814. James Trowbridge, whom many of the present generation will remember, was an assistant surgeon in the War of 1812, and came to Ellicottville in 1816. He later practiced also in other towns. Alson Leavenworth was another early practitioner who located in Ellicottville in 1818. His business for several years extended over the entire county as well as in adjoining counties and in Pennsylvania, covering more territory than any physician who has ever practiced within the limits of Cattaraugus. His business was more largely devoted to surgery than any of his predecessors. Sands N. Crumb came into the town of Conewango as early as 1820, and a few years later removed to Gowanda. Andrew Mead, who added to his qualifications as a doctor considerable legal skill, and is remembered well for many peculiar characteristics, came to Olean in 1820, while Charles McLouth located in Franklinville a year later. Augustus Crary came into the county soon after. At about the same time Levi Goldsborough settled in Otto. Dr. Goldsborough was a typical pioneer physician; of splendid physique, of unsurpassed endurance, and always prepared for emergencies. Following these men in quick succession were Thomas J. Wheeler, Thomas J. Williams, Edwin Finn, Paul Clark, and others, all of whom have long since passed off the stage of activity.

These pioneers in medicine found themselves in an almost unbroken wilderness. In many instances, in the urgency of the work they were called upon to perform, they were compelled to reach their patients, often at long distances away, through paths in the woods with no other guide save the trees "blazed" by the settler's axe. It is a well authenticated fact that in some cases they carried with them axes to "browse" their horses and "spot" trees that they might know their way back. When detained by storms or swollen streams they were forced to spend the night in the woods on improvised beds of hemlock boughs. Their only means of conveyance, when not forced to go on foot, was on horseback, with their saddlebags strapped on beside them. Their remedies, of necessity, were of the crudest character, often consisting of indigenous roots, herbs and barks. The same condition existed as regards surgical appliances. The instruments used in operations were often obtained from the chest of the carpenter or manufactured for the occasion by the nearest blacksmith.

Their distance from centers of medical knowledge, and their infrequent opportunities for consultation, compelled them to rely almost wholly upon their own resources. They were, of necessity, self-dependent and consequently self-reliant. As the county became more thickly populated, and highways took the place of foot-paths and Indian trails, these in turn to be followed by railways, thus giving better opportunity for communication with distant points, the evolution which the rapid march of civilization ever shows was seen in more modern methods of practice. It may be truthfully said that the physicians of Cattaraugus county have always been in the front line of progress, and that at the present time, both in general and special practice, all of the more important medical and surgical work is done by physicians and surgeons residents of the county.

During the late war the county contributed to the medical corps of the army, as surgeons and assistant surgeons, several men who did noble work in the service, notable among them being Hon. Henry Van Aernam, surgeon of the 154th Regiment; Corydon C. Rugg, assistant surgeon of the same regiment; George W. Barr, surgeon of the 64th Regiment; and Peter Wilson, who went out in the employ of the Sanitary Commission.

There are now in active practice in the county ninety-six physicians, of which number seventy-two are registered as regular, seventeen as eclectic, and seven as homeopathic.

There are three active medical societies deriving their membership in whole or in part from the practitioners of the county, viz.: The Cattaraugus County Medical Society, composed of regular physicians residents of the county; the Lake Erie Medical Society, which receives as members all legally qualified practitioners regardless of school; and the Homeopathic Medical Society of Western New York.

By an act of the Legislature passed April 4, 1806, five or more physicians in a county or in adjoining counties could organize a medical society with power to grant licenses to practice medicine in the State. The Medical Society of the State of New York was legally organized in 1807 and possessed the right to grant diplomas. This society has maintained its organization to the present day. Its membership is made up of delegates from the county societies.

The first attempt to form a medical society in Cattaraugus county was in 1824, but no organization was effected. It is quite probable that not enough resident physicians could be got together at that time to legally organize, for the entire population was not far from 8,000, and the practice of medicine, especially in a newly-settled country, was not confined to such strict lines as it is in our generation. Hence the failure of those practitioners to launch successfully a medical society in the then wilds of "cold" Cattaraugus.

The subject of organization, it seems, was not revived until 1833, when T. P. Whipple, H. Davison, Augustus Crary, Thomas J. Williams, Elijah Harmon, Lewis Riggs, Oliver Guernsey, Edwin Finn, and C. Ellsworth assembled and formally organized the Cattaraugus County Medical Society, but apparently left no record of officers elected that year. From what is learned through tradition the society held regular meetings until 1844, the last one being convened in January of that year at Daniel I. Huntley's in Ellicottville. In 1842 two years before, there were on its roll as members these names: Thomas J. Wheeler, Thomas J. Williams, Seth Field, J. P. Powers, Isaac Shaw, Everett Stickney, K. V. R. Lansingh, Alson Leavenworth, Paul Clark, J. B. Staunton, Abel Wilder, S. G. Ellis, Lambert Whitney, Andrew Mead, Charles McLouth, Samuel Wilcox, S. D. Buzzell, Elijah Dresser, Lewis Riggs, Elijah Harmon, J. S. Jones, Augustus Crary, and Levi Goldsborough. The officers, as far as can be ascertained, were:

Presidents.—T. J. Wheeler, elected 1834; Edwin Finn, 1836; Elijah Harmon, 1837; T. J. Williams, 1844.

Vice-Presidents.—Lewis Riggs, elected 1834; Charles McLouth, 1837; David Bennie, 1844.

Secretaries and Treasurers.—H. Davison, elected 1834; T. J. Williams, 1836; J. B. Staunton, 1844.

Censors.—Elijah Harmon, T. P. Whipple, T. J. Williams, Lewis Riggs, and H. Davison, 1834; J. B. Staunton, T. J. Williams, Everett Stickney, Lambert Whitney, and T. J. Wheeler, 1844.

The present Cattaraugus County Medical Society was organized in Irvine hall, Ellicottville, on June 4, 1867, in conformity with the provisions of the statutes regarding the practice of medicine in the State of New York. A code of by-laws was discussed and adopted and one hundred copies ordered printed and distributed. Thus the regular county medical society was legally and successfully launched and has continued to the present time with considerable regularity, but with various degrees of professional interest. During the first few years the members evinced a good deal of enthusiasm in the discussions and papers, which covered a wide scope of medical literature. As the years passed interest waned until at one time (in 1886) it became a serious question whether to continue or disband. Fortunately this state of affairs aroused to new activity those who had come to use the name of the society more for outside show than for mutual benefit, and in the past half dozen years it has once more sprung into a new life and a larger sphere of usefulness. This has been caused partly by modern methods of practice and partly by competing in enthusiasm and prominence with neighboring medical societies.

The charter members of the Cattaraugus County Medical Society (those who joined June 4, 1867) were Francis Findlay, Franklinville; H. M. Gale, Salamanca; E. S. Stewart, T. J. Williams, and Horace Arnold, Ellicottville; George St. John, Yorkshire Center; and H. L. Ensworth, Salamanca.

Among the papers read at the various meetings may be mentioned the following: "Anæsthetics in Obstetrics," Dr. Woodruff; "Pathology, Ætiology, and Treatment of Varicocele," Henry Van Aernam; "Acute Rheumatic Fever," L. H. Kitchel; "Electricity in Medical Surgery" and "Scarlatina," H. D. Walker; "Puerperal Convulsions," Dr. Nichols; "Female Perinæum," F. H. Bartlett; "Neurasthenia," S. P. Jones; "Contagious Diseases," A. D. Lake; "The Microscope in Medical Diagnosis," H. D. Walker and L. L. Deck; "Some Points in Abdoment Surgery," H. D. H. Ingraham, of Buffalo; "Eye Symptoms in Disease," A. A. Hubbell; "Uric Acid Diathesis," William B. Johnston; "The Law and the Doctors in the State of New York," C. Z. Lincoln, Esq.; "A Higher Medical Education," Dr. Crandall; "Hereditary Chorea," Clarence King; "Puerperal Fever," William B. Johnston.

The members of the society since the organization are as follows:

1867, October 8, John L. Eddy, Zenas G. Bullock, Cornelius H. Bartlett, James Nichols, Melville C. Follett, Charles A. Woodruff, Alexis E. Willard, C. W. Bond, Elijah Dresser. December 4, Ira J. Brownson, Thomas J. Wheeler. 1868, October 7, Lyman Twomley, Simeon V. Pool. December 16, H. S. Smith. 1870, June 1, A. S. Bonsteel, Thomas J. King, A. B. Parsons, H. S. Bowen, A. D. Lake. 1873, June 4, Phipps Lake. September 10, Hiram D. Walker, Henry Van Aernam, Edward Torrey, Luther H. Kitchel. 1874, June 3, C. O. Day, E. A. Chapman. September 2, Nelson Saunders, M. C. Bissell, O. A. Tompkins, Ransom Terry, E. J. Burlingame. 1875, June 2, Wallace Sibley, George Lattin. September 2, Harmon J. Ashley, Fred C. Beals, E. Burdick, E. M. Cheney. 1878, June 10, A. A. Hubbell, S. S. Bedient. 1879, June 4, James I. Williams. 1881, March 2, Frank H. Bartlett, E. J. Loughlin, S. J. Mudge, A. K. Corbin, W. H. Sage. 1883, December 5, E. W. Dutcher, B. M. Spencer, John P. Colgrove, Lyman L. Deck, William H. Dukeman, T. C. James, J. P. Powers. 1884, March 5, J. H. Sackrider, Edward Torrey, S. B. McClure, Lambert Whitney. June 4, S. P. Jones. September 3, R. F. Rowley, F. E. Tuttle, M. C. Hawley. 1885, June 3, S. Z. Fisher. 1886, June 2, S. J. Spencer. 1887, December 7, William B. Johnston, C. M. Walrath, V. A. Ellsworth, F. P. Blair, H. D. Snover, G. B. Crandall, Clarence King, Robert R. Seyse. 1888, December 5, Alfred W. Smallman. 1889, September 4, E. M. Shaffner. 1892, December 1, J. E. K. Morris, T. B. Loughlen, W. E. McDuffee, W. H. Vincent, E. B. Burdick, Joseph C. Clark, Ambrose E. Smith, W. Carl Dallenbaugh, J. D. Maloy, John L. Eddy.

The officers have been as follows, being elected in June of each year:

Presidents.—Francis Findlay, 1867; Elijah Dresser, 1868; T. J. Wheeler, 1869; James Nichols, 1870; C. H. Bartlett, 1871 and 1877; no meeting, 1872; Zenas G. Bullock, 1873-74; Henry Van Aernam, 1875; E. S. Stewart, 1876; A. D. Lake, 1878-79; no records, 1880-83; Wallace Sibley, 1884; John P. Colgrove, 1885-86; O. A. Tompkins, 1887; no record, 1888; Lyman L. Deck, 1889-90; no record, 1861; George Lattin, 1892.

Vice-presidents.—H. M. Gale, 1867; T. J. Williams, 1868; James Nichols, 1869; T. J. King, 1870; Lyman Twomley, 1871; no meeting, 1872; A. D. Lake, 1873; H. S. Smith, 1874; C. H. Bartlett, 1875; S. V. Pool, 1876; C. O. Day, 1877; O. A. Tompkins, 1878; E. S. Stewart, 1879; no records, 1880-83; George Lattin, 1884-85; Edward Torrey, 1886; S. J. Spencer, 1887 and 1889; no record, 1888; Clarence King, 1890; no record, 1891; F. C. Beals, 1892.

Secretaries and Treasurers.—E. S. Stewart, 1867-68, 1873-75; H. S. Smith, 1869-71; no meeting, 1872. (Beginning with 1876 the offices were filled separately—S., secretary; T., treasurer.) H. S. Smith, S., 1876; E. S. Stewart, T., 1876; A. D. Lake, S., 1877; Ira J. Brownson, T., 1877-79; George Lattin, S., 1878-79; no record, 1880-83; Edward Torrey, S., 1884-85; B. M. Spencer, T., 1884-85. (Since 1886 the two offices have been held by a single incumbent.) L. L. Deck, 1886-87; no record, 1888; M. C. Hawley, 1889-92.

Censors, elected in the order named.—T. J. Williams, H. M. Gale, George St. John, James Nichols, A. E. Willard, C. W. Bond, S. V. Pool, E. S. Stewart, Charles A. Woodruff, Francis Findlay, H. S. Smith, Z. G. Bullock, L. H. Kitchel, Ransom Terry, A. D. Lake, Lyman Twomley, George Lattin, H. D. Walker, Henry Van Aernam, C. H. Bartlett, O. A. Tompkins, H. J. Ashley, F. C. Beals, Wallace Sibley, F. H. Bartlett, S. B. McClure, S. P. Jones, Clarence King, C. O. Day, W. B. Johnston, S. Z. Fisher, L. L. Deck, A. W. Smallman.

Delegates to State Medical Society.—T. J. Wheeler and E. S. Stewart, 1867 and 1869; C. H. Bartlett and Z. G. Bullock, 1868; James Nichols and J. L. Eddy, 1873; J. L. Eddy and C. O. Day, 1883; A. D. Lake and C. H. Bartlett, 1884; S. V. Pool and V. A. Ellsworth, 1887; S. Z. Fisher and L. L. Deck, 1888; S. V. Pool, 1890; S. V. Pool and F. C. Beals, 1892.

Delegates to the National Medical Association.—T. J. Wheeler, 1868; C. H. Bartlett, Henry Van Aernam, and A. D. Lake, 1878; C. H. Bartlett and A. D. Lake, 1881.

The Lake Erie Medical Society, whose membership is derived from the legally qualified practitioners of a portion of Cattaraugus, Erie, and Chautauqua counties, was organized at Angola, Erie county, May 1, 1886. The following physicians have been its officers:

Presidents.—J. G. Thompson, 1886; M. B. Shaw, 1887; Wm. Putnam, 1888; A. D. Lake, 1889; E. E. Davis, 1890; W. M. Ward, 1891; R. E. Moss, 1892.

Vice-presidents.—M. B. Shaw, 1886; Wm. Putnam, 1887; A. D. Lake, 1888; E. E. Davis, 1889; W. M. Ward, 1890; W. J. French, 1891; J. Cherry, 1892.

Secretaries.—W. M. Ward, 1886-87; J. Cherry, 1888-89; R. E. Moss, 1890-91; William Teft, 1892.

The regular meetings of the society are held quarterly at Gowanda, Forestville, Angola, and North Collins. At its various sessions the following papers have been presented: "Our New Organization," W. M. Ward; "Adherent Prepuce," J. G. Thompson; "Mental Influence in Medicine," William Putnam; "Asphyxia," M. B. Shaw; "Gleanings in the History of Medicine," J. Cherry; "Dislocation of the Head of the Humerus," M. B. Shaw; "Diabetes," J. G. Thompson; "Duties of the Physician to his Patients and to the Community," L. R. Potter; "Asiatic Cholera and its Treatment," F. E. Tuttle; "Typhoid Fever," A. D. Lake; "Valvular Lesions of the Heart and their Therapeutics," B. C. Johnson.

The Cattaraugus county members of the Lake Erie Medical Society are A. D. Lake, William Putnam, R. E. Moss, C. C. Johnson, J. G. Rugg, J. D. Zwetsch, George Lattin, Horace Babcock, F. E. Tuttle, C. S. Cleland, William Teft, L. W. Tarbox (deceased), Guy B. Crandall, S. V. Pool, W. F. Gardner, S. B. McClure, F. C. Beals, Edward Torrey, F. H. Bartlett, S. J. Mudge, W. B. Johnston, A. W. Smallman.

The Chautauqua and Cattaraugus Counties Homeopathic Medical Society was re-organized in 1866 from a similar society that had ceased to exist. This organization itself had but a brief existence, being disbanded some twelve years later. Most of its members resided and practiced in Chautauqua county. The physicians formerly members of this society belong, many of them, to a new organization called the Homeopathic Medical Society of Western New York, which was organized April 10, 1885. So far as can be ascertained the following is a list of the physicians residing in Cattaraugus county who are members of this last named society: J. D. Zwetsch, Gowanda; De Vere M. Hibbard, Olean; A. H. Babcock, Randolph.

The Eclectic Medical Society of the Thirty-second Senatorial District of the State of New York was organized at Dunkirk, September 25, 1865. It was composed mainly of Chautauqua county physicians. Regular meetings were held at various places each year until 1879, when the organization was allowed to go down. Among its members were many eclectic practitioners who possessed more than a local prominence, and chief among these may be mentioned Dr. C. C. Johnson, of Gowanda, who was foremost in everything looking to the advancement and well being of the society and was much of the time one of its officers. The Cattaraugus county members were Corydon C. Rugg, Corydon C. Johnson, N. F. Marble, Cyrus W. Babcock, Alfred Ayres, C. D. Thompson, A. A. Hubbell, V. A. Ellsworth. The following were the executive officers of the society:

Presidents.—H. C. Taylor, 1865; N. F. Marsh, 1866; C. C. Rugg, 1867; James Fenner, 1868-69; C. C. Johnson, 1870; G. W. Carpenter, 1871-72; A. P. Parsons, 1873-74; A. S. Davis, 1875-77; W. L. Wilbur, 1878; N. F. Marsh, 1879.

Secretaries.—M. M. Fenner, 1865; C. C. Johnson, 1866; N. F. Marsh, 1867; A. P. Parsons, 1868-69; M. M. Fenner, 1870; A. P. Parsons, 1871-72; W. L. Wilbur, 1873-74; A. P. Parsons, 1875-77; C. C. Johnson, 1878-79.

In the following pages something is said, it is believed, of every reputable physician, regardless of school, that ever practiced medicine and resided within the limits of Cattaraugus county—from the earliest settlement down to the present day. Of the pioneer practitioners the material has been gleaned mainly from tradition and occasionally from a lineal descendant, but the data of recent and present doctors were collected by personal visits. The whole represents over three hundred interviews, and is offered to the present and coming generations, particularly to members of the medical profession, as a work comparatively complete and accurate. It shows that over four hundred and twenty physicians have practiced their profession in this county since its first settlement.

The editor desires to state that great credit is due Mr. W. Stanley Child for his indefatigable work in collecting and compiling the material in this chapter. Whatever merit it may possess is largely due to his earnest and painstaking labor.

ALLEGANY.

Dr. Cleveland was the first physician to locate in Allegany. He came in 1838. He was a good practitioner, and was interested in politics as well as in medicine.—See Olean.

Dr. Lane came here in 1842, remained a short time, and went to Chautauqua county.

Hon. Henry Van Aernam.—See Franklinville.

James Parker became a physician here in 1854. He practiced a few years and removed to Cuba, Allegany county, where he died. His brother, W. B. Parker, came the same year and died here in 1858 of typhoid fever. The two were associated in partnership and built up an excellent practice.

Francis Findlay.—See Franklinville.

Dr. Fritts came about 1856. He was here a year or so, but where he came from or where he went to can not be ascertained.

A. P. Phillips, a brother of the celebrated singer, Philip Phillips, located in Allegany village in 1857 and two years later removed to Fredonia, Chautauqua county, where he has attained a more than local reputation as a physician and surgeon.

Adelbert McClary became a student in the office of John L. Eddy during the war and upon his graduation in New York city the two entered into partnership, which continued two or three years, until 1866, when Dr. McClary went to Pennsylvania, and died recently in Coudersport. He was from Andover, Allegany county.

Andrew Mead.—See Olean, where he did the greater part of his medical practice.

Hon. Zenas George Bullock deserves a prominent place not only among the leading physicians of Cattaraugus, but among her eminent citizens as well. He was born in Almond, Allegany county, December 5, 1841, a son of A. H. and Luva Ann (George) Bullock. His primary education was acquired in the district schools, supplemented by a course of study in the Rogersville Seminary in Steuben county, after which he entered the Medical Department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, from which he was graduated March 24, 1867. The following May Dr. Bullock came to Allegany and succeeded to the practice of John L. Eddy, who that year moved to Olean. He remained, a most successful practitioner, until the fall of 1881, when he went to New York city and took up several special courses in the College of Physicians and Surgeons. But in the prime of life and in the midst of this special preparation for a higher usefulness, on March 27, 1882, Dr. Bullock died in New York city, and was buried a few days later from the residence of Dr. H. E. Orcutt, at Hornellsville. In 1864 Mr. Bullock enlisted in the 188th N. Y. Vols., was detailed commissary of the provost guard, and served until the close of the war. In 1876 he was supervisor of Allegany and in the fall of 1879 was elected a member of Assembly, serving honorably in each position one term. He became a member of the County Medical Society on October 8, 1867, president in 1873-74, censor, and delegate to the State Medical Society in 1868. Dr. Bullock married, in the spring of 1869, Flora H., daughter of Dr. H. E. Orcutt. They had an adopted daughter. As a physician Dr. Bullock was well read, scientific, and careful; as a citizen and neighbor he was candid, frank, and sincere; as a husband and father he was kind, loving, sympathetic, and devoted. He was a member of the Presbyterian church and honored that faith by his manly piety and simple belief. Asa W. Bullock, a brother of Zenas G., was graduated from the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery in June, 1873, but has never practiced his profession. He came to Allegany in 1874 and has since kept a drug store.

Charles Day Thompson, born in Vernon, Ohio, January 25, 1833, was graduated from the Cincinnati Eclectic Medical College, was licensed June 25, 1868, by the New York State Eclectic Medical Society, and began practice in Johnson, Ohio. He moved thence to Ceres, Allegany county, thence to Oil City, Pa., in 1861, and finally came to Allegany, where he practiced three years, and returned to Oil City, where he died in April, 1891. Dr. Thompson was a charter member of the National Eclectic Medical Society and president of the State Eclectic Medical Society. His widow lives in Allegany village.

John P. Colgrove.—See Salamanca.

Sanford B. McClure, son of Hiram W. and Caroline (Burlingame) McClure, was born in Franklinville, September 30, 1835, attended Mt. Morris Academy, and began reading medicine with John L. Eddy at Allegany. His studies were interrupted, however, in 1861, when he enlisted in Co. I, 64th N. Y. Vols., as a private, and served thirteen months. In consequence of a severe wound received at the battle of White Oak Swamp Mr. McClure was in poor health for a number of years, but succeeded finally in acquiring a thorough knowledge of medicine and was graduated on June 27, 1874, from the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery. He at once entered upon his career in Allegany, which has since been his home. His first practice was in partnership with Zenas G. Bullock, which continued a year and a half. Dr. McClure has served three terms as supervisor, is the present incumbent of that office, has been school commissioner, and is a member of the County and Lake Erie Medical Societies, serving the former as censor. In June, 1864, he married Alice, daughter of Samuel Morgan, of Cuba, Allegany county. The great-grandfather of Dr. McClure was a surgeon in the Revolutionary war, and three of his grandsons and three great-grandsons were physicians.

John L. Eddy.—See Olean.

Francis P. Blair was born in Broome county, October 10, 1839. He received his literary education at Whitney's Point and was graduated on February 2, 1877, from the Albany Medical College. He began practice in Barton, Tioga county, and in 1886 came to Allegany, where he has since followed a large business. Dr. Blair married, May 12, 1881, Miss Lydia C.

Newland. He became a member of the Cattaraugus County Medical Society in 1887.

Edward Torrey has been a resident physician of Allegany since 1881. He was born in Maine, September 10, 1847, received his education at Westbrook Seminary in that State, graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York city in March, 1869, and began practice in Hinsdale, coming thence to Allegany in 1881. He joined the County Medical Society in 1873 and served as its secretary in 1884-85. He married, first, Addie Sterling, of Wellsville, Allegany county, and second Mrs. Kittie (Kenyon) Church, daughter of Freeman Kenyon, of Allegany.

E. W. Dutcher came from Broome county in 1879 or '80, built up a large practice in his five or six years' stay, and went to California and thence to Arizona. While here he ran for coroner, but was defeated. He graduated from the Albany Medical College, December 22, 1870, and became a member of the Cattaraugus County Medical Society in 1883.

Joshua Bascom, born in Chester, Mass., November 29, 1799, read medicine in Ohio, graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia, and began the practice of medicine in Smethport, Pa. He practiced later in Franklin, Pa., and in Ohio, and in 1860 came to Allegany. Shortly afterward he removed to Emporium, where he died December 11, 1863.

Reuben R. Eggleston, a native of this State, studied medicine with Dr. Button, of Jamestown, with whom and where he began practicing medicine. He came to Allegany about 1853. In 1862 he enlisted in the 154th New York Volunteers and was detailed for hospital duty, dying while in the service at Atlanta, Ga. Dr. Eggleston was a self-made eclectic physician, and during his short professional career here built up quite an extensive practice. I believe he had a license from the State Eclectic Medical Society.

Ray A. Sweet, a graduate of the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, February 25, 1880, and a native of Alfred, Allegany county, had a short professional career here. He went to Pennsylvania.

T. C. James, a native of Wales, England, graduated March 1, 1874, from the Bellevue Medical Hospital College, New York city, was several years in practice at Knapp's Creek, and established a good country business. Dr. James joined the Medical Society in 1883. He went to Bradford, Pa., where he is now located.

E. J. Laughlin was also a physician at Knapp's Creek for a few years. He was born in Portage, N. Y., and was graduated February 19, 1879, from the Medical Department of the University of New York city. He became a member of the County Medical Society in 1881.

Daniel T. Millsbaugh came to Knapp's Creek from Kendall, Pa., remained two or three years, and went to Patterson, N. J. He was "certificated" from New York county March 13, 1884.

Lyman A. Burrows, a native of Waterford, Pa., was a graduate of the Cincinnati Eclectic Medical Institute on June 7, 1887, and in the spring of 1889 began a brief period of practice at Knapp's Creek.

William Follett, Jr., the present physician at Knapp's Creek, was born in Machias, March 17, 1871, and was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo on May 3, 1892.

Albert M. Cook began his professional work at Four Mile in 1882, coming from Jamestown, where he was born. February 21, 1882, he was graduated from the University of Buffalo. He had previously owned a drug store here, which was destroyed by fire. In 1884 he went to Youngstown, Ohio.

Dr. Baum, from Syracuse, is said to have done a little medical work at Four Mile. He was principally engaged in oil speculation.

ASHFORD.

Probably the earliest medical practitioner in Ashford was William Wait, an old style root and herb doctor who came to West Valley in 1829 and died here, practicing more or less all his life. His old saddlebags are still in the possession of a grandson in West Valley. He was a strong old school Baptist and held several town offices.

Clark Blakely, a botanical doctor, came to Ashford Hollow about 1843, practiced four or five years, and removed to Morton's Corners, Erie county, where he is now. His father was with him while here, but did little professional work.

Augustus Andrews, son of a physician and minister, located at Ashford village about 1848. He finally went to Missouri, came back during the war and remained a year, and then returned to Missouri.

Alonzo Wiltse.—See Yorkshire.

Abram B. Wilson was reared in Mansfield, was graduated from the Geneva Medical College, and came to Ashford village about 1848, remaining until after the war. He was of New England parentage. His practice extended over a wide range of country, and both as a physician and a friend he was greatly respected. His knowledge of medicine was thorough and up to the times. He was never known to force a collection. Dr. Wilson was school superintendent and town supervisor, and otherwise prominent in local affairs. He lived also at East Otto and Springville, retaining, however, much of his practice here. He went to Franklinville, where he bought a farm, and finally to Michigan, where he died after his sight had partly failed.

C. Johnson.—See Otto.

Dr. Davis practiced in Ashford a few years before the war. He came from Nunda, whither he returned. He also practiced four or five years in Ellicottville.

Alfred Ayres, eclectic, was born in Pine Grove, Pa., came to West Valley from Little Valley, and was quite a successful practitioner, especially in chronic diseases. He was licensed September 23, 1874, by the Eclectic Medical Society of the 32d Senatorial District. Having accumulated some property he began speculating in oil, lost everything, and died at his sister's in Little Valley. Dr. Ayres was greatly respected both as a physician and a citizen.

Willard Jones, a native of Ashford, began practice in West Valley in 1870, remaining about a year. He had attended lectures at Philadelphia. Young and unmarried, Dr. Jones went to Springville and thence to California, where he died.

Seth Pickett was born near West Valley, and here he doubtless did his first practicing about 1844. He was an eclectic. Dr. Pickett removed to Wisconsin, where he and his son became skillful surgeons.

C. O. Strong, a graduate of a western homeopathic college, came to West Valley from Yorkshire and remained about two years.

Wallace J. French graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo on February 26, 1884, and in April following located in West Valley. He was born in Arcade, Wyoming county. He was here about a year and married a Miss Robinson. Dr. French went to Chautauqua county, where he has developed into an eminent physician and surgeon.

Dr. Clements, a German doctor.—See Randolph.

Francis S. Comfort, another graduate (February 24, 1885) of the University of Buffalo and a Canadian by birth, began the practice of medicine in West Valley in the fall of 1885, remaining only a short time.

Willard H. Rogers acquired a large practice in West Valley and vicinity during his five years' residence here. He was graduated from the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, March 11, 1876, came to Sardinia, Erie county, and thence here, and in 1879 went to New York city, where he died recently. He was an active Republican and a genial, highly respected citizen and physician.

Elbert L. Fish, since 1879 the practicing physician at West Valley, was born in Hume, Allegany county, September 18, 1853, and when two years of age moved with his parents to Centerville. Dr. Fish's education, after the district schools, consisted of one year at Olean Academy and two years at Pike Seminary. At the age of sixteen he began teaching school, which he continued two winters, and in 1875 was census enumerator. In 1873 he began the study of medicine with Dr. A. B. Stewart, of Hume, and completed a course of lectures at the Cincinnati Eclectic Medical Institute, commencing practice at Centerville. In 1879 he removed to West Valley, which has since been his home. November 20, 1878, Dr. Fish married Mary Arabella, only daughter of Dr. A. B. Stewart, his preceptor, and niece of ex-Gov. Robert Stewart, of Missouri. They have three children—J. Blanchard, Glenn Russell, and Mildred Stewart. Politically Dr. Fish is a strong Democrat, but has never been an office-seeker. He is a member of Springville Lodges, No. 351, F. & A. M., and No. 588, I. O. O. F., and a member and examining physician of West Valley Tent, No. 35, K. O. T. M. Dr. Fish is highly respected and enjoys a large practice.

Asher C. Porter was born in Danby, Rutland county, Vt., March 12, 1836. In 1840 his parents came to Cattaraugus county, locating in New Albion. In 1865 young Porter began studying medicine in the office of C. W. Babcock, of Cattaraugus, and one year later entered as a medical student with Dr. Northrup, of Otto. In the winter of 1866-67 he attended the Philadelphia University. Returning to Ashford he practiced medicine until 1869, when he again entered the Philadelphia University and was graduated from the Medical Department in March, 1870. In the winter of 1873-74 Dr. Porter attended a course of lectures at Bellevue Medical College in New York city, and has since then steadily followed his profession at Ashford village. His wife (deceased) was Samantha, daughter of Ephraim Smith, of New Albion, and by her he had three children—Emma A. (Mrs. John Zeilman) and Ada (Mrs. George P. Newkirk), of Ellicottville, and Alta M., at home.

CARROLTON.

James Nichols was the first resident physician in the town of Carrollton, locating in Limestone in 1856, but did not commence the regular practice of medicine until 1864. He was born in Arcade, Wyoming county, July 23, 1825, the eldest son of John and Sally Nichols, who came to Arcade in 1812. The family moved to Centerville, Allegany county, in 1837, and in 1844 young Nichols removed to Farmersville, where he taught the village school several terms. He began studying medicine with E. S. Stewart, and February 7, 1864, was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo. Owing to ill-health Dr. Nichols did not enter immediately on the active practice of his profession. He moved to Limestone in 1856 and engaged in the lumber business. He started, in 1871, the first drug store in that village; in 1876 the proprietorship was changed to Nichols & Paton, which continued until 1882, when Dr. Nichols removed to Bradford, Pa., where he is now located. He was twice elected supervisor from Farmersville and nine times from Carrollton. A war Democrat he was made a member of the Senatorial Committee and assisted in raising and organizing the 113th and 154th Regiments. For many years he was a member and several times president of the Board of Education of the Limestone Union Free School and was largely instrumental in effecting the organization of that and of the Limestone Academy. Dr. Nichols joined the County Medical Society in October, 1867, was its president in 1870, vice-president in 1869, one of its censors, and delegate to the State Medical Society in 1873. March 1, 1852, he married Mary Jane Wade, and they have had four children—Henry James (deceased), Jennie M., H. James, and John B. H. James Nichols, born September 16, 1859, graduated from the University of Buffalo on February 21, 1882, and began the practice of his profession in the village of Limestone with his father, but removed with him to Bradford, where the two are still associated in partnership.

Mortimer C. Bissell, son of Aaron and Delilah (Pullin) Bissell, pioneers of Lyndon, was born in Lyndon, December 13, 1836, and was educated in the district schools and at hard labor on the farm. He attended Rushford Academy and taught school, and after five years was graduated from that institution, after which he entered the University at Ann Arbor, Mich. With his friend, H. D. Walker, he decided upon a medical career and became a student in the Medical Department of the University. After a year's work he was again obliged to resort to teaching to replenish his purse. He finally entered the University of Buffalo and was graduated from the Medical Department February 20, 1870, and immediately came to Limestone and began practicing medicine in partnership with James Nichols, which continued until the latter removed to Bradford, Pa., when Dr. Bissell succeeded to the business of the firm and still retains it. Dr. Bissell has been president of the village three years and during the greater part of his residence there has been a member of the Board of Education. June 24, 1868, he married Mary C. Dunn, of Lyndon, and they have had two children—one deceased and William Emerson, born May 28, 1877.

Malcolm Wayne Smith was born in Angola, N. Y., February 27, 1856, a son of E. P. Smith. Educated at the common schools and at the academy at Smethport, Pa., he early chose the medical profession as his life work and entered as a student the office of Dr. S. D. Freeman, of Smethport, and later that of Dr. J. G. Thompson, of Angola, and was graduated February 26, 1878, from the University of Buffalo. Dr. Smith entered that year upon his professional career in Limestone, where he has since enjoyed a large business. He is a member of the Lake Erie Medical Society and an honorary member of the McKean County (Pa.) Medical Society. He is a great reader, a thorough scholar, and a prominent citizen. He married, June 21, 1881, Maud R., daughter of Henry Renner, of Limestone. They have had two daughters and a son.

George P. Meecham.—See Randolph.

Theodore S. Quick was born in New Haven, Conn., April 27, 1833, and graduated from the Eclectic Medical College of Pennsylvania in March, 1873, endorsed by the Eclectic Medical Society of Sullivan County, N. Y., July 14, 1874. He began practice in Callicorn, Sullivan county, and in June, 1889, removed to Carrollton village, where he has since been located. Dr. Quick is a member of the Sullivan County Medical Society (which he was instrumental in organizing) and of the New York State Eclectic Medical Society.

COLD SPRING.

Alson Leavenworth, the first physician to locate in the town, came here about 1836.—See New Albion.

Of the early practitioners succeeding Dr. Leavenworth scarcely anything is known. It is only of those in the last quarter century that I am able to write.

Dr. Butterworth was in Steamburg about two years following 1875. He came from Kinzua, Pa., and it is believed he returned there.

O. A. Tompkins and M. C. Hawley.—See Randolph.

Dr. Crandall was located in Steamburg about a year. He lived in Stockton and Lakewood, Chautauqua county, for a time. He went east.

W. W. Daniels.—See Dayton.

Dr. Miller was here from 1876 to 1879. He was a graduate of Buffalo and a very good physician. He went to Corydon, Pa., where he is now.

Peter W. Mosblech, a German, kept a drug store and practiced medicine at Steamburg in 1874, but how long he remained can not be ascertained.

David Bemus.—See Randolph.

Halsey D. Snover, born in Chemung, Chemung county, December 25, 1856, was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo on February 27, 1884, and in June of that year began the practice of his profession in Steamburg, where he has since continued. He is a Mason, a K. O. T. M., and in 1887 became a member of the County Medical Society.

CONEWANGO.

Sands Niles Crumb was not only the first physician in Conewango, but was one of the earliest in this part of Cattaraugus county. He moved into Rutledge as early as 1820 and about 1822 or '23 went to Gowanda (then Lodi). How long he remained there can not be determined. About 1830 he settled in Nashville, Chautauqua county, and while there did the first medical work in Perrysburg and Dayton. He went to Lockport, N. Y., about 1834, where he died on the street of heart disease August 9, 1839. Dr. Crumb was born July 18, 1793, and married, in 1825, Elizabeth Gray, a sister of Dr. Henry T. B. Gray, of Perrysburg.

Dr. Cheney is said to have come to Rutledge very early—just after Dr. Crumb left. Efforts to locate him definitely have proved futile.

Thomas Jefferson Wheeler acquired more than local prominence both as a physician and a citizen. He was born in Middlefield, Otsego county, November 16, 1803, received a common school education, was graduated from the Cherry Valley Academy, and studied medicine with that eminent doctor, Delos White, of Cherry Valley. He began and for six months practiced his chosen profession in Toronto, Canada, and came thence to Chautauqua county, practicing about a year each in Mina and Ellington. About 1826 he settled permanently in what was then Rutledge, where was ever afterward the pivotal scene of his enviable career. In 1833 or '34 Dr. Wheeler was appointed associate county judge, holding this position until the State constitution abolished the office in 1846. He was presidential elector from this district in 1836, was elected in 1845 State senator for the 6th District, and from its organization until his death was president of the Randolph Bank. A Democrat of the old school he was a staunch upholder of his party's principles, and in public and private life was alike honest, faithful, kind, and true. In his profession he took a front rank. He was well read, skillful, talented, and scientific. He was a member of the old County Medical Society, was elected its president in 1834, censor in 1844, became a member of the present society December 4, 1867, was made its president in 1869, delegate to the State Society in 1867 and 1869, and delegate to the National Medical Association in 1868. He died in Conewango on February 8, 1875, leaving a widow and one daughter, the last representatives of the Wheeler family. His father was a physician and for a time resided with the son in Conewango, but did not practice medicine there.

L. S. Morgan, a homeopathist, minister, geologist, came to Conewango, practiced and preached several years, and died there about 1886. He was a graduate of a Boston school. He was small in stature, but possessed a brilliant intellect. A pioneer in the science of geology he both wrote and lectured on this subject, acquiring an eminence of wide recognition. For one year (1856-57) he edited and published the Gowanda Phoenix.

Fred C. Beals.—See Salamanca.

Edgar Rood was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo on February 26, 1878, began the practice of medicine in Conewango, remained until 1885, acquired a large ride, and went to Cherry Creek, where he hailed from. He is now in Westfield, Chautauqua county. For one year he was in partnership with Will F. Gardner.

Will F. Gardner, son of George R. and Lurena F. (Crossfield) Gardner, was born in Conewango on September 20, 1853, graduated from the Chamberlain Institute in 1877, graduated February 26, 1884, from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, and began and still continues the practice of his profession in his native town. Dr. Gardner married, November 25, 1886, Josephine F., daughter of Robert H. Curtiss, of Conewango.

DAYTON.

Samuel Redfield, the first physician in the town of Dayton, located on lot 39 in 1821 and followed his profession here until his death in 1836. He was an old style apothecary and did a large practice for those days.

Dr. Sill followed his profession here for a brief period before the war, but did not obtain much business. He also practiced about three years in Perrysburg. He came from Franklinville.

Corydon C. Johnson.—See Persia.

Harrison Canfield began his medical career here, coming from Sherman, Chautauqua county. He went to Bradford, Pa., where he has attained a considerable reputation. He was here about a year.

Moses P. Roberts was born in Tyre, Seneca county, August 28, 1820. He graduated from the Geneva Medical College June 1, 1852, and began the practice of medicine the same year in Dayton, continuing until his death on August 2, 1886. August 22, 1852, Dr. Roberts married Electa A., daughter of Avery and Lodema A. (Nash) Park, of Dayton, and had born to him two children, Alice V. and Altheus A. His widow survives him. It will be seen that his birth, marriage, and death occurred in August. Dr. Roberts owned and conducted a drug store from 1870 until near his decease.

Dr. Shuey came from Sherman, Chautauqua county, and remained about a year, going thence to Bradford, Pa. A German and well read he did not seem to succeed well here. He married a sister of Harrison Canfield.

James H. Fuller was born in Dayton, June 15, 1841, was graduated in 1867 from the Medical Department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, and practiced here, at Franklin, Ind., and at Indianapolis. He has given up medicine and is now following farming in Dayton.

Chester Howard was born in Union, Broome county, June 25, 1847, and August 1, 1864, enlisted in Co. E, 50th N. Y. Vols. In 1877 he entered the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, graduating therefrom February 25, 1879. The following April he began his professional career in Dayton village.

Luther W. Tarbox, born in Arkwright, Chautauqua county, October 19, 1849, was graduated from the University of Buffalo, February 21, 1881, and followed the whole of his professional career in Pine Valley, whither he had removed in 1879, his death occurring there on October 23, 1891. He was the first physician to locate at that village. His widow survives him. He was an industrious, hard-working man, acquired his education by sheer force and perseverance, and died in the prime of life.

Dr. Kimball, for a short time a physician of the eclectic practice at Versailles, was likewise a brief time in this town at the hamlet known as Cottage. He was here somewhere about 1850.

Dr. Tibbetts succeeded Dr. Brazil at Howard's Corners, but where either came from or whither they went can not be determined.

Charles S. Cleland, a native of Sinclairville, Chautauqua county, and a graduate (March 16, 1887) of the Baltimore University, practiced medicine a year or so at Pine Valley and went thence to Collins Center, Erie county, where he is now.

William A. Putnam made a very brief professional stay at Pine Valley. He was born in Cassadaga, Chautauqua county, and received his diploma from the University of Buffalo on February 26, 1884.

Raymond M. Evarts was at Pine Valley a year, beginning his career, and moved to Irving, Erie county, where he has since been located. A native of Leon he was graduated from Howard University, Washington, D. C., March 2, 1882, and endorsed by the faculty of the University of Buffalo.

Henry W. Dye, born in Madison county, secured a license August 12, 1874, from the Eclectic Medical Society, and practiced first at Dayton village and latter and longer at Markham's, going finally to West Salamanca, where he died. He was a widower while here, and left at his death a family of smart children.

William Teft was born in South Dansville, Steuben county, March 19, 1858. He was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo on March 25, 1890, and began practice in January, 1891, in Versailles, removing, however, the next November to Pine Valley, where he now is. In February, 1892, Dr. Teft was elected secretary of the Lake Erie Medical Society.

William W. Daniels was graduated from the American Medical College, St. Louis, January 23, 1878, and practiced at Pine Valley a few months.

EAST OTTO.

Dr. Ball, an old school doctor, is said to have been the first medical practitioner in East Otto. As no data can be produced to substantiate this statement it must be accepted as doubtful.

Dr. Mason succeeded Dr. Ball, going thence in 1834 to Michigan, where he became a minister of the Gospel. He was well read and a good doctor.

Dr. Barnes then came in from Massachusetts, followed his profession for a year, and removed to Lockport. He was a graduate of a Pittsfield, Mass., school and possessed a bright intellect.

Levi Bullis came here in 1825, or earlier, and settled three miles southwest of the village. He was born in Vermont in 1797, lived in Cooperstown and Hamburg, N. Y., and was educated as a physician of the old school. His wife Sally died February 13, 1877, aged 82 years. He lived until June 15, 1881. He was well read in medicine and considered by all a good physician.

Elijah Dresser, son of Elijah, was born in Paris, Oneida county, September 15, 1810. He was educated in the Geneseo Academy and the Fairfield Medical College, graduating from the latter institution in the spring of 1834, and the same year came to East Otto, which has since been his home and the central field of his medical career. He was supervisor of his town in 1859, the first commissioner of common schools for East Otto in 1855, a member of the old County Medical Society, postmaster under President Taylor's administration, census marshal in 1855 and 1865, town clerk, and town superintendent of schools. He became a member of the new County Medical Society on October 8, 1867, and its president in 1868. July 31, 1841, Dr. Dresser married Harriet M., daughter of John Prescott, of East Otto. Dr. Dresser has practically retired from professional life and enjoys the fruits of his labors in the quietude of a pleasant home.

F. W. Hawkins was "a physician and surgeon" in East Otto in 1874. Where he came from, where he went to, his length of stay, his alma mater can not be ascertained.

Elmer D. Williams, son of Solomon, is a native of Mansfield, being born there on August 23, 1859. He was graduated from the Chamberlain Institute, Randolph, in 1882, taught school, was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo on February 22, 1886, and at once began his practice in Arcade, Wyoming county. In 1887 he went to Wichita, Kan., but returned the next year, locating in East Otto, his present home. Dr. Williams married, August 18, 1892, Milia, daughter of William Hammond, of this town.

A. B. Wilson.—See Ashford.

V. A. Ellsworth was born in Milford, Otsego county, was graduated from the Buffalo Medical College on February 23, 1876, and has since practiced his profession in East Otto, whither he had come in 1869. He joined the County Medical Society in 1887 and the same year was elected a delegate to the State Society.

W. A. Crandall.—See Salamanca.

ELLCOTTVILLE.

James Trowbridge, the first medical practitioner in Ellicottville, came here with his wife in the fall of 1816, remained six months, and removed to Great Valley and finally to Hinsdale.—See Hinsdale.

Alon Leavenworth came here in September, 1818, located on lot 57, built a log house, and afterward erected a hotel.—See New Albion.

Dr. Ward removed to this town from Hornellsville in 1827. He became quite popular and was regarded as a good physician, but somehow could not get a firm foothold. He remained about two years.

Thomas J. Williams was born April 29, 1806. He was graduated from the Geneva Medical College, began his life work in Ellicottville in 1829, and died here December 7, 1877. He married Abigail P., daughter of Judge Israel Day, who survived him until May 20, 1890. Dr. Williams possessed rare traits of manly character, which won for him hosts of friends. As a physician he was careful, skillful, and successful; as a citizen, neighbor, friend, he evinced those characteristics that go to make up a true gentleman. He was interested in politics, but never sought office. A member and a liberal supporter of the Presbyterian church he was an unassuming Christian, generous and forgiving to all, and with his purse and time assisted in every good movement, especially in the erection of the present church edifice in the village. Dr. Williams was a charter member of both the old and the present County Medical Society, and of the old organization he was president in 1844, secretary and treasurer in 1836, and censor in 1834 and 1844. Of the new society he was vice-president in 1868 and for some time one of its censors.

James I. Williams, son of Thomas J., was born in Ellicottville, July 31, 1845, received his degree of M. D. from the College of Medicine and Surgery, Cincinnati, February 14, 1876, became assistant to the noted specialist, Dr.

Up de Graff, of Elmira, and settled in New Haven, Conn., where he acquired considerable success in the treatment of diseases of the eye and ear. Owing to his father's declining health he relinquished his practice and returned to Ellicottville, where he took up and continued until his death the large business established by the elder Williams. Dr. Williams, Jr., possessed a well stored mind, an excellent judgment, and a frank and generous nature. He died in the prime of life on February 25, 1884, unmarried. He joined the County Medical Society in 1879.

E. M. Shaffner.—See Great Valley.

Jonathan Brewster Staunton, son of John W., of English ancestry, was born in Massachusetts, November 12, 1813. He early registered as a medical student with T. J. Williams in Ellicottville and was two years in a doctor's office in Geneva, and received a license from the Cattaraugus County Medical Society on December 29, 1837. Dr. Staunton followed his profession wholly in Ellicottville. He had an almost intuitive knowledge in the diagnoses of diseases and rose rapidly to a front rank in medical jurisprudence. He was often called in consultation. He died February 11, 1875. He married, first, in 1835, Sarah Wilbur, who died two years afterward, and in 1839 he married her sister, Susan, who survives him. Dr. Staunton was a member, secretary, treasurer, and censor of the old County Medical Society.

Joseph M. Staunton, a brother of Jonathan B., grew to manhood here, practiced awhile his profession here, and removed to West Virginia in 1860.

J. Galusha Staunton, another brother of Jonathan B., also did some medical work in Ellicottville.

Augustus Crary was a man of marked character and great self-reliance. A son of William Crary, he was born in Wallingford, Vt., in 1788 and in 1809 moved with his parents to Tompkins county, where he studied medicine with Dr. Hanchett, of Groton. Here he began practice. Removing in 1827 to Yorkshire Corners he thence came in 1831 to Ellicottville, and shortly before his death, which occurred January 28, 1868, he went to live with his daughter, Mrs. Virgil Reed, in Humphrey, where he died. His wife was Priscilla Hale, by whom he had six children. A daughter, first the wife and widow of Dr. Calvin Chickering and later and now the same of Dr. Virgil Reed, both of Humphrey, survives them all. While in Yorkshire Dr. Crary built and operated a grist-mill and began the erection of a stone house. This latter he never completed. In some way he became financially entangled and upon his removal to Ellicottville was placed on the "limits of the town for debt," being allowed to practice outside these limits only on Sundays. He placed but little belief in books, but said: "God Almighty made me a doctor." He was a charter member of the old Medical Society. Tall and dignified, possessing excellent judgment, he made many friends and covered in his practice a wide territory. A leading feature of his success as an old school physician was his skillful use of opium.

Clark Crary, son of Augustus, studied medicine with his father and practiced in Ellicottville until his death. For one year (1843) he was in partnership with E. S. Stewart. He rode extensively and was very popular. He never married.

Dr. Squires practiced medicine in Ellicottville over fifty years ago, but for how long I can not say. He died here.

Horace B. Miller came here from Genesee county, remained a couple of years, and went to Buffalo, where he died. He had previously practiced in Great Valley and Franklinville. His medical education was acquired at Castleton, Vt., where he graduated, and at Buffalo and Philadelphia, where he took lectures.

Dr. Pruyn.—See Farmersville.

William B. Hartman moved here from Pennsylvania, whither he returned after a brief stay. He studied medicine in Philadelphia. While here his wife died and he married again, a Mrs. Rogers. He made considerable pretensions to surgery.

Burton M. Spencer, brother of Stephen J., was for a few years an eminent practitioner in Ellicottville. He was born in China, Wyoming county, was graduated, March 6, 1880, from the Medical Department of the University of Maryland, and began his professional career here soon afterward. He went finally to Hornellsville and established a sanitarium, which proved unsuccessful, and he soon came to Farmersville, where he died recently of consumption.

Dr. Davis.—See Ashford.

Harlan S. Smith, a native of Mansfield, received his diploma March 2, 1867, from the Georgetown College, Washington, D. C., and from then until 1880 followed his profession in Ellicottville, going then to Kalamazoo and later to Schoolcraft, Mich., where he now resides. He held a position in the Treasury Department in Washington during the war. He was well read and popular. Dr. Smith joined the County Medical Society in 1868, was elected vice-president in 1874, secretary and treasurer in 1869, 1870, and 1871, and secretary in 1876.

Elihu S. Stewart, of Scotch-Irish descent, was born in Jefferson county in 1814. His father, Elihu, was born in Coleraine, Mass., whither his father had immigrated in early days from the north of Ireland. Capt. Leonard Proctor, Dr. Stewart's mother's grandfather, was also the grandfather of Secretary of War Proctor and a captain in the Revolution. Dr. Stewart's parents came to Cattaraugus county in 1831. He attended Denmark Academy and at sixteen or seventeen began teaching district schools winters. He took up the study of medicine in the office of Dr. Powers, and January 30, 1837, was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Fairfield. His practice began at Sugar Grove, Pa., but in 1842 he removed to Farmersville, where he remained for eighteen years. In 1860 he located in Ellicottville, which has since been his home. He married, in 1839, Mary A. Blodgett, and they have had four children. Dr. Stewart was a charter member of the new County Medical Society, was elected its president in 1876, vice-president in 1879, secretary and treasurer in 1867-68 and 1873-75, treasurer in 1876, its censor a number of years, and delegate to the State Medical Society in 1867 and 1869. He has been a member of the Board of Pension Examiners, surgeon for the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad, and president of the Bank of Ellicottville since its organization in 1878. A Republican in politics Dr. Stewart was a delegate to the State convention in Syracuse that favored Greeley for president, and for many years he has served on the Board of Education. He has always been public spirited, zealous in the interests of the community, and highly respected for his many excellent qualities. He still retains an office practice and is called far and near in consultation.

Virgil Reed.—See Humphrey.

Horace S. Arnold, son of Samuel P., was born in 1826 and came with his parents to Ellicottville very early. He studied medicine with J. B. Staunton, was graduated as an M. D., and began and practiced here until his death February 8, 1869. As a physician he was careful and judicious and acquired a large business. He was a prominent figure in local enterprises. Dr. Arnold was a charter member of the new County Medical Society.

George Lattin.—See New Albion.

William B. Johnston, born in Ellicottville, July 14, 1856, received his literary education in the village Union Free School and his medical education with H. S. Smith and at the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, graduating as M. D. therefrom on February 21, 1881. To complete these studies he taught several winter terms of district school. From his graduation until June, 1881, Dr. Johnston practiced his profession in Ellicottville. He then moved to Ishpeming, Mich., where he had a good private and hospital practice for four years, when he went to Bessimer, Mich., and followed his calling two years. In September, 1887, he returned to Ellicottville and took a post-graduate course at the New York Post-Graduate School and Hospital. Since then Dr. Johnston has continued the practice of medicine in his native village, being interested also in a drug store in partnership with R. E. Ward. In July, 1882, he married Katherine L., daughter of Hon. Arunah Ward, of Ellicottville. They have had one daughter. Dr. Johnston joined the County Medical Society in 1887 and is one of its censors. He is a member of the Salamanca Board of Pension Examiners.

Charles M. Walrath, son of Walter and Mary A. Walrath, was born in Humphrey, December 5, 1856, and reared in Great Valley, where his parents settled when he was an infant. He attended the Ellicottville Union Free School and Ten Broeck Academy at Franklinville, taught school a number of terms, was principal of the Franklinville Union Free School one year, began the study of medicine with Hiram D. Walker in 1881, and in September, 1882, entered the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, graduating therefrom February 22, 1885, and immediately settling in practice in that city, supplementing, meantime, his medical education by another course of lectures that year. In the spring of 1886 he removed to Ellicottville, which has since been the home of his professional and private life. He has a fine library, is a close student, and is interested specially in educational matters. He has served on the Boards of Education and village trustees. He became a member of the Cattaraugus County Medical Society in 1887.

Fred C. Beals.—See Salamanca.

Stephen J. Spencer, a native of Arcade, Wyoming county, was born January 1, 1860, attended Ten Broeck Academy, studied medicine with his brother, Burton M., in Ellicottville, and was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo on February 24, 1885. He commenced practicing his profession in Ellicottville, continuing until 1891, when he removed. June 30, 1886, he married Clara M., daughter of D. L. Wilson, of Erie county. Dr. Spencer was made a member of the County Society in 1886 and its vice-president in 1887 and 1889.

Alfred W. Smallman was born in New Haven, Conn., May 23, 1861, and at the age of four years came with his parents to Ellicottville. Receiving an academic education in the village Union School and in Chamberlain Institute he began the study of medicine with John P. Colgrove in Salamanca and was graduated from the University of Buffalo on February 28, 1888. He at once located in practice in Ellicottville. Dr. Smallman is self-educated. He earned his first money setting type on a local newspaper and taught thirteen terms of school to carry him through college. He joined the County Medical Society in 1888 and is one of its present censors.

FARMERSVILLE.

Dyer Coudrey was doubtless the first physician in Farmersville, locating here about 1825. In 1835 he went to Freedom, where he practiced with his brother James until 1840, when he returned and died here about three years afterward.

Joel Joy, a Thompsonian doctor, followed medicine here from 1832 to 1838, becoming well known and establishing quite a business. He was a good story teller. He went to Michigan and died there.

Spencer Crary, a nephew of Augustus Crary, began practicing medicine in Farmersville as early as 1835. He took lectures at the Fairfield Medical College and got a license from the Herkimer County Medical Society. His knowledge of medicine and his natural professional ability he seemed to inherit from his uncle, and his excellent qualities secured him a good practice. He finally moved west and died there.

Hiram Bond, energetic and successful, came to Farmersville from Pike. He retired from practice about 1842 and eventually died in Fon du Lac, Wis.

E. S. Stewart came here in 1842.—See Ellicottville.

Dr. Gilmore succeeded Spencer Crary. He also took lectures at Fairfield. Owing to the fact that he was once engaged in making calculations for almanacs he was familiar known as the "almanac maker." He went from here to Warsaw, N. Y.

Clinton W. Bond, son of Hiram, located in this town about 1862, practiced three or four years, and moved to Wisconsin, and died in Illinois. In October, 1867, he joined the County Medical Society and became one of its censors. He had good ability and was quite popular.

Dr. Pruyt practiced two years in Ellicottville and in 1860 moved into Farmersville, where he likewise practiced two years, removing thence to Herkimer county, where he died. Before all this, however, he had practiced a short time in Mansfield.

Dwight G. Hubbard was a medical practitioner here a few years succeeding Clinton W. Bond's brief stay, and became popular. He was a graduate of the University of Buffalo. He came from Wethersfield, Wyoming county, went to Pennsylvania, and is now in Buffalo.

Robert R. Seyse graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo in 1886 and immediately began his professional career in Farmersville. He joined the County Medical Society in 1887. He finally removed to Bliss, Wyoming county, where he died.

W. E. McDuffie.—See Olean.

Dr. Dutton, a graduate of the University of Buffalo, followed medicine here awhile and went finally to Wyoming county.

Brayton N. Strong was born in Machias, May 20, 1865, was graduated from the University of Buffalo, Medical Department, on March 1, 1887, and commenced the practice of medicine in this town, dying here in 1891.

Cassar Smith, the present physician, was born in Pike, Wyoming county, October 3, 1867, and was graduated from the University of Buffalo, March 24, 1891. He located here in December, 1892.

FRANKLINVILLE.

John McClure has the distinction of having been the first medical practitioner to locate in Cattaraugus county and likewise the first physician in the town of Franklinville. He was also the first school teacher in the locality, and while here combined the two callings. He was doubtless a relative of the McClure family who first settled the town as early as 1804, for they all came from Massachusetts, the doctor, however, in 1806 or 1807. He was elected one of the first three assessors in the county in 1809, then the town of Olean. Possessed of more than ordinary intellectual ability he built up an excellent reputation. He erected the first framed house in the town, the frame of which is still standing, and the locality was for a long time known as McClure settlement. A brother was an officer in the War of 1812. Dr. McClure never married. He died here in 1811, the first death in the town.

H. Davidson was an early physician here, for he is on record as a charter member and one of the first secretaries, treasurers, and censors of the old County Medical Society. It is said that he also practiced a year or two in Ellicottville after leaving this town.

James Trowbridge came here from Ellicottville in 1817.—See Hinsdale.

Charles McLouth, born March 24, 1798, in Cheshire, Mass., was reared on a farm, attended school winters and worked summers, and read medicine with Dr. Smith, of Clyde, N. Y. He was licensed by the Seneca County Medical Society August 20, 1819, and began practice in Aurora, Erie county, where he remained two years, coming thence, in 1821, to Franklinville, where he practiced until his death July 26, 1870. He was a member of the old County Medical Society and its vice-president in 1837. He was ever foremost in educational matters and served both as county school commissioner and town superintendent of schools. Dr. McLouth was a man wonderfully endowed by nature. Possessing a robust constitution and a fine intellect he used both to good advantage, and was highly respected as a physician, a citizen, and a friend. He was brusque in manner and careless in dress, but prompt in decision and of unquestioned ability. He married twice and reared four children.

Charles D. McLouth, son of Charles, was born here, and August 12, 1874, was licensed by the Board of Censors of the Eclectic Medical Society of the 32d Senatorial District. His life has been spent in Franklinville.

A. B. Wilson.—See Ashford.

Isaac B. Emerson, dentist, physician, surgeon, a student of medicine in Kentucky and a graduate of the Medical Department of Yale College, followed his profession here from about 1835 to 1844, when he went to St. Lawrence county.

Lewis Riggs was one of the prominent early physicians who made Cattaraugus county their home. Born in Litchfield county, Conn., January 23, 1808, he early went to Homer, Cortland county, and began reading medicine in the office of his uncle and namesake, Dr. Lewis Riggs. He went thence to Yale College and was graduated from the Medical Department of that institution about 1830. He came immediately to Franklinville, where he practiced and lived until his death December 17, 1862. He bought a farm and soon became an extensive dealer in real estate, owning when he died over fifteen hundred acres in this vicinity. Dr. Riggs was a charter member of the old County Medical Society, its first vice-president, and its censor in 1834. He is well remembered still as a splendid physician. It was as a farmer that he enjoyed life most, and in this direction he was considered an expert. His widow survives him on the homestead.

Horace B. Miller.—See Ellicottville.

C. H. Newton came to Franklinville about 1841, remained two or three years, and removed to Ohio.

C. Ellsworth, later of pill fame, was the first to locate as a medical practitioner in the village of Cadiz. He came there in 1834, practiced a year or two, and went to Corry, Pa., where he died, and where he manufactured large quantities of pills and other medicines. He was a charter member of the old County Medical Society.

Hon. Henry Van Aernam, M. D.*—Of the many eminent men who passed their boyhood in Cattaraugus county not one has made so marked an impress upon its people as Dr. Henry Van Aernam. Born in Marcellus, Onondaga county, N. Y., March 11, 1819, he came to the present town of Mansfield with his father, Jacob B. Van Aernam, in the spring of 1822. His early life was that of the other pioneers of the county. A log school-house education, a close study of a very few standard books supplemented by a term or two as a district school teacher, made the rutted road to success in that period of self-denial and hardship. In the spring of 1834 Van Aernam, at fifteen, was a clerk in the store of William Elliott, and the August of the succeeding year found the youth in Virginia in the employ of William L. Perce & Co., who were engaged in the construction of the James River & Kanawha canal. He was the paymaster and confidential clerk of this company for two years. Returning home he attended school in Springville Academy from 1837 to 1841, and his academic course was barely ended when he began the study of medicine with Dr. Levi Goldsborough, of Waverly (now Otto). He attended the Geneva Medical College in the winter of 1842-43, but received his diploma from Willoughby College, Ohio, in 1845. After his graduation he began the practice of his profession in the present village of Allegany, remaining there until the spring of 1848, when he removed to Franklinville, where he has since continuously resided. On the 30th day of November, 1845, he married Amy M. Etheridge, and their wedded life of nearly forty-eight years has been marked by constant devotion.

Dr. Van Aernam early acquired prominence in the practice of his profession. Of excellent judgment, accurate in his diagnosis of a disease, with an intuitive insight into the mental characteristics of his patient, sympathetic in temperament and yet vigorous in his treatment, and with a willingness to ride with his pillbags to the hut of the poor as well as to the residence of the rich, were qualities that alike established his reputation as a skillful practitioner and endeared him to the people of eastern Cattaraugus. No physician ever retained for forty-five years the undiminished confidence of his neighbors in his medical skill to a greater extent than has Dr. Van Aernam. His decision on the pathology of a disease has been the dernier resort in difficult cases in the vicinity of Franklinville for more than a generation. And to-day, although crippled by disease and debarred on that account from active practice, his ripe judgment is still deferred to as the ultimate authority.

Dr. Van Aernam early turned his attention to politics. He was a charter member of the Republican party with most decided leanings toward abolitionism. He had a most intense hatred of slavery and he rarely could brook a compromise. Local politics were then dictated by a coterie of politicians residing in Ellicottville, and his first reputation as a practical organizer was acquired in his successful endeavor to disrupt this political machine. Many an aspirant for political honors can tearfully certify that the doctor's ability as a convention organizer did not end in the 'fifties. In the fall of 1857 he was elected to the Legislature from the First Assembly District of the county. When the rebels of the south sought to dismember the Union Dr. Van Aernam was energetic and unequivocal in his fidelity to the Republic. August 20, 1862, he was mustered into the State militia service as surgeon of the 154th Regiment, New York State Volunteers, and on the 26th of the following month into the United States service with the rank of major. On the 5th of October, 1862, he was assigned to duty as surgeon-in-chief of the Second Brigade, Second Division, of the Eleventh Army Corps, and on the 28th day of December, 1863, surgeon-in-chief of the Division, and in April of the following year surgeon-in-chief of the Second Brigade, Second Division, of the Twentieth Army Corps, and was discharged at Atlanta, Ga., by reason of disabilities, November 7, 1864. This military life of Dr. Van Aernam, though compressed in a sentence, signifies much to the army with which he served. He came of fighting stock, for the two preceding generations of Van Aernams had shown their valor in their country's service—the one with the Continentals of '76 and the other in the second war with England. So the third in the descending line was not a theoretical surgeon, but was on the operating staff and became famous among famous experts with the knife. He gained the ardent affection of his comrades, and the few survivors of the 154th Regiment to-day have great respect and veneration for their old surgeon. If they are afflicted with hero-worship for him there is much in his conduct to warrant the devotion. In the fall of 1864, and while he was still with Sherman at Atlanta, he was elected to the Thirty-ninth Congress from his home district and was re-elected to the succeeding Congress. No legislative body ever surpassed in ability these two Congresses. Stevens, Shellabarger, Bingham, Butler, Conkling, Davis, Blaine, Garfield and Boutwell were then in the prime of their stalwart manhood. They were confronted with problems the like of which were never presented for solution. Four millions of people whose intellects had been dimmed and ambitions repressed by continued bondage were to be exalted to citizenship. Their destiny was to be worked out in the south by the side of their former masters. Rampant hostility to the north and to the civil rights of the black men must be crushed out.

These were among the stupendous issues to be crystallized into legislative enactment. Dr. Van Aernam was soon in touch with the most eminent of this galaxy of statesmen. He was the intimate friend and medical adviser of the great war secretary, Stanton, a daily table companion of Henry Wilson and John A. Bingham. An ardent radical he believed that civil rights to the colored people should be a reality, not a myth. That to reconstruct the south those who had engaged in rebellion must give unquestioning allegiance to the Union, and that mal-treatment of the former slaves should be followed by vigorous punishment. Dr. Van Aernam earnestly believed the attempt of the chivalrous southerners to disrupt the Union was treason, and before they were re-instated into the full privileges of citizenship they should give ample proof of repentance, and his whole bent during this period of his congressional life was to render effective this policy. After the inauguration of General Grant in 1869 Dr. Van Aernam was appointed commissioner of pensions—a position he held for upwards of two years. The affairs of the department needed systematizing and his previous service in Congress on the Committee of Invalid Pensions specially fitted him for this duty. Prior to his incumbency the pensioners were paid semi-annually and each pensioner was obliged to pay the expense of making and executing his vouchers and of collecting the pension. Under the legislation originated and pushed through by the commissioner the present mode was engrafted on the statute.

After leaving the Pension Department Dr. Van Aernam returned to Franklinville and sedulously practiced his profession. The faculty of money saving was never well developed in him and he followed his calling to earn a livelihood, although he had an abiding faith, which was almost eccentric in its sensitiveness, in the nobility of his profession and an affectionate regard for his fellow-workers in it. In the fall of 1878 he was again elected to Congress and re-elected in 1880. In the latter Congress he was chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, and the economic agitation made his position important and arduous. The hearings to the representatives of all classes pertaining to the labor question were frequent and Dr. Van Aernam applied himself closely to a study of the problems growing out of the antagonism of organized labor and corporate capital. Returning home after his public service he again resumed the practice of his profession and continued in it until he was stricken with paralysis in 1889, and has since been an invalid. His house is a Mecca for the survivors of the war of Cattaraugus and Chautauqua, and especially of his old regiment, and also of the politicians of the two counties. He is ever alert to aid the soldier in securing a pension, for he has no sympathy with the clamor now so fashionable against pensions, and he retains a deep interest in the welfare of the party with which he has so long been identified. Upon the death of Jonas K. Button in 1884 Dr. Van Aernam was appointed a trustee of Ten Broeck Free Academy in the village of Franklinville, the location and endowment of which were accomplished largely through his influence with its founder.

Dr. Van Aernam has always been zealously in favor of public improvements, and in all local matters has exercised a dominating influence for the elevation of the people of the community. He has two children: Mrs. James

D. McVey, who resides with him, and Charles D. Van Aernam, who is engaged in the practice of law in Franklinville.

William M. Smith, a native and a medical graduate of New York city, came here before 1840, established a splendid practice, and removed to Rushford, Allegany county, where he died.

Nathan B. Reed made his advent here in about 1844, read medicine with Charles McLouth, studied awhile at Willoughby Medical College in Ohio, and finally graduated from the Medical College at Geneva. He located here to follow his profession, but died in 1849 in young manhood. He married Emily Ferrington, of Farmersville.

Francis Findlay, son of Stephen and Sarah (Chapman) Findlay, early settlers of Freedom, was born there July 27, 1834, was reared on the farm, and in 1856 was graduated from the Rushford Academy in Allegany county. Teaching school and reading medicine was his employment until the winter of 1856-57, when he took a course of medical lectures at the University of Buffalo and graduated therefrom February 21, 1860. His practice began in Allegany as a partner of John L. Eddy. One year later he went to Bradford and four years afterward came to Franklinville, his present home. Dr. Findlay, aside from being a pension examiner, has never sought nor held office. He was a charter member and the first president of the present County Medical Society, and one of its censors. His only son, Morgan C., is professor of physics in Park College, Parkville, Mo.

Hiram D. Walker was born in Farmersville on the 12th of October, 1839, a son of Gideon D. and Sophia (Lawrence) Walker, pioneers. At seventeen young Walker entered the Rushford Academy and in 1861 registered as a student in a select course in the Michigan University at Ann Arbor. The following year he entered the Medical Department of that institution and in 1863 was a medical student in the University of Buffalo, from which he was graduated February 23, 1864. The following March he located permanently in Franklinville. Dr. Walker has been coroner three terms, many years local health officer, and is now surgeon to the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad. He is a member of the Buffalo Microscopical Club and of the County Medical Society, joining the latter in 1873 and becoming soon after one of its censors. For several months in 1885 he was in the Bureau of Animal Industry at Washington; in 1883 he made quite an important scientific discovery in relation to the disease and prevention of gapes in fowls.

Gershom R. Staunton, a cousin of the Ellicottville family of this name, and a botanical doctor, came to Cadiz in the 'forties. His wife was an aunt of Dr. S. B. McClure, of Allegany. He had considerable ability, had a good practice and became popular, and finally went to Iowa, where he died.

H. W. Dye.—See Dayton.

W. J. C. Crandall, the seventh son of a seventh son, came to Franklinville from Allegany county in 1846 or '47 and remained until about 1852. At first he lived in Cadiz. He had taken lectures at the Eclectic College in Cincinnati. He was a clever, harmless fellow, strong and athletic, and quite a wrestler. He went to Erie county.

S. W. Green, once a preacher and afterward a doctor, and a somewhat wandering physician, was located here a short time and went thence to Pennsylvania.

John W. Kales was born in Chemung county, October 16, 1850, was educated at Whitney Point Union School and Cortland Academy, graduated from the State Normal School at Cortland in 1873, was one year in the literary department of Syracuse University, the same time in the Detroit Medical College, and was graduated from the Long Island Medical College Hospital on June 24, 1879. He began practice that year in Union Springs and in 1884 removed to Franklinville, where he has since been located. Dr. Kales has evinced an inclination and considerable skill as an inventor, among his inventions being a surgical table and sofa combined and an automatic interlocking switch for railroads.

FREEDOM.

Elihu Cruttenden is credited with being the first physician in Freedom, coming here with Hurlbut Cruttenden and locating on Clear Creek about 1820. The doctor built on this stream, in 1822, the first grist-mill in town.

Warren Coudrey, the records have it, was located in the town of Freedom, "in the Fish Lake Settlement," as early as 1821. He was the first postmaster and in 1828 built the first brick house.

James Coudrey came in about 1835. He remained until 1840, when he went west and joined the Mormons.

Dyer Coudrey practiced in partnership with his brother James.—See Farmersville.

Dr. Powers was another early physician in this section. He married a sister of C. C. Mason and finally went to Pennsylvania.

D. L. Barrows is quoted as being one of the early physicians of the county as well as of Freedom, but aside from this I have not succeeded in establishing any reliable data.

Dwight Chase located in Sandusky about 1846, coming here from Cohocton. He became a surgeon in the army during the Rebellion. Returning here after the war he soon removed to Iowa. He was considered a most competent physician and surgeon and established a large country practice.

J. Warren Sawyer commenced his medical studies with Dwight Chase and succeeded to the latter's practice. His father, Col. Earl Sawyer, was an early settler (1811), built the first frame house in town, was the first town clerk, and did several other "first things." Dr. Sawyer was an able financier and endeavored to become a politician. He went south and finally to Indianapolis, Ind., where he is now living.

C. C. Mason, a student of Dr. Colgrove, of Sardinia, attended lectures in New York city and in Buffalo, and was located here a short time. Towards the latter part of the war he received an appointment as surgeon in a colored regiment. He finally went to Rushford, Allegany county, and died there in 1892. Dr. Mason was well read and an active member of the Baptist church.

E. J. Burlingame came here from Pennsylvania and removed after a number of years to Buffalo, where he still lives. He was made a member of the County Medical Society in 1874. He was once a preacher of the Christian denomination.

E. W. Earle, homeopathist, made his appearance in Sandusky about 1873 to begin his medical career, practiced some eight years, removed to Arcade, Wyoming county, and thence to Rochester, where he has sprung into prominence in his profession. He was a student of Baxter Sovereign, of Yorkshire.

B. B. Grover came from Wyoming county, remained a year or two, and went to Grimes, Iowa, of which place he has been postmaster.

Edward C. Barker hung out his shingle in Sandusky in 1884. He was a graduate (June 1, 1880) of the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati and a native of Onondaga county, coming here, however, from Wyoming county. He went to Union City, Pa. He was "a regular Yankee for asking questions."

Arthur H. Wright.—See Yorkshire.

William Arthur Hubbard was born in Centerville, Allegany county, was graduated as an M. D. from the University of Buffalo on March 18, 1887, and immediately located in Sandusky. His stay was short, but creditable.

H. J. Ashley.—See Machias.

William Stanton, born in Portage, Livingston county, April 5, 1867, received his medical diploma from the University of Buffalo, and located in Sandusky in the spring of 1891. He left in July, 1892.

W. H. Leonard will be remembered more for his money making than for his professional career. He was a graduate of the Cincinnati Eclectic College, came here from Onondaga county, and finally drifted around to Syracuse.

GREAT VALLEY.

James Trowbridge was the first physician to locate in this town. He was poor and visited his patients on foot. He located at Kill Buck and went finally to Hinsdale.—See Hinsdale.

A. S. Bonesteel was a native of this town. After practicing his profession here a few years he went to Corry, Pa., where he died. He also practiced in West Salamanca. He joined the County Medical Society in 1870. While here he married.

Dr. Clements, a German doctor, died here.—See Randolph.

Nathan F. Marble first located in Chapplesburg in Humphrey, and came to Peth in this town, where he died recently. He was licensed August 2, 1874, by the censors of the State Eclectic Medical Society. Dr. Marble was a native of Madison county.

Eugene Crary, son of Augustus Crary, of Ellicottville, studied medicine with his father and started on his career at Great Valley Center. After a few years he removed to Ohio.

Hale Crary, also a son of Augustus, studied medicine too with his father and did some medical work, living in Great Valley, where he died.

Horace B. Miller.—See Ellicottville.

Edward M. Shaffner was born in Ashford, June 5, 1854, was educated at Springville, and began the study of medicine with Dr. Jackson, of that place. After one year spent in the Medical Department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor he entered the same department in the University of Buffalo and was graduated therefrom February 26, 1884. From then until January, 1886, he practiced first in Ellicottville and afterward in Humphrey, and since then has been located at Great Valley. He married Ella, daughter of Elam Chandler, of Ashford, and they have one daughter, Ethel I. Dr. Shaffner joined the Medical Society in 1889.

HINSDALE.

James Trowbridge was the first resident physician in Hinsdale. Moving about as he did he had the honor also of being the first practitioner in Great Valley and Ellicottville. He had been an assistant surgeon in the army and was poor and somewhat broken down from early excesses. With his wife he came to Ellicottville in 1816, boarded with a Mr. Leonard six months, and removed to Great Valley. Soon afterward he came to Hinsdale, where he remained until 1844, when he went to Ohio and died. It is claimed that he also practiced medicine for a time in Franklinville. He was considered a good physician and generally did an extensive business.

Edward Torrey.—See Allegany.

Paul Clark came here in 1836 from Friendship, Allegany county, and did a large practice until his health failed, when he sold to Dr. Brownson and returned. He shortly afterward died in Nile of consumption. He was a careful, quiet, judicious physician and highly respected. He was pre-eminently a family doctor. Dr. Clark was a member of the old County Medical Society.

Ira J. Brownson succeeded Paul Clark in January, 1853. He also came from Friendship, with a license from the censors of the Allegany County Medical Society, and resided here until his death December 18, 1889, practicing up to two or three years previous. The Cattaraugus County Medical Society, of which he became a member December 4, 1867, granted him a license September 2, 1874. In 1877-79 he was its treasurer. He was a Democrat in politics and in every position in life was greatly respected. During his professional career here he had several partners.

John Palmer, a native of Allegany, began his career here. He was assistant surgeon in the 85th N. Y. Regt. during the war. He went to Corry, Pa., and died there.

George Palmer, a nephew of John Palmer, read medicine with his uncle and with Paul Clark, and practiced here a short time.

Bradley Goodyear came to Hinsdale from Groton, Tompkins county, remained a few years, and went to Buffalo, where his sons are prominent coal dealers.

Alexis E. Willard, a son of the well known Dr. A. E. Willard, of Friendship, began his professional life here about 1868, remaining some six years. He was a graduate of the University of Buffalo and a partner of Ira J. Brownson. He joined the Cattaraugus County Medical Society in October, 1867, and was elected one of the censors. He returned to Friendship, where as well as here he built up an enviable reputation.

R. A. Drake became associated with Dr. Brownson somewhere about 1865. He was both a doctor and a minister, and while here it is stated he was pastor of the M. E. church. In the ordinary vernacular he was a "character."

Dr. Pruyn.—See Farmersville.

John Norton practiced here awhile with Ira J. Brownson. He came from Belmont, Allegany county, and returned there, dying there finally of consumption.

Dr. Hinman emigrated here from the central part of the State. He was for a time in partnership with Paul Clark, but afterward alone. He married a wife here, and finally went to California.

H. D. Hillman practiced in Hinsdale for a number of years preceding 1883, when he went into other business and is now a farmer in town. He came from Cuba, Allegany county.

Dr. Harvey followed medicine two or three years with Paul Clark. Aside from this nothing can be learned of him.

Dr. Kennedy was in practice here about 1855. He was in town only a short time and died.

Dr. Dana was an old physician in Friendship, Allegany county. He went into partnership with Ira J. Brownson, continued a brief period, returned, and died there. His big Newfoundland dog was one of his closest friends.

Hallett Fay came here from Hornellsville, whither he returned in less than a year.

Dr. Suydenham, whom many will remember, located and practiced in Hinsdale about 1878. He went to Dunkirk.

Adelbert W. Truman was born in Richburg, Allegany county, was reared at Alfred Center, where he began the study of medicine with his father, William M.; and was graduated in 1870 from the University of Philadelphia (eclectic). In 1871 he came to Hinsdale with his father, the two practicing in partnership for six months, when the father returned to Allegany county.

October 22, 1872, A. W. married Augusta, daughter of A. D. Salisbury, of Hinsdale. In 1873 Dr. Truman removed to Alfred Center and subsequently to De Ruyter, N. Y., where he now resides.

Appleton K. Corbin, a native of Waverly, Tioga county, and a graduate on February 28, 1879, of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York city, began his medical business in Hinsdale, married here a daughter of Alfred C. Torrey, and was associated with Dr. Brownson for a time. He became a member of the County Medical Society in 1881. In the fall of 1881 he went to Clearmont, Pa., thence to Wilcox, Pa., and finally to Bradford, where he is now.

William H. Vincent, son of Hiram and Wealthy (Blakely) Vincent, was born in Persia, this county, April 3, 1854. His father was a soldier in the Civil war and died in Andersonville prison. The son spent his early years in caring for his widowed mother and her other five children, and finally succeeded in beginning a course of study at Friendship Academy, teaching school and studying alternately until he was graduated in June, 1877. Soon afterward he entered the University of Buffalo and was graduated as an M. D. February 21, 1881. Dr. Vincent began practice that year in partnership with Ira J. Brownson, his old preceptor, whose entire business he succeeded to upon the death of the elder doctor in December, 1889. A Republican in politics Dr. Vincent was chosen supervisor four times—from 1883 to 1886,—was one of the organizers of the Hinsdale Union Free School, and elected continuously a member of the Board of Education. He joined the County Medical Society in 1892. October 17, 1883, Dr. Vincent married Ada M., daughter of Henry Flint, of Friendship. They have one daughter, Genevieve, born January 28, 1888.

HUMPHREY.

Calvin Chickering was one of the earliest if not the earliest to settle as a physician in Humphrey. He was born in Amherst, N. H., was educated at Dartmouth College, and received a license to practice from the Cattaraugus County Medical Society. Beginning practice at Yorkshire Corners in 1829 he moved in 1831 to Ohio, but in 1836 returned to Cattaraugus county and settled for life in Humphrey, where he died in 1856. He combined the calling of a farmer with the professional work of a doctor, and succeeded in both occupations. He married Caroline, a daughter of Augustus Crary.

Virgilium Reed, a native of Connecticut, studied medicine with Dr. Powers, of Spencerport, Monroe county, was graduated from the Geneva Medical College in 1854, and in 1857 came to Ellicottville and entered into practice with Clark Crary. In December of that year, however, he moved to Humphrey, where in 1858 he married the widow of Calvin Chickering, who survives him. Dr. Reed died in 1866. He had an extensive ride and was much respected.

James M. Andrews was born in New York city, March 10, 1837. He began studying medicine in Rochester in 1860, was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo in February, 1867, and began his professional life in Rochester, where he was sanitary inspector for four years. In 1875 he came to Humphrey, practiced here until his health failed in 1888, when he retired wholly from medical work and removed to Franklinville, where he now resides. In April, 1861, he enlisted in Co. E, 27th N. Y. Vols., in 1864 was appointed assistant to Surgeon Barnes, and in July, 1865, was honorably discharged. Dr. Andrews was justice of the peace four years in Humphrey and census enumerator in 1892 in Franklinville.

ISCHUA.

Dr. Ritchie was probably the first doctor to settle in this town, but when he came can not be determined. He moved here from Steuben county, whither he returned in 1842. He was not a regular practitioner.

Albert A. Simons spent the most of his life in Ischua. Born in Chaplin, Conn., February 2, 1819, he entered as a medical student the office of Richard Charles, of Angelica, Allegany county, read next with his uncle, Paul Simons, of Bridgeport, Conn., studied a short time at the Medical Department of Yale College, and began practice in 1841 in Cuba, but two months later removed to Ischua. In 1862 he enlisted in Co. C, 154th N. Y. Vols. Dr. Simons received a license from the Eclectic Medical Society of the 32d Senatorial District on September 23, 1874. He had two sons who are physicians—one in Chautauqua county, the other in West Virginia. Dr. Simons retired from active practice some years ago and died March 31, 1893, his remains being buried at Scott's Corners. He married, in April, 1842, Marilla S., daughter of Benjamin Townsend, of Ischua, who survives him.

Dr. Frank, a Pole, came here about 1850 from his native country, remained four years or so, and went to Buffalo and thence west.

Ransom Terry, son of Elisha and Amy (Hawley) Terry, was born in Franklinville, April 14, 1838, studied medicine with A. A. Simons, of Ischua, and his uncle, M. Terry, of Painted Post, Steuben county, was graduated February 24, 1874, from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, and began the practice of his profession in Ischua, where he still continues. Dr. Terry was supervisor of his town in 1878, health officer from the organization of the board, and member of the Olean Board of Pension Examiners since October, 1892. In 1874 he became a member of the County Medical Society and afterward one of its censors. He married, January 25, 1877, Ellen G., daughter of Wellington Morris, of Franklinville.

LEON.

Samuel Daniels, a Thompsonian doctor from Vermont, was the first resident to practice medicine in Leon, but he did not make a business of it. He died here about 1855.

Joseph Wilson, the first regular practitioner, located here in 1834 and had an extensive ride for several years.

Everett Stickney was born in Reading, Vt., and received a medical license February 28, 1834, from the Herkimer County Medical Society. He settled in Leon in 1835, coming here from Erie county, and remained until his death on August 12, 1891. He partially relinquished his practice in 1869, when A. A. Hubbell took up his career. Dr. Stickney married, first, Lucy Green, of Erie county, and second, Emeline Wells, who survives him. He became a member of the old Medical Society and was one of its Board of Censors. He was widely known and quite popular, acquired a host of friends, and left an indelible impression upon the whole community.

Fred C. Beals.—See Salamanca.

A. A. Hubbell was born on a farm in Conewango, May 1, 1842, son of Schuyler Philip Hubbell and Hepzibah Farnsworth. His education was acquired at the district schools and Randolph Academy, interspersed with school teaching as a means of support, and in the summer of 1865 he registered as a medical student with G. J. Ackley, of Cattaraugus. Dr. Ackley died soon afterward and young Hubbell resumed his studies with Lyman Twomley, of Little Valley. He was obliged to practice economy, and to better do this he decided to enter the Eclectic Medical College of Pennsylvania, in 1867, from which he was graduated January 4, 1869. February 1st, following, Dr. Hubbell began the practice of his chosen profession in Leon, but in a few years became dissatisfied with the reputation of his eclectic alma mater. He finally entered the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo and was graduated as an M. D. on February 23, 1876. For his graduation thesis he received one of the Fillmore cash prizes. He has frequently contributed valuable scientific papers to societies and periodicals. About 1880 Dr. Hubbell resolved to make a specialty of diseases of the eye and ear and removed to Buffalo, where he now resides, and where he fills the position of professor of diseases of the eye and ear in the Medical Department of Niagara University. He was elected a member of the Cattaraugus County Medical Society in 1878 and is a fellow of the New York State Medical Association. June 27, 1873, Dr. Hubbell married Evangeline, daughter of Capt. William Fancher.

Dr. Cornwell did some professional work here about the year 1830. Nothing further can be learned of him.

John E. Caneen, son of Frank, was born in Leon, August 20, 1855, and February 27, 1883, received his diploma from the University of Buffalo. He did his first medical work here from then until 1884, when he went to Chautauqua county and is now in Ripley.

A doctor named Eddy followed medicine in Leon a couple of years, but did not accomplish much business.

Fred E. Tuttle, son of Edmond D., was born March 30, 1857. His grandfather, Stephen Tuttle, was a soldier in the War of 1812 and a contractor on the Champlain canal. Fred E. Tuttle received his literary education at the State Normal School in Fredonia, began the study of medicine in the office of Robert E. Gifford, of Cassadaga, Chautauqua county, was graduated February 25, 1880, from the Medical University of Buffalo, and commenced his professional career in this town. He is a member of the Lake Erie and Cattaraugus County Medical Societies, joining the latter in 1884. He married Lillian M. Fisher, of Villenova, Chautauqua county, by whom he has had one daughter, Bertha L.

LITTLE VALLEY.

A. B. Wilder, tradition says, was the first settled physician in town. A native of Vermont he inherited strong New England characteristics. He was an old style apothecary, scholarly, and successful at first. Dr. Wilder was a member of the old County Medical Society. He was unmarried. He died at Little Valley before the war.

Alfred Ayres is said to have kept a store here prior to 1830. It is quite probable that he is the same Alfred Ayres who is recorded as being one of the first doctors in Ashford.—See Ashford.

Alson Leavenworth had the first brick house in town. It was valued in 1837 at $500.—See New Albion.

Stillman Chase, an eclectic doctor from New England, settled quite early at the Center and kept hotel as well as followed medicine. He was also a farmer, and died here about 1856.

Dr. Irish located at an early day on what is now the Willis farm and practiced medicine a few years. He was considered a good doctor for those days.

Dr. French came to Little Valley Center from New England as a cotemporary and partner of Dr. Miner. He soon went west.

John H. Miner was from Madison, N. Y., and returned there. With Dr. French he established an excellent practice for those times—from 1835 to 1840. He was well educated.

Wellington M. Cheney was born in Yorkshire and came hither about 1873, remaining two or three years, and going thence to Washington, D. C., then to the Pennsylvania coal regions, and finally to Dansville, N. Y., where he is interested in the production of patent medicines. While here he was coroner a term.

Daniel Bucklin, son of Amos, was born in Wallingford, Vt., September 16, 1811, studied medicine in physicians' offices there and in Mansfield, Ohio, and about 1839 came to Salamanca, where he started in life as a doctor. In 1840, however, he moved to the town of Little Valley, where, in 1842, he married Cynthia, daughter of Abner Chase, who survives him, his death occurring July 23, 1881, at Little Valley village, whither they had come to live in 1856. He was licensed September 2, 1874, by the allopathic school. Dr. Bucklin for a number of years owned a general store in partnership with his brother-in-law, Charles McG. Chase. He was supervisor in 1864, assemblyman in 1856, and held several minor offices. He possessed a strong and robust constitution, which carried him through a long and successful medical career, but at last his health gave way under the incessant strain forced upon it, and he was obliged to give up much of his business.

E. E. Davis, an eclectic, a nephew of Stillman Chase, was here from 1873 to 1876. He came from and returned to Forestville, Chautauqua county, where his father lived. He secured a good practice during his brief stay.

J. P. Powers began a five years' practice about 1857, but soon got into other business, owning a steam grist-mill with Daniel Bucklin at one time. He went west. He was a member of the old County Medical Society.

Dr. Grout married a sister of the wife of Dr. Miner. He did not succeed very well as a physician in Little Valley and finally removed to Pennsylvania.

Henry Van Aernam.—See Franklinville.

Dr. Carpenter, a Quaker and a queer old gentleman, well posted on both medical and general topics, odd even to eccentricity, but a great favorite withal, practiced his school of medicine here a few years and went to Jamestown, where he died. He had considerable ability as a doctor and treated successfully a number of cases of a chronic nature.

D. P. Baker had a large business here at one time as a homeopathic physician. He came from East Greenwich, R. I., and returned there, practicing there since.

Frank C. Davie was born in Bolivar, Allegany county, in 1856, was graduated June 22, 1876, from the Long Island Medical College Hospital, and began practice in Little Valley. He had previously studied and graduated in medicine at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. After a brief stay here Dr. Davie went to Le Roy, Minn., and one year later returned to this State to Angelica, Allegany county, where he is now. He is a brother of C. D. Davie, the present surrogate.

Dr. Satterlee followed medicine here about 1871 for a year or two, but scarcely anyone seems to remember him.

Jacob D. Woodruff, a native of Westfield, N. J., and a medical graduate on February 21, 1882, of the University of Buffalo, registered as a resident physician on February 28th of the same year. He is also one of the forgotten ones, and probably did little business.

Seaver Z. Fisher, grandson of a captain of the War of 1812, was born in Bradford, Pa., January 14, 1845. His father being first a lumberman and then a farmer the son early became accustomed to hard work. His education he obtained in the State Normal School at Edenboro, Pa. March 4, 1864, he enlisted in Co. I, 78th N. Y. Vols., and participated in the battles of Resseca, New Hope Church, Pine Hill, and Mud Creek, receiving at the latter a severe wound. He was discharged in July, 1865. He finally took lectures at the University of Buffalo and was graduated as an M. D. from the Miami Medical College, Cincinnati, in March, 1878. From then until 1892 he practiced his profession in Little Valley. September 21, 1876, he married Lillie E., daughter of the late Ira Wood, of Little Valley, and they have had three daughters. Dr. Fisher joined the County Medical Society in 1885, became one of its censors, and in 1888 was elected delegate to the State Society. He was president of the Board of Education, health officer, county coroner, and five years treasurer of the Cattaraugus County Agricultural Society.

Samuel Learned.—See Salamanca.

George Albert Jameson was born in Ontario, Can., January 11, 1850, was educated in high schools and Albert College in Canada, was graduated in medicine from the University of Vermont, and began practice in Chateaugay, N. Y. In the fall of 1891 he came to Little Valley. Previous to his medical studies Dr. Jameson was for about fifteen years a Presbyterian minister.

Lyman Twomley was born in Lancaster, N. H., and came while yet a young man to the town of Machias. August 16, 1832, he became a clerk in the store of Holmes & Washburn at $7 a month. In 1834 he married Urania M. Holmes, and in 1836 formed a partnership with Stephen Holmes at Machias. He very early formed the design to study medicine, but his plans were not easy of fulfillment. Nevertheless he began his studies and continued them as best he could, continuing, however, his mercantile pursuits. After a time he attended lectures at the Medical College of New York, graduating from that institution in June, 1851. He continued lectures after his graduation. While in Machias he was a very active man. He carried on a general country store. He was a justice of the peace, taking the oath of office the first time February 27, 1845, and again January 10, 1849, and his papers show that he did a large business. He also held the office of postmaster a long time, and was supervisor from Machias for four years (1841-44). He was also school inspector during a portion of the time. His business in Machias was continued until the spring of 1852. His books show the last entry for goods sold on the 13th of March, and on the 17th he notes his arrival at Little Valley. The first item for medical services was on March 19, 1852, and from that time until within the last year of his life he had a large practice, and ranked as one of the leading physicians of the county. He was supervisor of Little Valley in 1859 and again in 1868. He took an active interest in the removal of the county seat to Little Valley, devoting considerable time and money to the project. He joined the County Medical Society in 1868, becoming its vice-president in 1871, and was one of its censors. Dr. Twomley possessed literary ability of a high order, and wrote many poems, plays, and papers upon public, national, and social questions. He was to the last a thorough student of his profession, keeping abreast of the best thought and the latest discoveries in medical science. He was an indefatigable worker, and he carried with him wherever he went a confidence that was truly remarkable. He was also very kind hearted and benevolent, ministering to rich and poor alike. His smile in the sick room was a benediction and his unfailing humor was an invaluable aid to his medicines. He died at his summer home at Chautauqua, N. Y., August 13, 1886, leaving a widow, since deceased, and an adopted daughter, Minnie D. Twomley.

Seba S. Bedient, a native of Mansfield, was born August 27, 1855. His father, Amos H., was an early settler of that town, but died in Little Valley, March 4, 1889, aged seventy-four. Receiving an academic education he began the study of medicine with Lyman Twomley, graduating from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo on February 27, 1878. He at once commenced his chosen profession in Little Valley. Dr. Bedient was the first physician in Cattaraugus county to register his name, etc., in the county clerk's office under the act of May 29, 1880. He registered August 4, 1880. He was made a member of the Medical Society in 1878. He married Kate Lamb, of Marilla, Erie county, and they have two daughters.

J. W. Mower, born in Schuyler, Herkimer county, December 9, 1824, attended Whitestown Seminary, and was graduated from the Albany Medical College on January 27, 1852, and from the New York Homeopathic Medical College on March 3, 1864. From 1852 until 1878 he was in practice in his native town; he then removed to Buffalo and in 1886 to Little Valley.

F. Granville Barnes was born in Paris, France, September 5, 1854. He studied medicine and was graduated February 21, 1875, from the Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago. He followed hospital practice until 1885, when he went to Syracuse as a physician and surgeon, and in the fall of 1892 removed to this town, where he is establishing a good business.

LYNDON.

Dr. Hotchkiss is given by an old writer as being "the first physician" in the town of Lyndon. No one seems to remember him, however.

M. C. Bissell.—See Carrolton.

Hattie B. Stevenson, although registered as from Franklinville, lived and practiced in Lyndon a short time. She was born in Farmersville, attended Ten Broeck Academy, and was graduated February 21, 1881, from the Eclectic Medical College of New York city. She soon went to Buffalo.

Augustus Hayden settled in the edge of Lyndon in 1824 or '25. He died in 1835.

MACHIAS.

Dr. Barber was the first physician to locate in Machias. Coming here about 1830 he remained two or three years, and was an unmarried man some forty years of age. Whence he came or whither he went can not be determined.

Dr. Kneeland, also unmarried, but young, succeeded Dr. Barber, after a brief interval, in 1833, and was succeeded himself by Isaac Shaw.

Isaac Shaw located here in 1835, coming from Cayuga county. He was some years inspector of schools and made some radical changes in the school system, and a marked improvement in its efficiency was manifest. About 1844 he sold out to Dr. Copp. Dr. Shaw was a member of the old County Medical Society.

John L. Eddy was in partnership with Dr. Copp a short time.—See Olean.

J. M. Copp came to Machias from New Hampshire about 1844 and practiced his profession here ten years. His first wife died here and at her request her remains were sent back to New Hampshire for interment; his second wife also died in Machias and was buried here. For a time he was in partnership with John L. Eddy. In 1854 Dr. Copp removed to Waterford, Pa., and later to Portville, and finally to the west. He was a good singer and prominently identified with the advancement of education. It is said that he was also a practitioner for brief periods in Franklinville and in Rushford, Allegany county.

Thomas J. King, A. M. and M. D., was born at East Hampton, L. I., June 4, 1825, and died in Machias, November 5, 1889, being the only child of Col. Samuel T. and Martha (Leek) King. Attending the public schools and Clinton Academy at Bridge Hampton, L. I., of which he afterward became principal, he entered in 1844 Williams College, graduating therefrom as Master of Arts in 1848. After teaching school for a time he began the study of medicine with Abraham Van Scoy, of East Hampton, and in 1885 was graduated as an M. D. from the Albany Medical College. In the summer of 1856 he settled permanently in Machias and resided and practiced there until his death. From 1875 until January, 1887, Dr. King had as a partner H. J. Ashley, and from then until he died his son was his medical associate and since then has assumed his practice. In 1860 Dr. King married Mary Elizabeth, daughter of the late Wiggin M. Farrar, by whom he had two sons, Dr. Clarence and Harold S. Mrs. King died about three years after their marriage. In 1876 he was chosen member of Assembly and the following year re-elected. In the House he was made chairman of the Committee on Public Health and a member of the Committee on Apportionment. Dr. King became a member of the County Medical Society in 1870 and was the same year elected its vice-president. He had been pension examiner for many years, and at the time of his death was attending physician to the Cattaraugus County Alms-House and Insane Asylum and local surgeon for the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad. A neighboring physician has said: "Dr. King was as a father to us younger physicians, and as a consultant I regarded him a model. * * * He explained our difficult cases to us so as to make them plain and corrected our mistakes in a way that half convinced us, as well as the patient, that we had not committed an error." A medical journal says: "Dr. King was regarded as a ripe scholar, was active in many philanthropic works, and very popular in the village where he had so long resided.

Without being a contributor to medical literature he wielded an extensive influence among his brethren by reason of his clinical knowledge, his philosophical turn of mind, and his power of diagnosis. His leanings were toward medicine, pure and simple, although his surgical operations were numerous."

Clarence King, son of Thomas J. and Mary E. (Farrar) King, was born in Machias, June 6, 1861, received his education at Chamberlain Institute and Ten Broeck Academy, for one year was a private pupil of Rev. J. L. Davis, now a professor in the Methodist school at Lima, N. Y., and finally began the study of medicine under his father, entering afterward and graduating February 24, 1885, from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo. His thesis, entitled "Hereditary Chorea," received honorable mention by the college faculty and was published in the New York Medical Journal. Dr. King has written and published a number of papers valuable to medical science, and all of them are considerably quoted as authority. In 1891 he took a post-graduate course at the New York Polyclinic Medical College. The practice of his profession he began in Machias immediately upon his graduation at Buffalo, and in January, 1887, he formed a partnership with his father, which was only terminated by the death of the senior partner in November, 1889, since which time Clarence King has continued alone. He succeeded his father as physician to the County Alms-House and Insane Asylum and local surgeon to the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad. With his brother-in-law he also conducts a drug and grocery store in the village. Dr. King is a member of the National Association of Railway Surgeons and in 1887 joined the County Medical Society, was elected its vice-president in 1890, and has been one of its censors. May 13, 1885, he married Altie S. Jackson, eldest daughter of Rev. M. D. Jackson, a Methodist clergyman then of Centerville, Allegany county. They have had two sons and a daughter.

Harmon J. Ashley, a son of Dennison and Lucinda (Gillett) Ashley, was born in Freedom on July 29, 1849, was graduated as an M. D. from the University of Buffalo in February, 1875, and that spring began his career as a physician in partnership with Thomas J. King. This continued until January 1, 1887, since which time Dr. Ashley has practiced alone. In the winter of 1886-87 Dr. Ashley took a special course in the treatment of diseases of women and children in the New York Polyclinic Medical College. In 1875 he joined the County Medical Society and has been a censor.

Madam Le-o-net-to, an Indian doctress, bought a house in Machias in 1891 and has since made this her central headquarters, from which she makes tours through adjoining counties.

The following persons have gone forth from Machias as legally equipped physicians and are not mentioned in other towns in Cattaraugus county: Fletcher Follett, 1864, Bradford, Pa.; Jesse O. Randall, 1882, Silver Springs, N. Y.; Edwin M. Baker, 1883, Clyde, O.

NAPOLI.

Phineas F. Noble, the first doctor to locate in this town, and a school teacher as well, came hither from Ontario county in 1820, and afterward moved to Iowa, but subsequently returned to Ontario county, where he died. He was a military captain and the first militia officer in Napoli. He settled on lot 34, and his was the first marriage to occur among the pioneer settlers, but he went outside the town to find a proper officer to perform the ceremony. His wife was Statira Canfield.

Elijah Harmon was the first of two noted physicians to settle in Napoli. The second child of Rev. Elias Harmon, he was born in the town of Marcellus, N. Y., in 1805, and studied medicine first with Dr. Hoyt, of Aurora, and afterward with Dr. Hammond, of the city of Buffalo, from which city he "was graduated under Dr. Hamilton about 1830." About the year 1832 he located here and for some years was associated in practice with his brother-in-law, Samuel S. Wilcox, who came to Napoli in 1841. Dr. Harmon had an extensive business, often extending a distance of fifty miles. He was a man highly respected, strictly moral in character, honest and upright in all his dealings. For his first wife he married Mary B., only daughter of Rev. W. J. Wilcox, then pastor of the Napoli Presbyterian church. They had three children—Lysander Elias, born 1834, died 1835; Mary Jane (Mrs. Austin Harvey, of Little Valley), born May 9, 1842; and Martha L. (Mrs. C. B. Fairchild, of New York city), born October 1, 1844. His second marriage, to Saloma Wood, of Lowell, Mass., bore no issue. Dr. Harmon was a charter member of the old County Medical Society, its president in 1837, and its censor in 1834, and died in West Randolph in the spring of 1859. One of the tenderest traits in human nature was manifest in Dr. Harmon when his first wife died, leaving his youngest child a motherless babe two months old. To her he gave until his death a mother's tender care and a father's fond affection.

Samuel S. Wilcox was the second of two noted medical practitioners to make Napoli almost their life-long home. Born June 28, 1817, in Otisco, Onondaga county, a son of Rev. William J. Wilcox, one of the very earliest ministers in Cattaraugus county and the leading spirit in the organization of many of the first Presbyterian and Congregational churches in different towns, he began his medical studies in the Geneva Medical College, from which he received the degree of M. D., and his practice was commenced with Dr. Powers, of Spencerport, Monroe county, who for a brief period was his preceptor. January 27, 1841, he married Mary J. Bell, of Sodus, N. Y., and the following May located in Napoli. He had been here, however, in 1826, with his father, William J., who died in this town July 14, 1842, aged sixty years. From 1841 to 1849 he was in partnership with his brother-in-law, Elijah Harmon. Dr. Wilcox died here May 28, 1872. A few years before his death he retired from active practice. Richard D., his son, was a physician in Salamanca (see Salamanca). As a doctor and a gentleman Dr. Wilcox was greatly respected. He acquired a wide practice and a host of friends, and was an honored member of the old County Medical Society.

Dr. Blodgett came into town about 1827.—See Randolph.

William C. Peaslee was a physician here in 1878, but how long before or how long after is not definitely known. It is certain he left prior to 1880 for Colorado for his health. While here he married Lena, daughter of John Damon.

Dr. Barnes, it is said, was first a preacher and then a doctor and combined the two professions during a short stay in Napoli.

NEW ALBION.

Dr. Brown is given the credit by former writers of being the pioneer physician in New Albion, and as nothing definite can be learned of him at this late day we will leave his name and record to the tender mercies of tradition.

William F. Underwood had quite a lengthy career here. He was an eclectic, popular; but ostentatious, yet he built up a very good practice, and went to Hornellsville soon after the war.

Theron L. Alling was born in Canaan, Conn., in 1800, studied medicine at Fairfield Medical College, began his profession at Harmony, Chautauqua county, and came to New Albion in June, 1839. Remaining until 1853, he returned to Chautauqua county, where he died February 20, 1875.

Gustavus J. Ackley was a physician in Cattaraugus during the closing years of the war. He died there in the winter of 1865-66. He was a medical student of Thomas J. Wheeler and a practitioner in Ellington, Chautauqua county, whence he came to this town, being a graduate of the University of Buffalo.

Dr. Devoe came to Cattaraugus village from the west and followed medicine here several years—a good physician, popular, well read, and scientific. A son practiced his profession in Buffalo and later in Seattle.

Albert D. Lake.—See Persia.

Alson Leavenworth,* although he did not follow the practice of medicine after settling in New Albion, he nevertheless should go on record as a resident here, for here he ended his life, in itself a remarkable career. A physician in many towns in the county, a surgeon of recognized ability, a shrewd business man as well as a doctor, he became widely known and left to posterity a name that will live for generations to come. He was born in Woodbury, Conn., October 12, 1788, and acquired his preliminary education at the common schools and at farm work. Upon attaining his majority he commenced the study of medicine with local practitioners and in May, 1811, having passed the allopathic examination, was licensed to practice medicine and surgery in his native State. October 17th of that year he married Sally Canfield, of Woodbury. In the autumn of 1812 Dr. Leavenworth went to Philadelphia and entered the University of Pennsylvania as a medical student. That institution was then in charge of that famous surgeon, Benjamin Rush, also a signer of the Declaration of Independence. Graduating in the spring of 1813 Dr. Leavenworth returned to Connecticut, resumed his practice, and soon after was appointed surgeon in the State militia and ordered to the service of the United States in the War of 1812-15. A dispute arose between the government officers and the officers of the army as to which should have the power of appointment, which resulted in Dr. Leavenworth not seeing active service under his commission. In the spring of 1818 he started with his family for western New York and on September 25th reached the village of Ellicottville, where he took up the practice of his profession as the first physician in that town. His ride extended from Corydon and Kinzua, Pa., to Collins, Erie county, among the Indians as well as the whites. Dr. Leavenworth rode horseback and carried an axe to cut browse for his horse and to "spot trees" to find his way back. Frequently he was obliged to sleep in the woods on hemlock boughs and remain away from home several days at a time. Being often called upon to perform difficult cases of surgery, a noteworthy event may be appropriately recorded here. An Indian had suffered several years with a lame knee that finally became so dangerous as to threaten his life. The Quakers residing at the Quaker Mission on the Allegheny river applied to Dr. Leavenworth for advice and he decided that amputation was necessary. Accordingly the doctor made (from necessity) his surgical instruments from a carpenter's chest of tools. John Green and another resident of Great Valley were selected as assistants, and as the doctor began his work the latter assistant fainted. Green made a brisk application of sole leather upon his nether person, and he speedily revived and left, and the doctor, assisted by Green, successfully accomplished the painful task. The Indian fully regained his health and lived to a good old age. In 1831 Dr. Leavenworth removed to Little Valley, and about 1836 to Cold Spring, where he became largely interested in timber land. He subsequently lived for several years in Randolph and about 1851 came to Cattaraugus in New Albion, where he erected the first brick house in the town, and where he died. January 25, 1823, he was appointed first judge of the County Court, which office he held until February 15, 1833, and in 1840 was appointed loan commissioner. He was commissioner to superintend the erection of the county buildings at Ellicottville, commissioner to lay out public roads on the Indian reservation, and was supervisor from Cold Spring from 1843 to 1846 and from New Albion in 1853 and 1854. He was also instrumental in procuring from the Holland Land Company an entire surrender of the accumulated interest on land contracts held by them against the early settlers, and was, besides, one of the original projectors of and a liberal contributor to the Randolph Academy (now the Chamberlain Institute), and was a member of the old County Medical Society. In all these positions he served with remarkable ability, evincing a well trained mind and a keen penetration. He was an eminent physician, a skillful surgeon, a shrewd business man, a public spirited citizen, a good politician, a staunch friend, and a liberal benefactor.

Cyrus W. Babcock, a native of Persia, this county, graduated February 21, 1866, from the Philadelphia University, of Philadelphia, Pa., an eclectic school, and in the 'seventies located in practice in Cattaraugus village. He became quite popular during his few years' stay, and moved to Buffalo soon after 1880, where he still resides.

George Lattin, one of the present physicians in Cattaraugus, is a son of Linus and Julia (Root) Lattin, and was born in Mansfield, August 17, 1847. Linus Lattin settled in that town in 1831 and died there aged eighty-two years. The son attended Griffith Institute, Springville, and Carleton College, Northfield, Minn., taught school, and was graduated in medicine on March 1, 1875, from the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York city. Practicing then a year in Ellicottville he came thence to Cattaraugus. As a Republican in politics he served as supervisor in 1886 and 1887 and became a member of the County Medical Society in 1875. Of this he was vice-president two years (1884 and 1885), secretary in 1878 and 1879, was one of its censors, and in 1892 was elected its president. In February, 1874, he married Grace, daughter of Charles Harvey, an early settler of Mansfield. They have three children—Alice, born in 1876, and Berton and Benton (twins), born August 5, 1885.

Edwin H. Millington was born in New York city, January 3, 1846, where his father was for many years engaged in mercantile business. W. F., his only brother, is engaged as a physician in Brooklyn. Edwin H. began the study of medicine in New York in the office of Prof. R. S. Newton, taking in the meantime a course of lectures at the Eclectic Medical College of New York city, from which he was graduated February 15, 1867. He was then appointed physician in one of the dispensaries and finally resigned to remove to Saratoga. From June, 1872, to April, 1881, Dr. Millington was located at Hancock, Delaware county, where in May, 1874, he married Miss Lou Hall. Since 1881 he has resided and practiced his profession at Cattaraugus. In 1886 he was for several weeks engaged in hospital practice in New York city.

Chauncey M. Jones was born near Ithaca in 1829, was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, February 1, 1882, located in practice at Cattaraugus soon afterward, and died here. He married Sophia P., daughter of James Buffington, of Mansfield.

Sophia P. Jones, wife and widow of Chauncey M., was born in Mansfield in 1832, and was graduated from the University of Buffalo on February 27, 1887. She began practice in Cattaraugus and established here a sanitarium, which was continued two or three years. She then moved to West Salamanca, where she followed medicine with her son Wirt W. from his graduation until the fall of 1892, when both moved to Greenville, Mich. She became a member of the County Medical Society in 1884.

O. J. Stafford was here less than a year about 1886. On February 20, 1878, he graduated from the University of Buffalo. He came from and returned to Canajoharie, N. Y., where he was born.

Henry M. Schall was here a few months, first with E. H. Millington and then alone. He graduated from the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, April 5, 1887, and likewise went to Rochester.

Dr. Angus came into this town from the west, was in partnership a short time with E. H. Millington, and went south. He was young, bright, and promising.

Lyman T. Wade, a native of Wisconsin, being born there February 14, 1867, was a graduate on March 20, 1888, of the Bennett Medical College, Chicago, came from that city here, and practiced first with E. H. Millington and later alone. In 1891 he removed to Rochester, where he has become a specialist.

OLEAN.

Norman Smith was the first physician to locate in Olean, coming hence from Pittsburg, Pa., about 1814. Born near Hartford, Conn., December 23, 1788, he married, January 7, 1808, Abigail Sanders, of Litchfield, Conn., where he pursued his medical studies, and where he received his diploma or license as a physician and surgeon on July 1, 1811. Soon afterward he removed to Pittsburg, Pa., and thence to Olean, and in August, 1828, went to Elmira, where he died March 7, 1874. While in Olean Dr. Smith was made surgeon of a local militia regiment. He was also a dentist, and was the first and for some time the only one in this part of the country. Dr. Smith was a devout Presbyterian, and a man of sterling qualities, being also a noted fisherman. His first wife died in 1839 and he married, second, Mrs. Mary Ann Tompkins, who died in 1846. His two wives were sisters. His old clock, which he cared for a long number of years, and which stood in his room, stopped at the exact moment when he breathed his last.

Alanson C. Bennett, who located in Olean in 1816, was a good doctor and a man of fine appearance. With three other men he was drowned in 1820 in the Allegheny river while on their way to Ellicottville to attend court. Their boat upset.

Dr. Eastman, as far as tradition goes, might also be said to have been one of the first medical practitioners in Olean, coming in 1818 or before, but aside from this fact no definite knowledge has been gleaned of him.

Dr. Rue was doubtless the first Thompsonian doctor here, but when he came, except that he "came early," can not be determined. It is quite probable that he was here about 1820.

Andrew Mead was a man of considerable note. He was from Stamford, Conn., locating in Olean as a physician in 1820. He was a graduate of a medical college in New York city. He followed medicine steadily until about 1833. March 28, 1831, he became associate judge of the County Court and about the year 1840 was appointed examiner and master in chancery. After this date Dr. Mead did little medical business. His library and practice finally passed into the hands of Lambert Whitney, who was at one time his student. His health failed or partially failed him, and it was principally on this account that he gave up his extensive ride and confined his practice to the village of Olean. Becoming a noted politician he was much of his life in office, living in his own as well as holding one. In 1845 he moved to Alleghany, where he was brutally murdered by Theodore Nicholas, a German, on December 18, 1869, aged nearly eighty years. Dr. Mead was a member of the old County Medical Society, was many years acting magistrate in Olean, and held many other positions of trust. He was a bachelor. Eccentric and talented, well read, a man of deep penetration, he was widely known and respected; he possessed a quick judgment and was decided and confident in his opinions. James G. Johnson, in his "Pioneer History of Olean," says of Dr. Mead: "As a physician who had received a thorough medical education, and had voluntarily supplemented it by two years' attendance in the principal hospitals of New York city, he was quick, skillful, penetrating, and discriminating, and in the early days of his practice was pre-eminently successful, and enjoyed to a more than usual degree the entire confidence of this community and a large section of country round about. Yet as time passed he alienated all his early friends by his intolerance, quarrelsomeness, and vindictiveness. He was an unreasonably warm friend and a bitter, relentless enemy. In contradistinction with the above I may mention that he contributed principally if not entirely to the education of two promising young men at Hamilton College for the ministry of the Baptist church, of which he was a member, and he did many other things equally benevolent and creditable to his goodness of heart." A further sketch of Dr. Mead may be found in Mr. Lincoln's chapter on the Bench and Bar.

Edwin Finn, son of Menzo White Finn, came from Cortland county to Olean in 1829. He had attended medical lectures at Fairfield, received a license from a medical society, and died here in April, 1842. Dr. Finn was not a brilliant man, but he was ambitious and industrious; his practice extended into adjacent towns. He was a charter member of the old County Medical Society and was elected its president in 1836.

Lambert Whitney, born in St. Johnsbury, Vt., October 10, 1812, received a common school education in his native town, removed in his youth with his parents to New Hampshire, and there commenced the study of medicine. In June, 1833, he came to Olean, being fourteen days making the journey by stage and the Erie canal. Arrived in Olean he resumed his medical studies in the office of Edwin Finn, finishing, however, with Andrew Mead, whose business and library he eventually acquired. After a course of lectures at Fairfield Medical College he was granted a diploma by the Medical Society of the State of New York in January, 1837, and at once settled in active practice in Olean. In 1837 he joined the old Medical Society of Cattaraugus county and was later elected a censor. In 1884 he was made an honorary member of the present County Medical Society. In the early years of his practice Dr. Whitney rode horseback over a large territory. He says: "I did everything that a doctor then had to do." In 1834, while yet a medical student, young Whitney was appointed deputy sheriff for one term and in 1838 was elected justice of the peace, serving as a magistrate twelve years. He was a member of the first Board of Trustees of the village of Olean, was supervisor from this town in 1853 and 1854, and in 1860 was elected county treasurer for three years. He has also served as coroner and village health officer. In politics he is a Republican and in religion a Baptist, and for more than half a century has been a worthy member of that church. Dr. Whitney is highly respected as a physician, a public officer, and a private citizen. He enjoys a quiet home amid life-long friends and scenes, reaping the reward of an industrious, well-spent life. In May, 1834, Dr. Whitney married Sally Senter, who bore him six children. Two sons live in Olean, viz.: Lambert S. and Russell M.; a third, James O., resides in San Francisco, Cal. Mrs. Whitney died April 15, 1891, aged seventy-five years.

Lyman Packard.—See Yorkshire.

Dr. Marshall came here in the winter of 1836-37 from Connecticut, remained a year, and went west.

Dr. Cleveland made his appearance in Olean quite early, and was in partnership with Edwin Finn for a time. He was also in Allegany, where he had a store on the river.

Dr. Bigelow is given the credit of being the first homeopathist in this town. He married here, and professionally was very successful. After several years he removed to near New York city.

David Bennie.—See Portville.

William S. Babbitt, the son of a Presbyterian minister, a brother of the inventor and manufacturer of the Babbitt steel pen, and a graduate of a New York medical college, pursued his profession in Olean eight or ten years, during which time his wife died. He was a student here of David Bennie. Careful, steady, and well educated, he acquired the reputation of being a skillful surgeon, and finally went to Lockport, where he died, his remains being brought back for interment by the side of his wife.

Charles S. Hurlbut, a native of this State, was a student of Dr. Babbitt and, after his graduation, a practitioner here some ten years, going finally to Pennsylvania, where he lately died. He married Eveline Barker, of Olean. Dr. Hurlbut was a good surgeon and a good scholar.

J. L. C. Cronyn.—See Portville.

Charles Austin Woodruff, born in Farmersville, February 7, 1840, was a soldier and was wounded in the Rebellion, and in 1866 entered Bellevue Hospital Medical College, graduating March 1, 1867. He also received certificates in auscultation and percussion from Dr. Austin Flint, from Dr. Alexander B. Mott, professor of surgery at Bellevue, and from Dr. R. Ogden Doremus, professor of chemistry and toxicology in the same institution. Dr. Woodruff, on returning to Olean, succeeded to the practice of his old preceptor, Charles S. Hurlbut, and died here honored and respected. He joined the Medical Society October 8, 1867, and became one of its censors. His wife was Eliza M. Charles, daughter of John and niece of Richard Charles, M. D., of Angelica, Allegany county.

John L. Eddy, son of Dea. John C. and Samantha P. (Frost) Eddy, born in Mt. Holly, Vt., November 27, 1829, graduated from Ludlow (Vt.) Academy, taught common schools seven winters, and when twenty-one began the study of medicine in the office of F. M. Bliss, of Poultney, Vt., and finished with Prof. Middleton Goldsmith, of Castleton, Vt. In June, 1854, he was graduated from the Castleton Medical College, having previously attended a course of lectures at the Pittsfield (Mass.) Medical College. In August, 1854, Dr. Eddy settled in Machias and practiced until June, 1857, when he moved to Allegany, where he continued until July, 1867, when he located and has since continued in Olean, having had as a partner since August, 1878, his son-in-law and former student, Selden J. Mudge. While in Machias Dr. Eddy was in partnership with J. M. Copp. He has been pension examiner since 1864. August 8, 1867, he joined the new County Medical Society and was elected a delegate to the State Medical Society in 1873 and 1884. Dr. Eddy has been a member of the village Board of Trustees, president of the corporation, and a member of the Board of Education. He became a Republican at the organization of that party and has ever since staunchly adhered to its principles, but has never been a politician or an office-seeker. November 1, 1855, he was married to Elvire L., daughter of William Loomis, of Machias. They have had five children, of whom a son and daughter survive—Loren L. and Nellie S. (Mrs. Selden J. Mudge). Dr. Eddy is one of the best physicians and surgeons in western New York.

Selden J. Mudge, son of Rev. W. Mudge, a Baptist clergyman, was born in Tonawanda, N. Y., May 24, 1851, was educated at the Collegiate Institute of Nunda, Livingston county, and in 1871 followed civil engineering. He began his medical studies in the office of John L. Eddy in Olean in 1873 and finished at the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine in February, 1877. In September following he located in Bradford, Pa., and in August, 1878, removed to Olean and became and has since remained a partner of his old preceptor, John L. Eddy. He joined the County Medical Society in 1881. Dr. Mudge is conceded to be a skillful surgeon, having performed successfully many difficult operations. He married a daughter of Dr. Eddy.

Melville C. Follett was born in Machias, September 29, 1838, a son of Nathan and Clarissa (Potter) Follett, attended the common schools, academies, and Oberlin College (Ohio), and commenced his medical education with Thomas J. King. Six months afterward he was appointed house physician for the Erie County Alms-House, which position he held for over two years. In the meantime he had entered the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, from which he was graduated in February, 1865. Prior to his graduation Dr. Follett had been for six months a medical student of Prof. Thomas F. Rochester. He commenced practice in Rouseville, Pa., and in September, 1866, settled permanently in Olean, where he has acquired the reputation of being an eminent practitioner. He joined the County Medical Society October 8, 1867. He married, May 31, 1865, Mary A. Smith, of Kenosha, Wis.

W. Carl Dallanbaugh, a native of Niagara county, was born June 18, 1849, and was graduated from the Eclectic Medical Institute, Cincinnati, June 7, 1881, endorsed by the U. S. Medical College, New York city, June 11, 1881. He came to Olean, however, in 1878, and in 1880 married Ella E. Van Slyke, of Niagara county. He joined the County Medical Society in 1892.

Cornelius H. Bartlett is a son of Nathaniel and Sarah (Waters) Bartlett. Born in Pine Plains, Dutchess county, May 10, 1825, he was educated in the district schools and in Groton and Cortland Academies. After graduating at the latter institution he taught school some five or six years, and while so engaged began studying medicine with Ashbel Patterson, of Homer, and later with Caleb Green, of the same place. He attended the University of Buffalo one year as a medical student and July 3, 1849, was graduated as an M. D. from the Geneva Medical College. The same year Dr. Bartlett commenced his professional career at Summer Hill, Cayuga county, and in 1853 moved to Portville as David Bennie's successor, remaining there until 1876, when he came to Olean, going into partnership both in practice and in a drug store with Melville C. Follett. Dr. Bartlett married, in June, 1850, Sylphia C., daughter of Dr. Bennie, of Portville. Their children are Mary D.; Kate E. (Mrs. George E. Ramsey), of Olean; and Frank H., of Olean. Since 1870 Dr. Bartlett has been curator of the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo. He became a member of the County Medical Society on October 8, 1867, was elected its president in 1871 and 1877, its vice-president in 1875, a member of its Board of Censors, delegate to the State Medical Society in 1868 and 1884, and representative to the National Medical Association in 1878 and 1881. Dr. Bartlett is eminently qualified for these numerous positions, and in one and all has evinced sound medical knowledge and excellent judgment, and is frequently called in consultation. His once extensive country practice he has relinquished on account of approaching old age.

Frank H. Bartlett, son of Cornelius H. and Sylphia C. (Bennie) Bartlett, was born in Portville, April 9, 1856. On February 25, 1879, he was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo and soon afterward took a special course at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York city. He immediately began the practice of medicine in Olean, continuing until the winter of 1886, when he took a course on the eye, ear, and throat at the Post-Graduate Medical School of New York. Since then he has given his attention mainly to the treatment of these organs. In 1881 he joined the Cattaraugus County Medical Society and was elected to its Board of Censors.

Wilfred Havland Sage, born in Angelica, Allegany county, November 19, 1853, attended Ten Broeck Academy, began the study of medicine with Melville C. Follett in December, 1874, and was graduated February 25, 1879, from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo. On the 1st of March of that year Dr. Sage formed a partnership with his old preceptor, Dr. Follett, which continued until 1881, since which time he has been alone. He was secretary of the Board of Health for three years and held also the position of registrar of vital statistics. In 1886 he was appointed chemist of the State Dairy Department for western New York, filling the office with eminent ability until 1891, when he resigned on account of ill health. He was then in California a year, and spent the college year in the Chemical Department of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University. In 1886 he passed considerable time in the Chemical Department of the University of Buffalo and in New York city under Dr. Martin, of the Board of Health, taking up the study of fats and oils. Dr. Sage has made chemistry a specialty, though he continues to practice medicine to a considerable extent, treating principally acute diseases and diseases of children. November 29, 1880, he married Jennie, daughter of Peter Loughlen, of Hinsdale, and a sister of Dr. T. B. Loughlen, of Olean. Dr. Sage was elected a member of the County Medical Society in 1881.

De Vere M. Hibbard was born in Brookfield, Madison county, July 31, 1848. Attending Friendship Academy he entered the Cleveland Homeopathic Hospital College, graduated therefrom February 12, 1878, and the following September began his career as a physician in Olean. February 16, 1880, he married Mary E. Thomas, of Buffalo. They have one daughter, Marie.

John C. Richards was born in Philadelphia, Pa., May 4, 1842, was graduated March 10, 1865, from the Jefferson Medical College of that city, and in 1870 married Carrie Van Syckle, of Milford, N. J. Dr. Richards was acting assistant surgeon in the Rebellion, began practice in 1866 in Lock Haven, Pa., and in 1882 came to Olean, where he was a physician until his death, which occurred in 1892. He was county coroner, secretary of the U. S. Board of Pension Surgeons, and supreme medical examiner of the E. A. U.

James V. D. Coon, druggist and physician, was born in Nunda, Livingston county, September 14, 1834, attended district school and Nunda Academy, read medicine with C. L. Harding, of his native village, and graduated February 5, 1856, from the Eclectic Medical Institute, Cincinnati. His practice was commenced the same year in Tuscarora, Livingston county, and the following year he moved to Nunda and formed a partnership with his preceptor. This was dissolved in 1860 and Dr. Coon went to Nile, Allegany county, but two years later returned to Nunda, where he purchased a drug store. Coming to Olean in 1877 he bought his present drug store, and has never been in active practice here, but is often called in consultation. Dr. Coon married, January 13, 1858, Polly A. Robinson, of West Sparta, Livingston county, and their children are Harriet M. (Mrs. Joseph C. Clark), of Olean; Carrie D. (Mrs. C. S. Phelps), of Gowanda; and William R. and Faith J., of Olean.

Charles O. Chester practiced medicine in Olean about a year, being here in 1880. He was born in Buffalo, graduated at the Medical Department of the university of that city February 23, 1876, came to this place from there, and eventually returned.

J. J. Powers remained here some seven or eight years. He was a graduate of the Baltimore College of Physicians and Surgeons, receiving his diploma March 1, 1881, and commenced practice in Olean the same year, coming hence from Allegany county. His health failed, causing his removal to Denver, where he is now. He was a native of Hinsdale and a member in 1883 of the County Medical Society.

Warren F. Serles came to Olean in 1885, practiced a few years, and went to Wichita, Kan., where he is now engaged in his profession. Graduating from the University of the City of New York on March 3, 1883, he began business in Hornellsville, whence he moved to this place.

W. H. Dukeman, a Pennsylvanian by birth, graduated from the University of the City of New York, February 19, 1880, came to Olean in 1885, and moved about five years later to California. He came here from Hornellsville and proved a good physician. Dr. Dukeman became a member of the County Medical Society in 1883.

Luther H. Kitchel, young, talented, finely educated, and bright, a general favorite everywhere, came from Buffalo about 1873, remained a few years, and returned. He was a graduate of the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, and soon after his advent here joined the County Medical Society and became a member of the Board of Censors.

Francis E. Watts, born in Euclid, Ohio, July 25, 1858, graduated from Alfred University in Allegany county as Ph. B. in 1880, was one year in the Medical Department of the University of Ann Arbor, and graduated as M. D. from the Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago, February 20, 1883. He immediately located in Olean, leaving here in 1886 for Port Allegany, Pa., but returned in 1892. He was a member of the Chautauqua and Cattaraugus Homeopathic Medical Society and has been health officer of Olean village. In October, 1879, he married Aria Bickford, a niece of William H. Vanderbilt.

Alexander M. Kinkaid was born in Butler, Pa., was graduated February 26, 1880, from the Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago, came the same year from Kankakee, Ill., remained a couple of years, and moved west and engaged in manufacturing. He married his wife while here.

Eugene B. Burdick was born in Wirt, Allegany county, August 30, 1856, graduated at the Friendship Academy, June 17, 1880, received his degree of M.D. from the Medical Department of the University of the City of New York, March 8, 1886, and began practice at Whitesville, Allegany county. In July, 1887, Dr. Burdick removed to Olean. Prior to his graduation in medicine he was four years a teacher of common and six years principal of union graded schools. In 1891 he was elected coroner for three years. He is a member of the Olean City, the Allegany County, and the Cattaraugus County Medical Societies, and a 33d degree Mason. Dr. Burdick makes diseases of children and heart and lungs a specialty.

William E. McDuffie and his father Angus were both born in the town of Otto, where Robert McDuffie, father of Angus, located in 1822. William E. was born July 23, 1859, completed his education at Ann Arbor in 1880, and for five years following was engaged in the dry goods trade. February 28, 1888, he was graduated as a physician and surgeon from the University of Buffalo, began practice at Farmersville, and in March, 1890, removed to Olean. August 12, 1885, he married Dell Losee, a native of Otto and a daughter of Sullivan Losee, a soldier in the Rebellion who fell in battle at Fair Oaks. Dr. McDuffie joined the County Medical Society in 1892, and now holds the position of chemist of the State Dairy Department of western New York.

Ambrose E. Smith, a native of New Troy, Mich., was born August 23, 1857, and at the age of nineteen began teaching school. In 1881 he was graduated as a B. S. from the Michigan State Agricultural College, spent the next two years as a commercial traveler, and February 17, 1885, was graduated as an M. D. from Rush Medical College, Chicago, and endorsed July 16th by the University of Buffalo. He commenced practice at Belmont, Allegany county, and in 1888 came to Olean as the successor of J. J. Powers. Dr. Smith joined the Cattaraugus County Medical Society in 1892. He married Altie Emerson, of Belmont, in December, 1884.

Thomas B. Loughlen, son of Peter and Mary Loughlen, was born in Hinsdale, April 13, 1868, graduated from the Olean High School in June, 1886, and began his medical studies with William H. Sage, receiving his diploma from the University of Buffalo on March 25, 1890. He began practicing that spring in Olean and became a member of the County Medical Society in 1892.

John D. Maloy, a native of Ireland, was born in 1844, was graduated February 23, 1875, from the University of Buffalo, began practice in Olean in 1891, and belongs to the County Medical Society.

Joseph C. Clark was born in Chester, Orange county, December 12, 1858, his parents being J. G. and Mary E. (Carpenter) Clark. He graduated from the Chester Academy, in 1877 became a medical student in the office of his uncle, Dr. S. G. Carpenter, and shortly afterward took up telegraphing in New York city. He was graduated March 6, 1885, from the Medical Department of the University of the City of New York, and immediately entered the Surgical Department of Bellevue Hospital, where he remained eighteen months. After practicing as a physician and surgeon in New York city two years he came to Olean in the spring of 1891. Dr. Clark joined the Medical Society in 1892. He married a daughter of Dr. Coon.

John F. Steyner, son of John J., of Olean, was born here July 30, 1859, studied medicine with De Vere M. Hibbard, graduated February 24, 1884, from the Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago, and began practice that year in Olean. He was appointed a member of the Board of Pension Examiners. In 1889 Dr. Steyner removed to Pittsburg, Pa., where he now makes a specialty of diseases of the rectum.

Mary R. Evans was a graduate of the Electro Therapeutic Institute, Toronto, Can., receiving her degree September 4, 1876. She is registered from Olean, October 11, 1880, but how long she remained can not be determined. She was born in Rushford, Allegany county.

Mrs. Emma B. Steyner was born in Monroe county and was graduated from the Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago, February 24, 1884. She commenced practice in 1886 in Olean and two years later located in Rochester, where she makes a specialty of diseases of the rectum.

M. A. Sanford, who claims the double title of A. B. and M. D., says he is a "traveling tramp." He graduated from the Albany Medical College, December 23, 1861, was in practice a short time in Ellicottville, and came here in 1881.

Erwin M. Cass was born in Afton, Chenango county, February 9, 1853, was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo on February 26, 1884, and in July, 1891, registered in the county clerk's office as a physician in Olean.

Thomas L. Barnes was graduated from the Eclectic Medical College of New York city March 25, 1886, and at once started to practice in Olean. He probably got no footing, for he is scarcely remembered.

James W. Peebles, a graduate of the American Eclectic College of Cincinnati on October 13, 1869, came to Olean in January, 1887, but doubtless soon removed.

G. Reve is registered as practicing in Olean in May, 1882; he was graduated December 23, 1862, from the Albany Medical College. Very little seems to be known of him.

Francis E. Comstock was another brief resident physician in Olean. Born in Andover, Allegany county, he graduated from the University of the City of New York, March 13, 1883, and at once came here.

Dr. Meecham, it is said, came here before 1876. He soon removed to Warsaw, N. Y.

James C. Earle graduated March 1, 1887, from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, and in 1889 located in Olean, coming here from Allegany county, whither he returned two years later.

John P. Boothe has recently come here to retire from active practice. He was licensed January 5, 1875, by the 32d Senatorial District Eclectic Medical Society, and for some time has followed his profession in Ceres, Allegany county. He is a Canadian by birth.

Dr. Reno was with Marshall J. Lincoln for a time. He went to Pennsylvania and finally to New York city, where he holds a responsible medical position.

D. M. Hillihan was a homeopathist in Olean in 1877, but how long he remained, whence he came, and whither he removed is not known.

Jacob Eugenio Kincaid Morris was born in Eldred, Pa., November 23, 1856, the son of Rev. Samuel D. and Elizabeth C. Morris. He received an academic education and in 1879 was graduated as an M. D. from the University of Buffalo, commencing practice at once in Eldred, Pa., and moving thence to Olean in 1886. In 1884 and again in 1891 Dr. Morris took courses at the Post-Graduate School of New York city; for six years he has been a member of the Board of Education of Olean, and in December, 1892, he joined the County Medical Society. July 2, 1881, he married Sarah Gillingham, of Olean.

J. K. Tretton was a short time physician in Olean, who succeeded in establishing a good reputation and a lucrative practice.

OTTO.

Edwin Putney, the first physician to come into the town of Otto, came there in the fall of 1823, boarded that winter with one of the settlers and practiced his profession in the neighborhood, and moved to Erie county in the spring.

Levi Goldsborough was a son of Thomas and Rebecca (States) Goldsborough and was born near Dover, Delaware county, N. Y., February 15, 1806. His early education was acquired at the common schools in the vicinity of his birthplace, and at home where he employed the little leisure he could obtain from the severe labors of the farm entirely in studying and reading the few books his parents' limited means afforded him. This work was done mainly at night, with no other light than that derived from the old fireplace, before which young Goldsborough lay upon the floor with his book in his hands. It is impossible to obtain accurate information as to the extent of his medical education prior to the beginning of practice. Even the name of his preceptor has passed into oblivion. It is learned, however, that he attended lectures at and possibly graduated from Fairfield Medical College and was a member of the Herkimer County Medical Society. In 1830 he located in Otto, where he began the practice of medicine, and some years afterward joined the old Cattaraugus County Medical Society. He was married in 1829 to Almira Prentice, who died April 25, 1846, leaving three children—Charles Goldsborough, now of Fort Collins, Col., Mrs. James Porter, now of Marshall, Wis., and Mrs. John Becker, now of Collins, Erie county. September 13, 1846, he married for his second wife Maria Cheney, who with two children by her—Mrs. Maryette Marsh (since deceased) and Mrs. Ell G. Burger, of Cattaraugus—survive him. Dr. Goldsborough's death occurred in Otto, February 17, 1886. He was of marked personality. Coming into the county early, by his pronounced skill and thorough attention to his patients he speedily acquired the confidence and esteem of all the people over a large extent of country. Through three generations his welcome appearance in every household was a herald of hope in sickness and distress. His cheerful countenance and pleasant stories were often an inspiration to the weary settler. He was a sturdy, vigorous man, a philosopher who received his knowledge and developed his mind more from a study of men and all natural things than from the literary acquirements which were denied him. Still from the few books he possessed he carefully gleaned more knowledge than many men succeed in obtaining from large libraries. His acquaintance with current literature was varied and extensive. His conversation was brilliant, fluent, full of eccentric expressions, and so characteristic that his witticisms were often quoted and helped to form a fund of anecdote that is still extant. He was bluff and brusque with his patients, but withal sympathetic and kind hearted. In politics he was first a Whig and later an uncompromising Republican, but never sought office, and being once elected supervisor he promptly resigned, the duties of that position interfering with his professional work. Through his well-trained judgment and his minute observation of symptoms and signs he became unusually accurate in diagnosis and prognosis. Consequently his assistance was often asked in consultation, and many of the then younger practitioners still bear in grateful remembrance his kindness in advice and the valuable hints in treatment which he gave them. He was preceptor of Hon. Henry Van Aernam, whose biography appears in this chapter. During the war, by his influence and means, he assisted largely in the local organization of troops, and whenever called upon to treat a soldier's family no charge was ever made.

Phipps Lake was born in Windom, Herkimer county, July 19, 1818. He was a son of David Lake, Esq. His father moved from Windom to Hamburg, Erie county, when Phipps was about three years of age. He received his education in the district school of this place and learned the trade of a shoemaker, which he followed until his marriage with Rebecca Jaques in 1841. He then commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Davis, of Eden Center, N. Y., supporting himself and family by working at his trade. He graduated, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine from an eclectic school in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1848, and began the practice of his chosen profession in Gowanda the following year. In 1855 he changed his residence to Otto. After remaining at this place for four years he removed to North Evans, returning in 1860 to Otto, which town remained his home until his death.

Ernst Goldschmidt

Although a graduate of an eclectic school he never followed any exclusive system of practice, and in 1873 he joined the Cattaraugus County Medical Society. In 1861 he enlisted in the 64th N. Y. Vols., of which regiment he had previously been surgeon, having vacated the position by his removal from the regimental district. While the regiment was in barracks at Elmira he was appointed sergeant-major, and in a few days was commissioned as first lieutenant of Co. D, being promoted captain when the regiment reached Washington. His health became seriously impaired after about one year in the service and he was compelled to resign. After his return he was appointed medical examiner of recruits, which position he filled for two years, and after the completion of his army service he resumed the practice of medicine, but the affection of the heart, originating during his army life, had slowly grown worse, and it became impossible for him to endure the labor and fatigue of a country practice. After his retirement from the active work of his profession he was elected justice of the peace of the town of Otto, which position he filled for twelve years. His disease gradually increased in severity and he died, after many months of suffering, May 23, 1887. His wife and two sons, Dr. Albert D., of Gowanda, and Frank P., of Otto, and three daughters, Mrs. William Cox, of Cattaraugus, Mrs. Herman Carter, of Mauston, Wis., and Mrs. Silas Long, of Hornellsville, survived him. Mrs. Lake died at Hornellsville, October 23, 1891. Dr. Lake was a popular physician, enjoying the confidence of the community and the respect of his medical associates. He was a man of large intellectual development. In the diagnosis of disease his intuition and judgment were seldom at fault, and in his active professional life he was known as a skillful and successful practitioner. He was an enthusiastic Mason and was a past master of Clinton F. Paige Lodge, F. & A. M.

Dr. Irish emigrated here from Hamburg, Erie county, about 1842, followed the botanic school, was quiet and pleasant, and remained until 1850 or thereabouts.

Elisha Johnson was born November 8, 1793, and died here July 27, 1870. He was a merchant in Ellicottville and went thence to Ashford, where he studied medicine and secured a license from some medical society, when he came here and lived until his death, following his profession up to about 1860.

Bradley H. Northrop came from Wyoming county in 1862. In 1870 he removed to Gainesville, N. Y. He was thoroughly well read, popular, and established a good practice.

B. F. Eggleston, a graduate of the Medical University of Buffalo, receiving his diploma therefrom February 21, 1882, came to Otto the following April, but left within a year. He was born in Kendall, Orleans county.

Hon. Simeon V. Pool was born in Springville, Erie county, March 14, 1837. He is the eldest son of Dr. E. C. Pool; for forty years a successful medical practitioner, and who while yet a lad came with his own father at an early day to western New York. Simeon V. Pool received his literary education in Springville Academy and at about the age of twenty began his medical studies in the University of Buffalo, taking two preliminary and one full course, and interspersing these by teaching school, prior to 1862. September 26, 1862, he enlisted at Jamestown and became first lieutenant of Co. B, 154th N. Y. Vol. Inf., participating at Chancellorsville, previous to which he had been promoted captain. At the next engagement (Gettysburg), on July 1, 1863, he was captured and confined nine months in Libby prison, three months at Macon, Ga., six weeks at Charleston, S. C., five months at Columbus, S. C., and finally at Charlotte, N. C., where, after twenty months in all, he escaped on February 17, 1865, entering the Federal lines one month later at French Broad River. A concise account of Dr. Pool's army career appears in the Military Roster. Returning home after his discharge from the service he resumed the study of medicine and was graduated February 23, 1866, from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo. He commenced his practice in Colden, Erie county, and in 1867 settled permanently in Otto. In 1872 he took a course of lectures at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. Dr. Pool ranks high in the medical profession. In a civil capacity he is also highly esteemed. He was for three years town supervisor and in 1878 and 1879 represented the Second Assembly District of Cattaraugus in the State Legislature. He joined the County Medical Society in 1868, became its vice-president in 1876, has been a member of its Board of Censors, and was elected a delegate to the State Medical Society in 1887, 1890, and 1892. Dr. Pool married, in 1865, Esther M., daughter of Constant B. Allen, of Otto, by whom he has two children: Anna E. (Mrs. Mark F. Bensley), of Buffalo, and C. Bret, a graduate of the Baltimore College of Physicians and Surgeons and of the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo.

PERRYSBURG.

Henry T. B. Gray, the first resident physician in the town and village of Perrysburg, was born in Lansingburg, N. Y., in December, 1801, and died in Perrysburg, December 23, 1874. His parents were Sturges Gray and Elizabeth Wood, natives of Boston and New York city respectively. He married Mary, daughter of Samuel and Hannah Parkman, of Perrysburg, who died here in 1890, aged seventy-eight years. Dr. Gray was graduated from the New York Medical Institute in 1828 and came to Perrysburg in 1830, living and practicing here until his death. A son, Henry B., has been station agent here for thirty-five years.

Albert D. Lake.—See Persia.

Dr. Mix practiced at this place some two years and finally moved to the oil regions.

John David Davis was born in Cassadaga, Chautauqua county, was graduated February 23, 1886, from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, and came to Versailles as a physician in the fall of 1887. When the small-pox broke out among the Indians on the reservation. Dr. Davis volunteered and was authorized by the State Board of Health as official vaccinator and physician to the Indians, and in this work he spent three months among them. He finally removed to Westfield, Chautauqua county, where he still resides.

Enos T. Lazell, who was born in Stockton, Chautauqua county, was graduated from the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York, February 12, 1866, located in Versailles for the practice of his profession somewhere about 1875, and died there some five years later.

Dr. Sill.—See Dayton.

Dr. Hazeltine practiced medicine at Versailles a short time, and moved thence to Jamestown.

Dr. Beals followed his profession several years in the village of Versailles and finally became a manufacturer of botanic medicines there.

Guy B. Crandall.—See Randolph.

Peter Wilson was a full blooded Cayuga Indian who received an excellent preliminary education, was graduated from Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York city, and began practice in Versailles in this town about 1850. He was a man of large intellectual development, a first-class physician, and his reputation as a surgeon extended over a wide territory. In fact he performed all of the more important surgical operations which were required in his vicinity. During the war he was sent south by the Sanitary Commission and rendered very efficient service, having a record both on the field and in the hospital of being one of the best operators in the army corps to which he was attached. On his return he resumed the practice of his profession at Versailles, still maintaining the excellent reputation which he had gained. There he suffered the great misfortune of the loss of his wife, who was an estimable white woman. He married for his second wife an Indian woman and spent the rest of his life on the adjoining reservation, where he died in 1872. To his splendid qualifications as a physician and surgeon Dr. Wilson added a large amount of Indian eloquence. His reputation as an orator extended throughout the State. At the opening of the Erie railway he was appointed to respond to an address by Daniel Webster at Dunkirk, in which the doctor used this expression: "When the white man comes through the woods with his iron horse, drawing his train loaded down with people, the very trees bend in obeisance to his power."

PERSIA.

Sands Niles Crumb is given the honor of being the first resident physician in this town, coming here about 1822 and living in Lodi (now Gowanda).—See Conewango.

T. P. Whipple was a student of Dr. Crumb and followed him in practice. He was an interesting man, kind hearted, and during his stay became highly respected. Selling his practice to his partner, Seth Field, Dr. Whipple moved in 1834 to near Buffalo and thence to Elgin, Ill., where he died. He was a charter member and one of the first censors of the old County Medical Society.

Dr. Benjamin came here soon after Sands N. Crumb removed, but how long he remained, where he came from, or whence and when he left can not be determined.

Dr. Merrick was a medical practitioner in what is now Gowanda prior to 1833. His first wife died here, and he finally moved to Canada, where he married a wealthy widow.

Seth Field was born in Leverett, Mass., March 20, 1797. He was educated at Amherst Academy and Dartmouth College, graduating from the Medical Department of the latter institution the first in his class. Beginning practice in Barre, Vt., Dr. Field came in 1833 to Gowanda, where he followed his profession until his death August 11, 1855. Upon his arrival he became a partner of T. P. Whipple, which was terminated at the end of a year by the latter removing. Dr. Field was elected a member of Assembly in 1845 and served his constituents faithfully and well. He was chosen supervisor in 1843, and was a member of the old County Medical Society. In politics he was an old line Whig. May 14, 1833, he married Eliza R., daughter of Joab Kimball, of Peacham, Vt., who survives him at the age of over ninety years. She is remarkably bright and active. Dr. Field was eccentric, but a good practitioner, and possessed a fund of general information. During the latter part of his life he owned and ran a drug store in Gowanda.

Dr. Merritt made his appearance in what was then Lodi soon after Dr. Field arrived. He was also a Methodist minister, was poorly read, and soon moved away.

Dr. Fritts came here quite early, practiced a few years, went west and contracted the ague, returned to Gowanda, and went thence to Versailles, removing finally to Collins, Erie county, where he died.

Stephen B. Green was another early old-school physician in Gowanda, coming before Dr. Field, practicing a few years, and removing about 1835 to near Buffalo, where he died.

Dr. Davison followed here the Thompsonian method of prescribing before and after 1833, but was more of a business man than a doctor. He went to New York city and died there.

Samuel G. Ellis, son of Barzilla Ellis, was born in old Plymouth, Mass., July 17, 1811. At the age of four years he came with his parents to Chautauqua county, locating near Forestville, where he was reared on a farm and educated at Fredonia Academy. He read medicine and surgery with Amos R. Avery, of Forestville, and was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York. Locating in practice in Fairfield, Herkimer county, he removed thence in 1838 to Gowanda (then Lodi), where he resided until 1856, when he went to Lima, Livingston county. There he lived and practiced until February, 1881, when his wife died and he removed to Syracuse to educate his grandchildren, and still resides there. Dr. Ellis married Natalia H. Waterman, of Forestville. He was appointed by the Legislature to superintend the erection of the Thomas Orphan Asylum on the Cattaraugus reservation and remained the president of its Board of Trustees until he resigned to remove to Lima. He was elected a trustee of Genesee College and served eleven years as Regents examiner. He was a member of the old Cattaraugus County Medical Society, is a member of the State, the Central New York, the Onondaga County, and the Syracuse City Medical Societies, and has been a member and a delegate to the National Medical Association. Dr. Ellis has done an immense amount of hard work in the medical profession and holds a high place in the science of its practice.

Horace Babcock is a son of John C. Babcock, one of the early settlers of the town of Persia. He was born here in a log cabin April 12, 1825, was educated in the common and select schools of the day, studied medicine with Dr. S. G. Ellis, was graduated in February, 1851, from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, and at once began the practice of his profession in Gowanda. In 1856 he removed to Weyauwega, Wis., where he remained until 1867, when he returned to Gowanda and has since resided and practiced here. In 1863 Dr. Babcock became a surgeon in the Union army, but was obliged to resign about a year later on account of ill health. He was medical examiner of drafted men for Waupacca county, Wis., during the first of the war and later served there as pension examiner. While in Wisconsin he bought and for twenty-seven years continuously rode a black horse, which he brought around the lakes when he returned to Gowanda. May 14, 1856, Dr. Babcock married Mary, daughter of James and Lucinda (Wheeler) Locke, of Persia. They have had three children—Blanche (Mrs. W. R. Smallwood) and (Katharine (Mrs. W. W. Chaffe), of Gowanda, and Louis L., managing clerk for Rogers, Locke & Milburn, of Buffalo.

Corydon C. Rugg was descended from Revolutionary stock. His grandfather was a soldier in that war and his father, Jonathan G., was a soldier in the War of 1812, where he distinguished himself at Sackett's Harbor. Jonathan G. Rugg was born near Lake George in 1795 and died May 12, 1877. Corydon C. Rugg, born in Perrysburg, May 13, 1822, passed his youth on the farm and in attending the district school, supplementing his rudimentary education by nearly two years' work at Fredonia Academy and teaching school three winter terms. At the age of twenty he commenced the study of medicine in the office of Cyrus Thompson, of Syracuse, a son of Samuel Thompson, founder of the Thompsonian system of medicine. In 1844 he was appointed colonel of the 168th Regiment Infantry, 54th Brigade, 26th Division, of New York State militia. At the breaking out of the Civil war he was captain of Co. A, 64th N. Y. Regiment, which was organized in 1853 as the New York militia. In 1847 he married Fidelia Goodell, by whom he had six children: Adella D., Loella V., Corydon A., Estella F., Clayton A., and Minnie M. In 1848 he was graduated from a medical college in Cincinnati and located in practice in Meadville, Pa., removing one year later to Gowanda, where he followed his profession until the war of the Rebellion, when, on the organization of the 154th Regiment, he volunteered as a private and on November 3, 1862, was appointed by Governor Morgan its assistant surgeon. In this position Dr. Rugg was exposed to great danger, but always performed his duties bravely and faithfully, and acquired the unqualified esteem and respect of all—soldier and superior officer alike. Failing health compelled him to resign on January 3, 1864, and return to Gowanda, where he resumed his practice, which he continued till February, 1874, when he removed to Rutland, Vt. Four years later Dr. Rugg removed to Jamestown, where he continued practice until a short time previous to his death, which occurred there January 14, 1891. Dr. Rugg was endowed by nature with a splendid physique. He was charitable and generous to a fault, and his industry and self-sacrifice were remarkable.

Corydon C. Johnson was born in Dayton on July 7, 1833. His parents, Gile and Philena (Salisbury) Johnson, were pioneer settlers of that town, coming hence from Fairfield, Herkimer county. After attending Fairfield Academy and Chamberlain Institute he entered the Eclectic Medical Institute, Cincinnati, and was graduated from the Eclectic Medical College, Philadelphia, January 28, 1864. He began his professional career the same year in Gowanda, continuing it uninterruptedly to the present time. September 20, 1860, he married Grace M. Randall, a native of Brookfield, Madison county, and to them have been born four children: Burnell R., January 11, 1862, a medical graduate of the University of Buffalo and now a practitioner in Gowanda; Fred E., April 18, 1865, since 1886 cashier of the Bank of Cattaraugus; Grace P., a graduate of the Gowanda Academy, now preceptress of the Cattaraugus High School; and Burt C., a graduate in 1890 of the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, for one year house physician and surgeon of the General Hospital, and now a practicing physician in Buffalo. Dr. Johnson is a member of the Lake Erie Medical Society, the Northwestern Eclectic Medical Society of the State of New York, and the New York State Eclectic Medical Society. He has been for fifteen years president of the Board of Education, and in other capacities has interested himself in the betterment of his town and county. He is a representative citizen, a firm friend, and an excellent physician.

Phipps Lake.—See Otto.

George W. Barr came from Evans, Erie county, with his father some time before the war. He was a graduate of the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo. Upon the organization of the 64th Regiment as State militia in 1853 Dr. Barr was made its regimental surgeon; in this same regiment he enlisted as surgeon November 20, 1861, and did honorable service in the late Rebellion. He was a staunch Republican, a cultured gentleman, and a bright physician, and finally removed to Titusville, Pa., where he is now located.

George C. De Lameter came here from Fredonia, Chautauqua county, in 1845. He evinced about as vacillating a character as can be found among humanity. A tailor by trade, a doctor from choice, he lived a life of constant activity, acquiring one of those reputations for oddity that are almost imperishable. Dr. De Lameter was not a graduate. Nevertheless he was thoroughly versed in the genuine botanic school of medicine, and in its practice acquired a large ride and a good reputation. In religion he was first a Methodist, then a spiritualist, and subsequently a Methodist again, and died in this belief in Gowanda, August 6, 1876. During the war, when excitement ran high in the village and enlistments were going on, he played a snare-drum to arouse patriotism. Taken all in all Dr. De Lameter was a curious man, but possessed many noble qualities which endeared him to a wide circle of friends.

J. G. Rugg, son of Jonathan G. and Ann M. (Tousey) Rugg and brother of Corydon C. Rugg, was born in Perrysburg in 1838. Receiving an academic education he began to read medicine with his brother, and on May 11, 1875, was graduated from the Cincinnati Eclectic Medical College. He began practice in Gowanda that year. March 18, 1863, he married Mandane Muzzy, of Dayton, who died August 28, 1891.

Ransom E. Moss is a son of Ransom W. and Eliza J. Moss, and was born in Collins, Erie county, October 14, 1854. In 1875 he began his medical studies with Dr. J. H. Shugert, of Gowanda (Erie side), and in 1877 entered the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, graduating therefrom February 28, 1880, and locating in Gowanda the following month for the practice of his chosen calling. June 2, 1880, he married De Etta, daughter of James Cole, of Gowanda. Dr. Moss was for two years secretary and treasurer of the Lake Erie Medical Society and since March, 1892, has been its president. He has served four years as health officer of the village of Gowanda and in December, 1890, being a K. O. T. M., was elected great commander for the State of New York, which office he held about two years, when he resigned.

John D. Zwetsch, a native of Sheldon, Wyoming county, was born April 30, 1858, moved with his parents in 1867 to Corning, and one year afterward to Buffalo, where he attended private school. The family finally removed to Akron, Erie county, and when nineteen years of age John D. began teaching school. In August, 1878, he took up the study of medicine with the late F. S. Bosworth, of Akron, and a year later with H. C. Frost, of Buffalo, remaining with the latter until he completed his course in the Cleveland Homeopathic Medical College, from which he received his diploma March 8, 1882. He then came to Gowanda, where he has since followed his profession. Dr.

Zwetsch has been surgeon to the Buffalo & Southwestern railroad several years, is a member of the New York State and the Western New York Homoeopathic Societies, the National Association of Railway Surgeons, the New York State Association of Railway Surgeons, and the Association of Erie Railway Surgeons, and in May, 1893, was appointed attending physician to the Thomas Orphan Asylum. November 19, 1885, he married Kate Schwink, of Gowanda.

Albert D. Lake was born in North Collins, Erie county, February 22, 1846. His father was Dr. Phipps Lake, a long-time physician in the northwestern part of Cattaraugus county, and a sketch of whom appears in this chapter in the town of Otto. Receiving a good English education at Springville Academy Albert D. entered the Medical Department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, where he pursued the study of medicine for two years (1866-67). He then registered as a student at the Cleveland Medical College and received from that institution his degree of M. D. March 4, 1868. For a period of two and a half years succeeding his graduation Dr. Lake practiced his profession in the village and town of New Albion, and in 1871 located in Perrysburg, where he remained as a physician until 1891, when he removed to Gowanda, where he has since followed his chosen calling. Dr. Lake served as supervisor of Perrysburg for three terms (1885, '86, and '87) was for fifteen years physician to the New York State Indian Agency and Thomas Asylum for Orphan and Destitute Indian Children on the Cattaraugus reservation, Fellow of the New York State Medical Association since August 28, 1888, and in June, 1891, was appointed chairman of the Board of Pension Examiners at Salamanca, a position he still holds. He joined the Cattaraugus County Medical Society in 1870, was for some time a member of its Board of Censors, was chosen its secretary in 1877, was elected president in 1878 and 1879, delegate to the State Medical Society in 1884, and representative to the National Medical Association in 1878 and 1881. He was also a charter member and for one year president of the Lake Erie Medical Society and is one of the present Board of Examiners for the Medical Department of Niagara University, Buffalo. May 15, 1867, he married Eliza M., daughter of Ralph Dewey, of Otto. They have one daughter, Nellie J.

PORTVILLE.

Dr. Willard, it is quite safe to say, was the first resident physician in this town. He came from Friendship, Allegany county, not far from 1840, and established a successful practice; how long he remained or whither he removed it has been impossible to ascertain.

David Bennie, a Scotchman by birth and parentage, was born June 13, 1794, came while yet a boy to America with his father, studied medicine in Auburn, and began his professional career in Cayuga county. He also practiced in Tompkins and Cortland counties, and removed to Olean in 1840, where he followed medicine until 1848, when he moved to Portville. Here he practiced till his death September 11, 1873. Possessing many sterling qualities he was widely known and highly respected. His daughter married Dr. Cornelius H. Bartlett. Dr. Bennie was a member and in 1844 vice-president of the old County Medical Society.

Dr. Rouse was an early physician in Portville. Aside from this fact his career seems to have been quietly consigned to oblivion.

Cornelius H. Bartlett.—See Olean.

Thomas S. Jackson was born in Oneida county, September 14, 1820, received his medical education at Castleton, Vt., and located in Portville in 1850, being licensed July 8, 1874, by the censors of the Steuben County Medical Society. He died here October 29, 1882.

Charles P. Jackson, son of Dr. Thomas S., was born in this town December 21, 1854, was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania (Medical Department), March 14, 1879, and began practicing medicine in Portville. He is now a physician in Hampton, N. H., going there after his father's death.

Wallace Sibley was reared in Cuba, Allegany county, began his career as a doctor in Ischua, went thence to Eldred, Pa., and came from there to this place, removing finally to Rochester. He graduated from the University of Buffalo on February 27, 1875, and became a member of the Cattaraugus County Medical Society the same year.

E. Burdick came to Portville in 1876 as C. H. Bartlett's successor. He was born in Little Genesee, Allegany county, was educated at Alfred, studied medicine with Dr. Crandall, of Andover, graduated, and began practice in Michigan, whither he came from and returned after a year or two. He was an adept in athletic sports. Dr. Burdick became a member of the County Medical Society in 1875.

R. H. Goodrich came into town in 1882 from Rhode Island. He was graduated from the University of Vermont on June 27, 1876, and went first, after a brief stay, to Turtle Point, Pa., and finally west.

J. L. C. Cronyn, a native of Fort Erie, Can., and a son of Dr. Cronyn, of Buffalo, received his medical diploma February 23, 1876, from the University of Buffalo, and came first to Olean and then to Portville, but remained in neither place long. He married here and finally returned to Buffalo.

John C. Young came here from Little Genesee, Allegany county, where he was born, and began his medical studies in the office of C. H. Bartlett in 1867. In 1871 he was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, and then became a partner with his old preceptor for two years, removing at the end of that time to Cuba, Allegany county, where he still resides. In 1892 he was graduated from the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, London, England. Dr. Young is emphatically a self-made man.

R. F. Rowley, born in Freetown, Cortland county, April 24, 1858, removed to Cuba, Allegany county, in 1865, studied medicine with John C. Young, was graduated February 26, 1884, from the University of Buffalo, and began his career in Salamanca in May, but removed to Portville in September, both in the same year, and has practiced here since. In 1884 Dr. Rowley joined the County Medical Society.

George W. Winterstine, son of Henry and Lydia (Ebner) Winterstine, was born in Montour county, Pa., March 22, 1852. At the age of fourteen his father died and at the age of twenty-two he entered a dry goods store. One year later he began his medical studies with Dr. C. M. Martin, of Sunbury, Pa., and March 12, 1878, was graduated from the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia. He practiced first at Paxinos and afterward at Hickory Corners, Pa., and in April, 1884, came to Portville. In March, 1875, he married Hannah E. Root, of Danville, Pa. They have three daughters.

M. J. McCarey was born in McKean county, Pa., May 25, 1861, was educated and graduated in 1885 from the State Normal School in Tioga county, Pa., was graduated in 1886 from the Northern Indiana Normal School, and received his diploma of M. D. from the medical college at Columbus, Ohio, March 4, 1890. Soon afterward he settled in Portville.

RANDOLPH.

Benjamin Blodgett, as near as can be ascertained, was the first physician to take up his residence and business in Randolph. He came to Napoli in 1827 and to East Randolph village in 1829, dying in the latter place in 1832; his widow married John Converse. Dr. Blodgett was a good practitioner for those days and covered a wide territory in his ride.

Oliver Guernsey was the first disciple of medicine in Randolph village. His father, Oliver, Sr., was an eminent physician and surgeon in Mt. Holly, Rutland county, Vt., where the son was born January 6, 1804. Oliver, Jr., studied medicine with his father and an elder brother, was graduated from the Castleton (Vt.) Medical College, and began the practice of his profession in Pierrepont, St. Lawrence county, where he remained until the spring of 1831, when he settled permanently in Randolph and died here July 3, 1864. October 26, 1827, he married Sally Crowley, who was born in Mt. Holly, Vt., May 23, 1806, and who still survives. They had twelve children, of whom five are living. Dr. Guernsey practiced over several towns, among both Indians and whites, and was highly respected everywhere. He was very public spirited in religious and educational affairs, was one of the original incorporators of Randolph Academy, and was a charter member of the old Cattaraugus County Medical Society. His father came here in 1836 and died the following year.

Alson Leavenworth.—See New Albion.

K. V. R. Lansingh was born at Albany in 1794, attended medical lectures and was graduated at Philadelphia, and began the practice of medicine in Amber, Onondaga county. Moving thence to Dansville and afterward to Penn Yan he came to Randolph in 1834 and followed his profession here until near 1850, when he returned to Albany, where he died about 1877. Dr. Lansingh was a partner for a few years of William Giles. He was a distinguished physician and a popular citizen, and was a member of the old County Medical Society.

Luther P. Cowles, a physician of the homeopathic school, came to Randolph in 1835, but a few years later removed to Chautauqua county. His brother, Rev. Sylvester Cowles, formed the first Congregational church of Randolph, the meeting effecting the organization being held in the doctor's house.

William Giles located in Randolph village in 1841, and for many years followed the medical profession, first with K. V. R. Lansingh and afterward alone, combining it also with business enterprises. With two brothers, Lyman and Benjamin, he conducted a dry goods store at East Randolph. He was born in Oneida county and died in this town about 1870, marrying late in life a daughter of Mr. Eggert, of Randolph, who still survives him at Lakewood, Chautauqua county. Dr. Giles had considerable swamp land near the west village and with two brothers owned a lumber interest in Napoli. He was an honest man and a skeptic in religion.

A. H. Davis made quite a stir here for four or five years. He came in 1845 and moved to Madison, Wis., where he has accumulated a competency. He was an eclectic, and was interested in a saw-mill near Falconer, Chautauqua county. On the organization of the Eclectic Medical College of Randolph Dr. Davis was elected to the chair of materia medica and pharmacy.

Isaac Hill made his appearance here about the same year and continued until his death in 1860. A physician of the old school, energetic, and somewhat popular, though inclined to jealousy, Dr. Hill built up a large and successful practice, and was something of a politician as well. His widow married a Mr. York and went to Corry, Pa., and finally to Jamestown.

E. G. Cook settled in Randolph as a physician a little prior to 1850. After a two years' stay he went to Fredonia, thence to Buffalo, and is now in New York. He was a homeopathist and was well liked.

Amos Paul Jones, son of Judge Alfred Jones, of Monroe county, was born in Rush, N. Y., April 22, 1816, and was graduated from the Albany Medical College in January, 1840. After practicing a few years in his native county Dr. Jones returned to Albany and took a post-graduate course, and in 1847 settled as a permanent resident of Randolph, where he died April 3, 1880. In 1841 he married Emeline S. Hurlbut, of Avon, Livingston county, who died four years later, and on January 1, 1851, he married, second, Mary A., daughter of Jonathan and Eunice (Wood) Hunstead, of Fredonia, N. Y., who survives him. Dr. Jones was a well read, scientific physician, a skillful surgeon, a specialist in diseases of the eye, and a good counselor. He was an excellent citizen, a close friend, and a kind neighbor.

D. S. Van Rensselaer was born near Albany in 1797 and at an early age entered the mercantile trade in the employ of a relative in Amber, Onondaga county. He married and followed that business in Amber some years and in 1833 removed to Penn Yan, Yates county. In October, 1835, he settled in Randolph, where he was engaged for a short time in mercantile business, which he finally sold to Swan & Scudder. He then followed farming and merchandizing until about 1853. In the early part of his life Dr. Van Rensselaer was associated much with his brother-in-law, K. V. R. Lansingh, and had imbibed a taste and some useful knowledge of the medical profession. He prepared himself for college lectures and in 1852 was graduated from the Cleveland Homeopathic Medical College, beginning his professional labors that year in Randolph, where he continued them until old age warned him to cease. He died here in December, 1880. Dr. Van Rensselaer was for many years an active member of the M. E. church, organized the first Sabbath school in Randolph, and was its superintendent for some time. In politics he was an old school Democrat, but on the agitation of the slavery question promptly sided with the Free Soil party, and later became a pronounced Republican. He early became a Mason, was a Knight Templar at the time of the Morgan excitement, and in 1862 received the 33d degree. His father was a charter member of the first Masonic lodge established in Albany, while his brother William H. attained to the highest position and honors known to the craft in this country. His mother died in Randolph village at the great age of nearly one hundred and two years. Dr. Van Rensselaer was descended from the Van Rensselaers who settled in and about Albany in 1651. He was the fifth in descent from Jeremias, who was the first of the name to permanently locate in America, and from whom all of the name in this country descended. His father, Henry K., was before the Revolution a soldier in the Colonial service, holding a major's commission under King George III. At the outbreak of hostilities he sided with the patriots and was severely wounded early in the war, carrying the bullet in his body until his death. The family in some of its branches has been represented in civil affairs and in every war in the country since 1660.

Nelson Saunders is the son of Harvey and Sarah (Hanford) Saunders, who settled in Farmersville in 1831. Harvey Saunders died about 1871; his widow survives and lives in Randolph. Three of their sons became physicians—John, who graduated from the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons, settled and for over forty years practiced in Belfast, Allegany county, and died there; Charles W., who was graduated at the Medical University of New York city in 1860, became a partner with his brother and afterward practiced alone in Belfast, and died there recently; and Nelson. Nelson Saunders was born in Norwalk, Conn., December 2, 1823, received an academic education, and was graduated in medicine from the University of Buffalo in February, 1849. He took up his profession and has since continued in Randolph, having enjoyed a large ride and a high reputation both as a practitioner and a consultant. For over twenty years he has been local surgeon to the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio railroad, and for some time one of the directors of the Randolph Bank. He joined the County Medical Society in 1874.

Elijah Harmon.—See Napoli.

Samuel Foote became a resident about 1842 as a physician of the old school. He removed some three years later to Waterboro, N. Y., and finally to Cincinnati, where he became a homeopathist. He eventually came to Jamestown, where he died suddenly while sitting in his chair in his office. Dr. Foote was particularly and specially a surgeon, in which science he became considerably celebrated. He was a rough, blunt man, but made many friends.

Charles J. Kenworthy, a native of Philadelphia, was a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College of that city, and upon his settlement in Randolph about 1847 he became a partner of A. H. Davis, which relationship was soon dissolved. Before coming here Dr. Kenworthy had become an eclectic, and upon the formation of the Randolph Eclectic Medical College he was appointed to the professorship of surgery. He had also delivered lectures at a medical college in Petersburg, Va., and after leaving here he became professor of surgery in an eclectic college in Syracuse. He went to New York city and finally to Australia, but returned to America and married. He was well read and quite a writer, and it is said of him that he was more of a medical scientist than a practitioner.

Frederick Larkin came to Randolph in 1841. The son of Edmund Larkin, an early and a prominent physician of Thompson, Conn., he was born there February 12, 1814, and studied medicine with his father. When the Randolph Eclectic Medical College was organized Dr. Larkin was given the chair of physiology, and when this institution was merged into the Central New York Eclectic Medical College at Syracuse he had conferred upon him the honorary degree of M. D. A more extended sketch of Dr. Larkin will be found in the history of Randolph. He has never practiced medicine.

A. B. Parsons was born in Fairfield, Vt., took lectures in New York city, and came to East Randolph in 1851. His wife was Marietta, daughter of William Hurd, of Bridport, Vt., and sister of J. C. Hurd, a druggist of East Randolph. Dr. Parsons went to Springfield, Mass., after more than twenty years' practice here, and shortly afterward removed to Jamestown. He died in 1874 in Atlanta, Ga., while on a trip for his health, leaving a widow and two daughters. He was a strong Democrat, a true Episcopalian, and a generous hearted citizen. For some time he was local surgeon for the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio railroad, and in all his professional life he distinguished himself by a thorough and scientific knowledge, close application, and sound judgment. In fact he ranked as one of the best physicians and surgeons in Cattaraugus county. Dr. Parsons in 1870 joined the County Medical Society.

Henry Neville and his wife, Mrs. A. S. J. Neville, neé Abbie S. Jones, daughter of Perry Jones, of Randolph, commenced a homeopathic practice here in 1872 and three or four years afterward went west and finally to Jamestown, where Mrs. Neville died. She was bright, well educated, and after leaving here acquired a large practice. He still lives in Jamestown, where he has married again.

Arthur H. Southwick was a physician in East Randolph a number of years ago. His father was a druggist. He was a graduate of Ann Arbor. After a two years' stay he went to Pennsylvania and practiced in Corydon, Warren, and Bradford, and finally removed to Syracuse.

O. S. Martin.—See Salamanca.

A. A. Whipple was in Randolph for two years from about 1877, secured a large practice and a good reputation in the homeopathic school, which he followed, and removed thence to Cuba, Allegany county, where he went into partnership with his father-in-law. He finally located in Quincy, Ill., where he devotes much of his time to the practice of surgery.

David Ward, author, druggist, and physician, located at East Randolph not far from 1850. Here he conducted a drug store and practiced medicine some six or eight years, devoting most of his time, however, to his mercantile business. He wrote several works on medicine.

George W. Whittaker was born in Windsor, Vt., came to East Randolph about 1849, and followed the botanical system of medicine in connection with mercantile trade for several years. He removed finally to New Rochelle and thence to Andover, N. Y., where he practiced and had a drug store. Late in life he returned to East Randolph and opened a small office and drug store, and here he died in 1883. Dr. Whittaker was somewhat of a medical writer and published a volume entitled "The Sick Man's Friend."

David Bemus, related to the Bemuses of Jamestown, followed his profession here a couple of years and moved to Steamburg. After residing there a year he left on account of ill health and finally died in Bradford, Pa.

Hector S. Bowen, a native of Conewango, a student of A. B. Parsons, and a graduate of one of the medical schools in New York city, formed a partnership with his preceptor, but was only permitted to follow his chosen calling for a brief period. The germs of consumption developed in his young body so thoroughly that a trip south produced no benefit, and he died here in the flower of youth. Dr. Bowen, in 1870, joined the County Medical Society. He had a bright and promising future.

Dr. Clements, a German, practiced his root and herb system first in Ashford a year, whence he came to Randolph, and finally removed several years later to Great Valley, where he died. He never mastered the English language enough to make himself understood. He was termed a "good doctor" and had many followers.

Parthenia Williams, familiarly known as "Dr. Parthenia," began her profession in East Randolph at a time when women were just entering the field of medicine and people were prejudiced because of her sex. She acquitted herself quite creditably, but did not succeed in establishing a large practice.

Mrs. M. L. Maxon, a hydropathic doctor, practiced her calling here for a short time about 1874, but did not seem to gather many supporters of that mode of treatment into her "professional" net.

Dr. Kahle practiced medicine in Randolph a few months, and leaving here went to Kennedy, where he was both successful and popular. He finally removed to Lima, O.

Orrin A. Tompkins, son of Amos D. and Emily (Hale) Tompkins, was born in Ellery, Chautauqua county, February 2, 1841. After teaching school a few terms he entered the office of George S. Harrison, of Sinclairville, as a medical student and on February 27, 1865, was graduated as an M. D. from the University of Buffalo. He settled the same spring in Randolph, where he has since practiced his profession with the exception of a three years' residence in Steamburg. From 1872 to 1884 he lived in East Randolph; since then he has resided in the west village. Dr. Tompkins is a member of the New York State Medical Association and the Cattaraugus County Medical Society, joining the latter in 1874, and being elected president in 1887, vice-president in 1878, and one of its censors. In 1865 he was appointed pension examiner, which position he held ten years. He married, in 1868, Frances P. Marsh, by whom he has one son.

Emory M. Cheney was a graduate of the University of Buffalo, receiving his diploma of M. D. February 25, 1873. He was born in Poland Center, Chautauqua county, coming hence to this town about 1880. Seven or eight years later he went to Kennedy, where he had become interested in farming and lumbering to the abandonment of his profession. Dr. Cheney became a member of the County Medical Society in 1875.

Archibald H. Babcock is a son of Erastus and Doroleski (Perkins) Babcock, and was born in Scio, Allegany county, November 3, 1853. Receiving a common school education, supplemented by three years at the Union School in Jamestown, where he began the study of medicine in the office of C. Orms & Son, young Babcock finally entered the Homeopathic Medical Department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, from which institution he received his degree of M. D. in March, 1879, and in June of that year located permanently in Randolph. October 7, 1882, he married Emma L. Parmenter, of Cambridgeport, Mass., a niece of Mrs. J. T. Edwards.

John H. Sackrider, son of David and Julia (Maybee) Sackrider, was born in Geauga, Ohio, in 1847, and is descended from a prominent Dutch family of the name who settled early in the Mohawk valley in this State. His paternal grandfather was a soldier in the Revolution and his maternal grandfather was in the War of 1812. In 1852 his parents settled on a farm in Napoli, in whose common schools he was educated, finishing, however, his literary studies in Randolph Academy. He also taught twenty-nine terms of district and graded schools. February 26, 1878, he was graduated as a physician and surgeon from the University of Buffalo and immediately began his professional career in East Randolph in partnership with Orrin A. Tompkins. Six years later the firm was dissolved and Dr. Sackrider assumed the entire practice, and since then he has continued alone. In 1878 he married Hattie F., daughter of James Senter, of Olean, who has borne him one son. Dr. Sackrider joined the County Medical Society in 1884.

Myron C. Hawley was born in Brant, Erie county, November 7, 1856; his parents were Alonzo M. and Lucy W. (Clough) Hawley, farmers. He was educated at Angola Academy, was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo on February 21, 1881, and began practice at once in Steamburgh. In the spring of 1884 he removed to East Randolph. In July, 1878, Dr. Hawley married Kittie A. Beals, of East Randolph, by whom he has two sons. He was made a member of the County Medical Society in 1884 and since 1889 has served as its secretary.

Guy B. Crandall is a graduate of the University of Buffalo, receiving his medical diploma from there March 1, 1887. He is a son of Etsel and Mariette (Conklin) Crandall and was born in Little Valley, July 24, 1858. He attended Ten Broeck Academy, was graduated in 1882 at the Chamberlain Institute, and afterward took a course of both Greek and Latin at Chautauqua. Dr. Crandall began the practice of his profession in Perrysburg in copartnership with Dr. Lake, but a few months later removed to Randolph, where he became the attending physician of the Western New York Home for Homeless and Dependent Children. In September, 1883, he married Addie Thorp, of East Randolph. They have one son. Dr. Crandall became a member of the County Medical Society in 1887. He has recently relinquished his practice and become a commercial traveler, but still resides in Randolph.

Elton S. Rich was located at East Randolph about a year. He was born in New Albion, received his diploma from the University of the City of New York on March 6, 1886, and the next July began practice here. He removed to Kennedy, Chautauqua county, where he now is.

Robert A. Carson, a native of Sacramento, Cal., was graduated March 20, 1877, from the Chicago Medical College, and commenced his profession in Randolph. His brief practice here marked a brilliant man and a thorough scholar.

Andre L. Cowles received his diploma from the Columbus (Ohio) Medical College on February 27, 1878, located at once in Randolph village, and followed his profession until about 1882, when he removed to Pennsylvania. He was born in Harmony, Chautauqua county, and was a well read physician.

Edward Wallace Lee was born in Perrysburg, O., July 21, 1859, came to Randolph with his parents in 1866, was graduated in medicine from the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor and the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York city, and began practice here in 1882, removing two years afterward to Omaha, Neb., where he has acquired a reputation and a business not often accorded so young a man. Indeed his success there has been almost phenomenal. Prior to these studies Dr. Lee was a cadet at the West Granville (N. Y.) Military Institute, from which he was graduated in 1878. He married a daughter of A. Wentworth, of Randolph.

George P. Meecham was born in Kingston, Ontario, Can., May 1, 1860, was graduated from Queens University, April 28, 1891, and commenced as a physician in Limestone the following June. He came to Randolph a year later as Guy B. Crandall's successor.

Edward C. Lyman, born in New York city December 24, 1869, came to Randolph with his parents in 1875, was for three years a cadet at the military school at Sing Sing, was graduated in medicine from the University of Michigan in June, 1892, took a post-graduate course and received a diploma November 29, 1892, from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York city, and has commenced his profession in Randolph village.

SALAMANCA.

Daniel Bucklin was doubtless the first resident medical practitioner in Salamanca. He came in 1839 and removed to Little Valley in 1840.—See Little Valley.

H. M. Gale, it is learned from good authority, was the first permanent resident physician in Salamanca. He located at the west village, where he practiced his profession many years with excellent success, leaving about 1870. Dr. Gale was a charter member, the first vice-president, and one of the first censors of the County Medical Society, and in both civil and professional life was highly respected.

E. A. Chapman, a regular graduate, came to Salamanca as a clerk for the Erie railroad. His wife died and he took up the practice of his profession, but shortly afterward removed. He was here in all some four or five years, and joined the County Medical Society in 1874.

M. M. McDonell followed medicine at West Salamanca for a few years prior to 1870. Little is known about him, however.

A. S. Bonesteel.—See Great Valley.

James Wright, an eclectic, came to West Salamanca from Missouri, whither he finally returned. He did little professional business, but confined his attention mainly to a drug store. He removed about 1876.

Henry W. Dye.—See Dayton.

W. W. Drake, another eclectic physician in West Salamanca, was reared at what is called Drake run in that town, his father being Warren Drake, from whom the locality was named. Dr. Drake, I think, began his practice here, but removed shortly to the west.

Dr. Fisher practiced the eclectic system of medicine at West Salamanca a brief period.

Dr. Westbrook was at one time located in practice here, but aside from this little is known of him.

Dr. Kimberley also followed medicine at the village of West Salamanca a short time.

Henry Learned did some medical business and ran a saw-mill for a time. He finally went to Florida, where he is growing oranges.

Julian G. Smith, son of T. L. and Catherine (Nelmes) Smith, was born on the island of Bermuda, January 17, 1845. When eleven years of age his parents sent him to Clinton, N. Y., to attend Dwight's High School; he afterward completed a scientific course at Bisbee's school in Poughkeepsie, and returning to Bermuda remained there until 1867, when he began a medical course in the University of Pennsylvania, where he graduated March 1, 1870. Dr. Smith commenced the practice of his profession in Plainfield, N. Y., but one month later, on August 1, 1870, came to Salamanca, where he has since pursued his chosen calling, being now the longest resident physician in the village, of which he has served as trustee. In 1873 he married Sarah C., daughter of De Lancy King, and they have had seven children, six of whom are living.

John P. Colgrove is a son of Francis and Amanda (Pitts) Colgrove, of Hornellsville, where he was born April 19, 1833. Reared a farmer and educated in the common schools and Alfred University he early chose the medical profession as his life-long vocation, and combined his primary studies in medicine with teaching school. He was a medical student under his uncle, Dr. James Pitts, and for one year (1860-61) pursued his studies at the College of Medicine and Surgery, Cincinnati, immediately afterward passing the State examination which entitled him to practice in Ohio. From then until November, 1862, he followed his profession with another uncle, Dr. John C. Pitts, of Rushford, Allegany county, and at the solicitation of John L. Eddy assumed the latter's practice in Allegany. There he remained until 1866, when he removed to Clearwater, Minn., where he practiced until 1870, and where he married his wife, Salina Parker, a native of Allegany. Returning to Allegany Dr. Colgrove resumed his practice there and continued until the fall of 1874, when he took lectures at the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, graduating therefrom February 23, 1875. He then located in Salamanca. Dr. Colgrove is a member of the Salamanca Board of Pension Examiners, was for several years local surgeon to the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio railroad, and was one of the founders and continuously a director of the First National Bank of Salamanca. He joined the Medical Society in 1883 and in 1885 and 1886 was its president. He also has a drug store.

Salina Parker Colgrove, born in Allegany, May 27, 1850, is a daughter of J. W. Parker, Esq. Receiving her education in the local district schools and in Olean Academy, from which she was graduated in 1866, she followed teaching for two years and for the same period pursued a course of normal studies at the University of Michigan. In 1870 she was married to John P. Colgrove, then practicing medicine in Clearwater, Minn., but who returned to Allegany with his bride that year, following his profession there until 1875, when the couple moved to Salamanca, where they settled permanently. Mrs. Colgrove was graduated as an M. D. from the University of Buffalo on February 28, 1888, and the following year from the Department of Pharmacy of the same institution. She is a charter member and was elected the first president of the Buffalo Medical Club, is a member of the Educational and Industrial Union of the City of Buffalo, and an honorary member of the Buffalo Medical Society.

Charles Oliver Day, son of Chauncey and Almedia (Oliver) Day, was born in South Dansville, N. Y., April 13, 1846, was graduated in June, 1867, from the Rogersville Union Seminary and Collegiate Institute, received his degree of M. D. from Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York, March 1, 1870, and began practice in Cohocton, Steuben county, in partnership with Dr. L. B. Healy and continued it with Dr. J. L. Acomb in Tidionte, Pa., two years in each place. In 1874 he came to Salamanca, becoming a member of its first Board of Village Trustees, and remained until his death November 18, 1891. Dr. Day was an excellent surgeon, and for many years bore that official relation to the Erie and the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroads. He became a member of the County Medical Society in 1874, was its vice-president in 1877, was one of the censors, and in 1883 was a delegate to the State Medical Society. November 12, 1873, he married Lucy S. Healy, who bore him three children, and who survives him.

Fred C. Beals was born in Gowanda, April 18, 1852. His parents were Samuel P. and Sarah E. (Holcomb) Beals. He attended Chamberlain Institute, was graduated as a physician and surgeon on February 23, 1875, from the University of Buffalo, and that spring hung out his shingle as a practitioner in Conewango. In December, 1878, he removed to Ellicottville, and in April, 1880, came to Salamanca. He is local surgeon for the Western New York & Pennsylvania, Erie, and Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroads. In 1875 he was made a member of the County Medical Society, has been one of its censors, and became its vice-president in 1892. Dr. Beals married, in 1875, Lucy I. Beardsley, of East Randolph. They have one son.

W. A. Crandall, a native of Mansfield and on February 17, 1883, a graduate of the Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago, began his chosen calling in East Otto that year, moved thence to Michigan, returned and practiced two years in Salamanca, and finally located again in Michigan, where he now resides. He is the inventor and patentee of a rubber obstetrical pan.

Samuel Learned, father of Henry, died in this town, yet he performed most of his professional work while living in Elkdale in the town of Little Valley, where he practiced four or five years.

Charles S. Boyce, son of Charles S., was born in Westfield, Chautauqua county, December 24, 1855, was graduated from the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, March 11, 1877, and began his practice in Fredonia, N. Y. He removed thence to East Aurora, Erie county, and in 1881 came to Salamanca. October 30, 1878, he married Elba Ralyea, of Pennsylvania.

Two doctors by the name of Baker, one a regular, the other an eclectic, but not related, followed their professions here a year each in 1876 or '77.

H. L. Ensworth, a native of Independence, Allegany county, was licensed by the Cattaraugus County Medical Society, June 4, 1867, thus becoming its first licentiate and a charter member, and is said to have been one of the first practitioners in West Salamanca. He still resides in town incapacitated for practice.

Richard Dewees Wilcox, son of Dr. Samuel S. Wilcox, of Napoli, was born there February 6, 1842. He studied medicine under his father and in 1863 enlisted in the army, being detailed as hospital steward. Returning home he engaged in mercantile business in Jamestown, and June 11, 1867, he married Fannie D. McCoy, of Ellicottville, who survives him. He was then one year a medical student in the University of Buffalo, and was graduated in March, 1871, from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York city. From then until 1880 he practiced his profession in Corry, Pa., but in that year came to Salamanca, where he resided until his death January 5, 1892. For two years he served as county coroner and for some time was a prominent Odd Fellow. He was also a trustee of the Congregational church; his brother S. Darwin was a professor in Hamilton College and died March 31, 1874.

Charles M. Hamilton, born in Harpersfield, N. Y., August 30, 1856, began his medical studies in the Albany Medical College, and was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Vermont on June 26, 1877. He practiced in Gladwin, Mich., and Seapo, Kan., and in 1881 came to West Salamanca, moving thence in 1883 to Salamanca village. Since coming to this town Dr. Hamilton has been wholly engaged in the drug business.

Mrs. E. H. Stevenson, a graduate in 1878 of the Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago, came to Salamanca in 1882, and remained only a short time.

W. R. Sitler came here also in 1882, and was a graduate of the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, receiving his diploma March 12, 1875. He was local surgeon for the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio railroad and removed after about eight years' practice to Binghamton.

R. F. Rowley.—See Portville.

Lyman Lewis Deck, son of Abram and Helen (Moore) Deck, was born in Stark, N. Y., June 10, 1850. He was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Michigan, March 27, 1878, began the practice of medicine in Ripley, Chautauqua county, continued it in Duke's Center, Pa., and in 1882 came to Salamanca, where he has given his attention quite largely to the use of the microscope in diagnosis and has also made a specialty of diseases of the eye. He is a member of the Chautauqua and the Cattaraugus Counties

Medical Societies; of the latter he was president in 1889 and '90, secretary and treasurer in 1886 and '87, and one of its present censors.

Weldon Dickson is a son of Rev. Alfred and Eveline B. Dickson, and was born in Harmony, Chautauqua county, February 7, 1857. He was graduated from Allegany College, Meadville, Pa., in 1882, began the study of medicine with Laban Hazeltine, of Jamestown, received his degree of M. D. from the Baltimore College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1886, and began practice the same year in Jamestown. In 1889 he removed to Cuba, Allegany county, and in August, 1891, located in Salamanca. On January 2, 1889, Dr. Dickson married Anna, daughter of Charles Hevenor, by whom he has one son.

W. C. Peaslee.—See Napoli.

Abner P. Reeher was born in Mercer county, Pa., in 1855, was educated in the High School in Clarksville in his native county, became a medical student in the office of Dr. G. T. Monroe, of Mercer, Pa., and was graduated February 28, 1883, from the Homeopathic Hospital College, Cleveland, O. After practicing one year in Massillon, O., and three years in Johnstown, Pa., Dr. Reeher came to Salamanca in 1887, where he has since followed his profession.

Frank C. Davie.—See Little Valley.

Garret V. W. Cox, a native of Sparta, Livingston county, was born in 1852, was graduated in 1875 from the Cincinnati Eclectic Medical College, and began practice as a physician in Portage, N. Y. In 1877 he removed to Bradford, Pa., where he was in copartnership with C. E. Sayles until 1882, when he took a post-graduate course at Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York city, and states that he was graduated therefrom in the fall of that year. He settled in practice in Red House and in 1890 removed to West Salamanca, where he is still in active business.

T. L. De Nike was born in Chautauqua county and received his medical diploma from the University of Buffalo on February 26, 1865. He located in Salamanca in 1885 and has since devoted his attention almost wholly to a drug store.

Wirt W. Jones, son of Dr. Chauncey M. and Dr. Sophia P. Jones, of Cat-

taurus, was born there in May, 1867, was graduated May 3, 1892, from the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, and commenced the practice of medicine in West Salamanca, but removed within a few months with his widowed mother to Greenville, Mich. For sketches of his father and mother see New Albion.

Theodore L. Hazard was born in Napoli, was graduated June 28, 1883, from the Homeopathic College of the University of Michigan, and began practice as a physician in partnership with Dr. O. S. Martin in Salamanca. He moved after a brief stay to Iowa.

O. S. Martin, homeopathist, practiced in Randolph a few years and moved to Jamestown, where he came from. For a time he itinerated between there and Salamanca.

YORKSHIRE.

Dr. Patterson has the distinction of being the first resident physician in Yorkshire. The early settlers here were attended by Dr. Colgrove, of Sardinia, Erie county. Where Dr. Patterson hailed from or what became of him can not be ascertained.

Augustus Crary erected in 1884 a grist-mill and a storehouse at Yorkshire Corners, but it is not probable that he resided here and engaged in practicing medicine.—See Ellicottville.

Ambrose Thomas came to the Center from Niagara Falls about 1832. He was an old school physician of excellent attainments and became very popular. After a four years' stay he returned to Niagara Falls.

John Thomas, a brother of Ambrose, moved into town about 1835 and also remained some four years. He did not acquire an extended practice.

Calvin Chickering.—See Humphrey.

William Langmaid used roots and herbs in his quite general practice at an early day and did for those times a good business. He died here.

Dr. Powers was another early physician in Yorkshire who located at the Corners and moved thence to Wyoming county.

Dr. Ives, a student and a brother-in-law of Dr. Colgrove, of Sardinia, settled at Yorkshire Corners quite early, and practiced only a few years.

Henry Sheppard, another student of Dr. Colgrove, had a large and successful business here as a physician at one time. He was popular and greatly esteemed, and finally went west.

John Cheeseman did some professional work in town prior to 1875. A son of his is also a physician. Dr. Cheeseman finally died in Eldred, Pa.

Dr. McCarthy practiced at the Corners a short time and died there. His widow has married again.

L. A. Cornwell succeeded Dr. Sheppard at Yorkshire Corners and followed his profession there during the war. He was skillful, shrewd, and successful, and moved to Alden, Erie county, of which county he was a native.

Benjamin Hunt, a homeopathic doctor and a Universalist preacher, followed medicine some at the Center prior to 1870. He removed to Erie county, where he died; he is said to have been a sound reasoner, and was decisive, stubborn, and skillful.

Lyman Packard, a native of Yorkshire, began his professional career in Olean and thence came here, remaining some ten or twelve years—probably through the seventies. He was a regular graduate, a scholar, well read, even scientific, but was not successful, and finally went to Michigan.

George St. John was engaged in practicing medicine at the Center a few years before 1865. He was a charter member and one of the first censors of the present County Medical Society. Aside from this little is known of him.

Isaac K. Richardson, a native of Windham county, Vt., a Universalist preacher too, came here in 1884. He received a diploma from the Eclectic Medical Society of the Southern Tier dated May 5, 1875. He had a drug store at the Center, and left in 1892 for Corfu, Genesee county, where he has discontinued the practice of medicine.

Alonzo Wiltse was born in Saratoga county, February 22, 1814, began studying medicine with John Allen, an old school doctor, and finally took up the botanical system of practice. He removed to East Ashford in 1847 and commenced his profession there as the first physician in the village. He also had a farm there which he carried on. In February, 1871, he came to Yorkshire Center, where he still resides. Dr. Wiltse was licensed August 12, 1874, by the Eclectic Medical Society of the 32d Senatorial District, and has held a number of town offices and has been coroner two terms.

Frederick Krehbiel, born in Clarence, Erie county, October 4, 1843, attended Williamsville Academy, and was graduated in medicine from the University of Buffalo on February 23, 1875. He had previously read medicine with his brother in New Haven, O., and with J. F. Miner, of Buffalo. Dr. Krehbiel began his career at Yorkshire Center in 1875. His brother, a graduate also of Buffalo, was formerly a prominent practitioner in Cleveland, O.

Baxter Sovereign, son of Maurice and Hannah Sovereign, was born in Almer, Middlesex county, Ontario, Can., attended Ann Arbor University one year (1867), and in 1869 was graduated from the Cleveland Homeopathic Hospital College. He practiced one year each in Canada, in Washington, D. C., and in Pasadena, Cal., and then located in Yorkshire. Dr. Sovereign married, in 1877, Lula Thomas.

Arthur H. Wright, a native of Canton, St. Lawrence county, was born December 30, 1836. He was educated at Newbury (Vt.) Seminary and at Castleton, Vt., and in August, 1862, enlisted in Co. I, 3d Vt. Vols., being detailed as hospital steward. After practicing in Vermont and in Livingston county, N. Y., he came to Sandusky in 1886 and thence in 1891 to Yorkshire Corners. He is a member of the Erie County Medical Society and of the Eclectic Medical Society of the State of New York.

CHAPTER XV.

THE MILITARY: THE OLD STATE MILITIA. THE COUNTY IN THE VARIOUS WARS. THE DUTCH HILL EXCITEMENT.

[By COL. E. A. NASH.]

TO COLLABORATE material for a complete military history of any county is a herculean if not an impossible task. Accurate data covering the principal wars can be obtained from documentary sources, but much information of individuals and a full account of the old State militia prior to 1853 are almost wholly buried in oblivion or storied in the uncertain realms of tradition. In fact, what appears in the following pages down to the war of the Rebellion has been gleaned mainly from personal interviews, supplemented now and then by a reference to an old paper or commission to substantiate a statement. The account of the State militia, incomplete as it necessarily is, will be interesting and valuable from the fact that comparatively few are living who were once active in its general trainings or musters; that scarcely any one of the present generation has the least idea of how our fathers annually trained in the manual of arms and in the arts of mimic war; and, finally, that it is the first attempt in Cattaraugus county to collect and preserve a record of the events of those times and occasions when youth and age assembled regularly for fun and drill.

It is eminently desirable at this period of our county's history to systematically arrange and record its whole military data in a manner to which it is properly entitled, and in this article space is devoted to the various subjects as nearly as possible in chronological order. The plan was arranged by W. Stanley Child and myself. Mr. Child has faithfully and ably assisted in gathering the material and in preparing it for the press.

An earnest effort was made to secure the names and brief data of the Revolutionary veterans and soldiers of the War of 1812-15 who settled at one time or another in this county, but how futile has been this task is glaringly shown by the appended lists. In the absence of records it has been necessary to rely largely upon tradition. The veterans credited to Leon, however, were obtained by the assistance of E. C. Durfee, Esq., whose knowledge is derived from the fact of his having procured bounty lands or a pension for almost every soldier or his widow who ever lived much time in the town. In 1840 there were "sixty-two persons residents of the county who were pensioners for Revolutionary or other military services."

Nearly all of these brave veterans were pioneer settlers in the various towns; a few subsequently moved westward or to other portions of the State. The majority of those who immigrated to Cattaraugus county died within its borders and sweetly sleep on its sunny hillsides or in its green valleys, revered in memory and sacredly remembered each glorious Memorial Day. Their heroic deeds are immortalized on the pages of national history, but much of their individual action is buried in the misty past. In the following lists, incomplete as they are, appear the names of all whom it has been possible to secure:

Nearly all the agents who procured bounty lands for veteran soldiers or their widows under the congressional acts of 1850 and 1855 are now dead, and it is to be regretted that their descendants have forgotten the material facts in connection with their heroic service. In the War of 1812-15 the county evidently contributed generously, considering the population (about five hundred), but no organizations were recruited here, the volunteers joining companies and regiments in counties north and northeast.

The participants in the Mexican war (1846) who either enlisted from Cattaraugus county or became residents afterward were few, and efforts to secure the names of all such soldiers have resulted in the following list:

SOLDIERS OF THE MEXICAN WAR.

Ames, Milo, wounded in hip, enlisted from and returned to Little Valley; Little Valley.
 Bush, Jacob; Machias.
 Bush, Peter; Machias.
 Fancher, William, enlisted in regular army at Albany, July 13, 1841, honorably discharged in July, 1846, as 1st sergeant Co. F, 2d U. S. Inf., was at the capitulation of the City of Mexico; was also in Florida war; was recruiting officer for U. S. army after Mexican war; re-enlisted in naval service, served four years, promoted 1st lieutenant, discharged 1850; died in Leon on May 24, 1862, from fever contracted in the Civil war, in which he served as captain; Leon.
 Farley, Peter, lost an arm in service, given bounty land; Leon.

Van Aernam, Jacob B.; Mansfield.
 Ward, Eliza, enlisted in Berkshire Co., Mass., stationed at Boston and Cambridge, died in 1861, aged seventy-seven; East Otto.
 Waring, William, was present at the surrender of Hull at Detroit, died in Lima, N. Y., 1835; Farmersville.
 Warner, Moses, Jr.; Franklinville.
 Washburn, Howland, Jr.; Franklinville.
 Wasson, Thornton, captain; Hinsdale.
 Wheeler, David, born in Conway, Mass., served six months, died here; Humphrey.
 Willcoxon, Alanson; Dayton.
 Willoughby, Ebenezer, musician, settled here about 1819, came from Washington Co.; Great Valley.
 Willoughby, Reuben, musician (?), came from Washington Co. 1819; Great Valley.
 Winchester, Elhanan, enlisted from Marcellus, N. Y., musician, was at Sackett's Harbor and others; East Otto.
 Winship, Benjamin, given bounty land; Little Valley.
 Wixon, Seth; Carrolton.
 Wood, Emory, prisoner twice; Hinsdale.
 Wood, Wheelock; Hinsdale.
 Woodford, Samuel, captain at Lundy's Lane and Kingston, served under Gen. W. H. Harrison, died in East Randolph January 10, 1857; Ellicottville, Napoli, and Randolph.
 Woolward, Ayres, enlisted from Vermont in Capt. Briggs's company, served three months at Burlington, given bounty land; Leon.
 Wright, Abraham, musician, came from Washington Co. 1819; Great Valley.
 Yates, Emory; Hinsdale.

In the first Seminole Indian war (1817-18) a Mr. Day enlisted under General Jackson as a musician, and after the war accompanied the latter to his home in Tennessee, where he resided until Jackson became president, when he was appointed collector of customs at Dunkirk. Mr. Day finally settled in New Albion and died there. In the last Seminole war (1856-58) Jeremiah S. Harrington, of Leon, participated and was severely wounded. Whether or Howard, George M., enlisted in 10th N. Y. Vols., served six months; was also in the Rebellion; Persia.

 Kelly, Bradford; East Otto.
 Long, Samuel, also in 15th Regt. in Rebellion, died in Soldiers' Home in Bath; Otto.
 Rowley, Emmett; Machias.
 Walker, Chauncey; Mansfield.
 Winship, Oscar F., first cadet to U. S. Military Academy from Cattaraugus county, entering in 1836; 1st lieutenant in regular army; brevetted captain for meritorious conduct at Palo Alto and Resaca, made asst. adjt.-gen. July, 1846, promoted major December, 1847, served much on the General Staff of the army, died December 13, 1855; Persia.

not any other citizens of Cattaraugus county saw service in these or similar struggles can not be determined.

It is a recognized fact that all who fought in these several wars, and either volunteered from or afterward resided in this county, served nobly, faithfully, and creditably, and deserve a prominent place in all history. Their descendants and the present inhabitants may well feel proud of the honorable record so justly accredited to those brave men. In the more recent events of the great Rebellion let us not forget their heroic deeds and individual worth.

Time often obliterates unrecorded conditions and incidents. A generation passes away and they become amusing anecdotes of a former period. Another generation steps upon the stage of activity and finds them buried in tradition or oblivion, from which it becomes the arduous task of the historian to resurrect and preserve. An excellent example of this human characteristic is the old State militia, of which scarcely a remnant of history has hitherto been recorded. Its organization and variegated equipment, its annual trainings or drills, its crude manoeuvres, its power and decline—all are little more than historied in vague remembrance by a few old men still living who thus prepared themselves in peace to defend their country should occasion demand.

The long struggle for American Independence; the close proximity of the sparsely settled districts to the Indian country; the absence of a national navy and regular army; and the impending disputes between the colonies and other nations very early created a general desire for armed security. In fact it was not only a desire but a necessity. To effectually and inexpensively protect and maintain the dignity of the young republic soon became a subject of legislation, and on May 8, 1792, Congress passed an act authorizing the systematic and uniform organization of local military companies, regiments, and brigades throughout the United States. On April 23, 1823, the New York State Legislature for the first time availed itself of the authority reserved to the several States by enacting a law to organize, officer, and drill all persons liable to military duty in conformity with the old congressional act. This law was practically a re-enactment of the act of Congress of 1792, adding, however, a few minor provisions in detail.

The popularity and effectiveness of the militia was attested by the speediness with which a good sized army was raised and marched to the front at the outbreak of the War of 1812-15. After that struggle ended the necessity of armed organizations, properly drilled and accoutred, was more evident than ever, and public interest in their maintenance increased proportionately. Hence the enactment of the law in 1823 by the State Legislature as previously mentioned. Punctual attendance at the annual trainings was considered a privilege and a duty; an election to any official position, even to a non-commissioned rank, was given and received as an honor. Indeed all military offices were generally sought after—not for the remuneration they gave, for only the brigade inspector received pay for his services, but rather for the respect and fame they brought the incumbent.

The militia laws down to about 1850 required the enrollment of every able-bodied white male citizen between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, except national and State officers, preachers, teachers, students, and Quakers. The latter, however, were required to pay each year a commutation of $4. Each man was obliged to arm and equip himself at his own expense with a musket, bayonet, belt, two spare flints, knapsack, cartridge box, and ammunition, all of which were exempt from seizure for debt or taxes. Commissioned officers were uniformed and accounted consistent with their rank. Officers' drills were held once a year, in August, at convenient points, and lasted three days, on at least the first of which the brigade inspector superintended the manœuvres. On the first Monday in September the company trainings took place in their respective beats, and on an appointed day between then and October 15th occurred the annual regimental muster or "general trainin'." This was for many years the day of days; it was anticipated by young and old as an occasion for fun and frolic; even the Glorious Fourth scarcely surpassed it. Everybody was there—men, women, and children. Every boy who could raise ten cents was on the ground soon after sunrise, even if he had to walk a distance of fifteen miles. He was considered "rich" if he possessed twenty-five cents with which to buy refreshments; occasionally one of them "had n't a red penny." Some carried their dinners in their spacious pockets, but generally their pennies were exchanged for great chunks of old-fashioned gingerbread, new cider, and apple pie, and sometimes a piece of watermelon. The tavern near by dispensed hard drinks to those who indulged in the cup, and also furnished the customary officers' dinner, never complete without a roast-pig and rice-pudding.

The parade ground was carefully reserved for military manœuvres. Trespassers were liable to arrest. Fines and penalties were imposed by court-martial according to the nature of the offense and the rank of the offender. Non-appearance at the general musters and lack of personal equipment were punishable by money fines; disobedience and insubordination by both money fines and penalties. Cooper's & Macomb's, Steuben's, and Hardy's tactics were used.

Until the new code went into effect the militia was composed of two elements,—uniformed and ununiformed, the latter being the "militia" proper,—formed into divisions, brigades, regiments, battalions, and companies. A town, known as a "beat," produced a single company of ununiformed soldiery, which was somewhat derisively dubbed "floodwood," "flood-trash," or driftwood" because of their motley appearance. Besides these there were an indefinite number of "independent" uniformed companies, but each brigade was obliged to have at least one artillery and one cavalry company and every battalion one company of grenadiers, light infantry, or riflemen,—all in uniforms which varied in color, material, etc, according to the prevailing fancy and wealth of the organization. These independent companies were composed of volunteers, principally from the ranks of the militia, and furnished at their own expense their uniforms, accoutrements, horses (cavalry), etc.

The first tangible evidence of a movement in Cattaraugus county to form her pioneer settlers into armed and drilled soldiery, under the statutes, was in the summer of 1818, when the 173d Regiment was regularly organized, and the first militia officer to subscribe to the constitutional oath was Isaac Lawton, ensign, on June 19th. Just how much territory this regiment covered can not be ascertained, but in all probability it comprised at least the eastern half and perhaps the whole of the county of Cattaraugus.

The 198th Regiment, 25th Division, was evidently organized in 1821, and during that summer this and the 173d had each an active existence here, the former taking in the west half and the latter the east half of the county. In 1822, however, it would appear from the registry book in the county clerk's office that the 173d Regiment was either disbanded or its numerical designation changed. From that year until 1840 it is impossible to obtain much documentary data of the State militia in this county. Under the amended constitution of 1822 military officers were not compelled to subscribe to the constitutional oath as they had theretofore. In 1840 the law was re-enacted, but the militia had fallen into such disrepute as a body of armed resistance that few names appear upon the book.

Following is a list of the officers of the 173d, the 12th, and the 198th Militia Regiments, from 1818 to 1822, with the dates of the subscription to the oath as they appear in the previously mentioned book kept in the county clerk's office:

Captains: Dr. Phineas F. Noble, June 10, 1821; Enoch Close, Jr., June 30, 1821; Bela H. Redfield, July 5, 1821; Simon Waterman, July 6, 1821; John T. King, Aug. 20, 1821; John Fairbank, Aug. 31, 1821; William Blasdel, April 23, 1820.

Lieutenants: Heman Waterman, June 9, 1821; John Frary, Jr., June 13, 1821; William Blasdel, June 16, 1821; Ebenezer Edwards (?), July 18, 1821; Abner W. Wise, Aug. 31, 1821; Gulsion Morgan, Sept. 1, 1821.

Ensigns: Harvey Parmelee, June 13, 1821; Edwin Farnsworth, July 6, 1821; Rowland Thurston, July 18, 1821; Peter Cook, July 6, 1822.

Paymaster: Simeon Seward, June 30, 1821. Quartermaster: Robert P. McGlashan, Aug. 1, 1821.

The first general muster of the 198th took place at Fish hill, two miles west of Ellicottville, in Mansfield, near Nathaniel Fish's tavern, where the annual reviews were held until 1827, when James McGlashan was promoted colonel in place of Benjamin Waterman, resigned, and the militia trained that year at Rutledge, Colonel McGlashan's home, but in 1828 drilled again on its old grounds. The 198th was then divided and a regiment formed in the territory comprising what is now the towns of New Albion, Napoli, Cold Spring, Elko, South Valley, Randolph, Conewango, and Leon, with James McGlashan colonel, and for many years the general trainings occurred at Rutledge. Colonel McGlashan was made brigadier-general of the 54th Brigade, 26th Division, about 1830 and at his death, about 1840, was a major-general. His brother Charles succeeded him as colonel; subsequently Solomon G. Wright, Ebenezer Seely, — Williams, Lyman Town, George Shannon, and perhaps one or two others, it is said, held the position. Colonel Shannon is now living in Napoli.

In the year 1830 Cattaraugus county was included in the new or re-organized militia district comprising the 54th Brigade, 26th Division, which also took in China, Java, and Wethersfield in Wyoming county and Collins and Concord in Erie county. The brigade was composed of seven regiments, whose annual rendezvous were as follows: (1) The 198th at Gowanda, Col. Jehiel Hill; (2) at Rutledge; (3) at Ellicottville, Col. Daniel I. Huntley; (4) at Olean or Hinsdale, Colonel Layton (?); (5) at Franklinville; (6) at Yorkshire, Colonel Pingrey (?); and (7) at Springville, Colonel Cook. James McGlashan was brigadier-general; his brother Peter was inspector and the only paid officer in the organization. Peter McGlashan received $5 per day and his salary aggregated about $75 annually. Col. Jehiel Hill, of Zoar, upon General McGlashan's promotion to the position of major-general in 1838, was made brigadier-general, and in 1840 became major-general, being succeeded as brigadier-general by Col. Daniel I. Huntley. General Hill's staff consisted of Byron Cochran, of Springville, and Thomas J. Parker, of Gowanda, aids; Dr. Levi Goldsborough, surgeon; and John P. Darling, of New Albion, and Enos Austin, of Otto. Thomas J. Parker enlisted September 12, 1833, in a uniformed company of riflemen, under Howel W. Parker, captain, attached to the 198th Regiment. Colonel Hill's successors in command of the 198th were Col. Sylvenus Cook, Col. Joseph H. Plumb, Col. George S. Hickox, and Col. Titus Roberts. Among the independent uniformed companies attached to this regiment were the East Otto Rifles, Captains Charles F. Mallory, William Bonesteel, Hammond, Eli D. Cox, and Hugh Orr; the Otto Riflemen; and the Collins Rifle Company. Capt. Jasper Waterman also had a company of artillery and Capt. Amasa L. Chaffee a company of riflemen.

It would seem that a general re-organization of militia districts was made about 1830, particularly in Cattaraugus county. Apparently there were six, viz.:

Rutledge District.—All the towns south of the north boundary lines of Leon and New Albion, as previously mentioned.

Gowanda or Zoar District.—Perrysburg, Dayton, Persia, Otto, and East Otto, and Collins and Concord in Erie county.

Olean District.—Ischua, Hinsdale, Portville, Olean, and Allegany.

Ellicottville District.—Ellicottville, Great Valley, Humphrey, Carrolton, Red House, Salamanca, Little Valley, and Mansfield.

Franklinville District.—Franklinville, Lyndon, Farmersville, and Machias.

Yorkshire District.—Ashford, Yorkshire, and Freedom.

Springville District.—Attached to the 54th Brigade. Some of the towns in Wyoming county.

Prior to this re-organization the eastern half of the county was embraced within the 226th Regimental District of New York State Militia, the general trainings being held at Franklinville as early as 1822, with Joseph McClure colonel. Emory Wood was lieutenant-colonel and Solomon Curtis, major. Wood succeeded Colonel McClure about 1825. The opposition element manifested itself strongly and arrogantly. Julius C. Underwood placed himself at the head of what was facetiously dubbed a "barefoot" company of "oppositionists" and industriously ridiculed and mocked the militia and defied the courts-martial.

In the new Olean district general musters were held first at Hinsdale and then at Olean, and at first were in command of Col. Frederick L. Martin, whose successor was Colonel Gross. It was under the latter that the last review in the district took place, in 1846, in Olean. The spectators became so bold in mocking and deriding the militia, especially the ununiformed companies, and in guying Colonel Gross, who had made himself somewhat unpopular, that a clash occurred and the review broke up into a small sized mob.

Among the uniformed companies attached to the regiment in the Olean district were the Hinsdale Rifles of about 100 men, organized in 1833, under Capt. Neri Wilson, whose successors were Captains Daniel Hickox and Abraham Miller, the latter holding the position from 1837 to 1845, when it disbanded; the Five Mile Rifles from the town of Allegany, organized in 1834 or 1835, under Captain Clark and commanded subsequently by Captain Kenyon; and an artillery company organized and commanded by Captain Gross, but disbanded upon his promotion to colonel. William G. Todd, of Hinsdale, was also a local militia captain. George P. Bascom, of Allegany, was at one time lieutenant-colonel.

Of the Ellicottville and Yorkshire districts nothing definite can be given. In the former Daniel I. Huntley was an early and a prominent officer, and finally became brigadier-general.

The Franklinville district is almost equally destitute of reliable data. Marvin Older, a local captain, still living, states that the last general muster was held there about 1837. Solomon Curtis, Jr., was colonel and Pardon T.

Jewell was lieutenant-colonel. As near as can be ascertained the district had two independent companies commanded respectively by Captains Jerome B. Jewell and Marvin Older.

Perhaps some further light may be thrown upon the early militia organizations in Cattaraugus counties by the appended list of officers who, according to law, subscribed to the constitutional oath at the county clerk's office between 1840 and 1845. At any rate it shows the existence (probably in the Ellicottville district) of a regiment designated the 238th, officered during that period as follows:

The 238th Regiment Infantry.—Colonels: W. W. Willoughby, May 26, 1843; Geo. W. Moore, June 24, '44. Lieutenant-colonels: Alonzo A. Gregory, August 26, 1841; George W. Moore, May 24, 1843; William Cross, July 3, 1844.

Captains: Nathan Crosby, May 26, 1840; George W. Moore, July 28, 1840; O. F. Willoughby, April 30, 1841; Edwin O. Locke, August 26, 1841; William Cross, August 26, 1841; James L. Smith, August 24, 1842; Archibald S. Clarke, August 20, 1843; Luke B. Lattin, September 11, 1844.

Lieutenants: Dwight Covell, August 4, 1840; Lester Granger, September 16, 1840; H. Hale Cray, April 17, 1841; T. Mattocks, August 26, 1841; W. E. Fellows, August 26, 1841; Chauncey Butterfield, August 24, 1842; Draper Jackson, August 24, 1842; W. H. Niles, July 25, 1845.

Ensigns: Seth Wheeler, May 26, 1840; Edward Low, July 28, 1840; Dexter G. Williams (artillery), June 12, 1841; Homer Chase, August 24, 1842; Stephen Smith, August 24, 1842; Archibald C. Cray, October 18, 1843.

From the same source is obtained the following names of the 54th Brigade officers with their respective dates of muster: •Brigadier-general, Daniel I. Huntley, July 16, 1840; aid-de-camp, Addison G. Rice, September 27, 1843. Brigade inspector, Solomon Cummings, August 24, 1844. Adjutants, Nelson P. Willson, August 27, 1841, and P. R. Skinner, June 27, 1844. Paymaster, N. Searle, July 13, 1844. Major, M. L. Brewster, June 24, 1844. Quartermaster, J. H. Mudgett, August 24, 1842.

According to the report of Adjutant-General Levi Hubbell in 1835 there were in the State 39 divisions, 80 brigades, 361 regiments, 2,687 companies, and a total of 192,083 persons enrolled for military duty. Of these, Cattaraugus county had a total rank and file of 2,423; in 1845 the census gives 2,650.

Like many another compulsory duty to which man is forced by law to bow the annual muster finally became an onerous burden. The peaceful condition of the country diverted men's minds into channels of industry, and these mimic preparations for national defense appeared unnecessary if not ridiculous. The "spirit of '76" had bowed in obedience to peace and prosperity. The almost utter uselessness of these crude military organizations on a real battlefield caused considerable discussion. From bodies of proud soldiers they deteriorated to scarcely more than crowds of ungovernable humanity. Their fall into disrepute was gradual; their decline and ultimate demise was rapid and final. From the close of the Revolutionary war to 1830 or '35 the old militia system fulfilled its purpose with comparative dignity and generally commanded universal respect. With the beginning of that decade appeared the first signs of a feeling of popular revolt, which steadily intensified until it developed into open defiance. Between 1837 and 1846 the various regimental districts and organizations were not disbanded, but one by one abandoned. The latter year saw the last general training in this county under the old compulsory law.

Various acts were promulgated from time to time, but in vain. In 1846 the laws empowering civil officers to arrest and imprison military delinquents were repealed. In 1849 all former acts were annulled and a new one enacted authorizing a commutation of seventy-five cents in lieu of active service, and some of the commissioned officers were entitled to pay out of the fund thus created. Notwithstanding the several concessions and the numerous inducements thus granted by the Legislature the old State militia in Cattaraugus county could not be revived. Its manoeuvres and evolutions, its days of festivity and drill, its popularity, decline, and fall—all are storied in remembrance and tradition.

In closing a history of the old militia it is pertinent to add a brief sketch of that bloodless victory—the Dutch Hill war: the first and last agrarian collision occurring within the limits of Cattaraugus county. To intelligently recount the incidents of the memorable Sabbath of January 26, 1845, and of the few days just before and after, it is necessary to revert briefly to a previous chapter, for on that hang the links in the chain of connecting events.

The extreme liberal treatment accorded the early settlers by the Holland Land Company produced improvidence and carelessness in those who, under more exacting creditors, would have been compelled to become thrifty and independent. The Devereux Land Company, successor to the Holland Company, was almost equally as lenient and thus unwittingly fanned the embers of agrarianism, which flamed into manifest disaffection in a few of the eastern towns of the county in the period immediately preceding and including the year 1844. Hinsdale seemed to be foremost in the open manifestation of this unreasoning agrarian spirit, and the historic eminence between that town and Ischua, known as Dutch hill, shortly became the theater of a disturbance which took its name from the locality.

Jacob and George Learn, brothers, settled on Dutch hill in 1823, upon a tract of over three hundred acres of land, which they had bought of the Holland Land Company for $2 per acre, and for which they took a single contract. They paid a nominal sum down and obtained credit for the balance for ten years, but in this agreement they defaulted, and July 29, 1837, secured from the Devereux Land Company (the new owners) two new contracts, running six years, for which they paid $50 each. A few years later the lands of the Devereux Company were divided among the several proprietors, and the contract of Jacob Learn fell to Gould Hoyt and that of George Learn to Russell H. Nevins. Shortly after the expiration of the contracts the brothers were called upon by the agents of Hoyt and Nevins and asked for a settlement, or at least partial payments on their lands, but were "met by pretended doubts of the company's title, refusal to pay, and open defiance." In the hope that the Learns would reconsider their decision and fulfill their agreements the proprietors refrained from further action until March, 1844, when they reluctantly commenced suits of ejectment.

The writs were placed in the hands of Sheriff George W. White for execution and on June 12th he proceeded to Dutch hill to serve them. He was directed, however, to give the Learns the privilege of coming to the land office and enter into new contracts, but this alternative he found unavailing and immediately begun the fulfillment of his duty. The Cattaraugus Republican of that time says: "The sheriff, who had only six or seven unarmed persons as assistants in removing the furniture from the house, was surrounded by a mob, numbering from 100 to 150 men, many of them armed and disguised as Indians. The rioters commanded the sheriff to leave the premises, but he resolutely persevered in the performance of his duty until his person was violently assaulted and seriously injured. Finding the contest hopeless against such overpowering force he was compelled to leave the premises in the possession of the mob."

This collision caused great excitement, particularly in the eastern part of the county, and a few days afterward a public meeting of the malcontents was held in Hinsdale, at which the landowners were bitterly denounced, their titles discredited, and resistance to their claims recommended. This was followed by similar gatherings and proceedings in adjoining towns. "Associations were formed for the avowed purpose of resisting the execution of the laws," particularly "in certain cases." Threats were made that in case the officers should arrest and imprison any one caught taking timber from the company's lands the jail and land offices would be destroyed. The feeling prevailed, though seemingly without just cause, that the Holland Land Company and its successors could give no valid title to the lands in that section and was therefore simply robbing the settlers of their hard earnings. Events were rapidly developing, however, which brought the insurgents to their senses.

Soon after the collision between the sheriff and the mob at Dutch hill eleven of the rioters were indicted and bench-warrants issued for their arrest, but their execution was postponed, which ultimately created a suspicion of timidity on the part of the authorities and a feeling of boldness and defiance on the part of the malcontents. On January 20, 1845, Sheriff White and First Judge Benjamin Chamberlain went to Hinsdale and endeavored to persuade the indicted persons to submit quietly to arrest, but they refused, and the sheriff commanded them to follow him to the village, where the judge was prepared to accept bail. This they also refused to do, and the officers finally returned to Ellicottville. The following Friday night, January 24th, William Gallagher, Henry Smith, and Alexander Chambers were deputed to make the desired arrests, and their work can best be told in a quotation from a newspaper printed at the time:

"The next morning they found the rebels ready on Dutch hill to receive them, but in separate squads, as guards to the several indicted persons. They attacked one squad of eight men, and had a parley, struggle, and fight of about half an hour, when, finding themselves likely to be overpowered, they drew their pistols, scattered the enemy, and secured their prisoners. The 'Indian' alarm signal was soon given, and the arresting party had not proceeded far before they found their road filled with men to oppose their progress and rescue the prisoners; but the speed of their horses and the determination of the party, seconded by their display of arms, broke the ranks of the enemy."

The party returned to Ellicottville about one o'clock Sunday morning with Thomas McWilliams in custody. Meanwhile Sheriff White had been active in preparing for the security of the prisoners and the safety of the village (the county seat). He promptly ordered out the militia from all parts of the county and even called on Colonel Cook, of Springville, Erie county, who responded with a body of over fifty armed men. On Saturday and Sunday a formidable force collected in Ellicottville, "armed and panoplied with the majesty of the law, standing guard to the temple of justice and in its very shadow, and the ermine itself, in the person of Judge Benjamin Chamberlain, was present in the midst of the embattled host." The Republican a few days later said: "Sentinels were stationed on the various roads leading to the village, three pieces of cannon were ranged in front of the court house, and every necessary preparation for the warm reception of the threatening invaders was duly attended to by the sheriff."

By Sunday evening the forces at Ellicottville numbered about eleven hundred men. The situation presented all the appearances of a coming battle. Gen. Daniel I. Huntley was in charge as the commanding officer. Rumors of all kinds were freely circulated, one being that the Allegany Indians had joined the Dutch hill people as allies. All day Sunday, cold and bleak, the expected attack was eagerly watched for, but not even a scout nor a skirmisher made his appearance. Visitors were plentiful. "Many of the insurgents and their sympathizers visited the village for the purpose of observation, to avail themselves of the first opportunity to make demonstrations of hostility." Fortunately a large number of smoked mutton-hams had been stored in Ellicottville awaiting shipment, and these were appropriated for the use of the soldiers. Without them there would have been a famine.

On Sunday evening it was decided to take the aggressive, and an expeditionary corps of some three hundred men was detailed for active service. These were loaded into about fifty sleighs and at 10 P. M. began the transportation to their destination, twenty miles away, where they arrived about daylight on Monday morning. Chambers, Gallagher, and Smith led the column; the sheriff accompanied the main body, behind which came the reserves. Chambers's party, anxious for distinction, pushed ahead, and "arrested three of the men, but while securing his prisoners, one of whom made a hard fight, the sheriff came up with his guard, one of whom fired a gun by accident or design. This alarmed the country, and the rest of the men sought for ran away and could not be found."

Notwithstanding the differing accounts given of the occurrences at Dutch hill it is certain the troops encountered no armed resistance. The premises of the Learns were quietly surrendered to the land agents, who generously permitted the occupants to remain; both Jacob and George Learn signed an agreement to take new contracts from the proprietors within ten days. The return movement was then begun, and after a weary march the victorious corps re-entered Ellicottville. But a new calamity was in store for them. They were tired, cold, and hungry. First of all they wanted something to eat, but to their dismay and disgust it was learned that the last mutton-ham had been devoured by the garrison left in charge of the village. A few hours later the forces were relieved and quietly dispersed to their several homes. On Tuesday all the remaining indicted men surrendered themselves and gave bail for their appearance at the June term of court. Thus ended the Dutch Hill war, one of the most memorable incidents that ever occurred in Cattaraugus county.

The excitement caused by these events had scarcely subsided when bitter recriminations were heard from the fallen forces of the foe. Dutch hill sympathizers accused the authorities of upholding the land agents and compelling tenants to sign contracts at the point of the bayonet. They criticised the necessity of calling out the militia, mainly because of the paltry expense (some $700) it incurred. An effort was made to have the Legislature authorize the

NOTE.—Like other events of some renown the story of the Dutch Hill war was quickly immortalized in poetic verse. The following clever narrative was written by the Hon. George A. S. Crocker, of Onewango, and published in the Cattaraugus Weekly of January 1, 1846:

Lo! in the morn, departed year,
The signs of woe and war appear,
Fair freedom's flag to shield us all
Hangs floating from the court-house wall,
And loud on echoing breezes borne
Comes clarion shrill of bugle horn.
Tall soldiers arm'd with cannon come,
And musket, file, and kettle-drum.
Dan Huntley's bled and brave brigade,
On village green, in arms parade.
Brave Cook leads on the Springville choir,
With steady step and eye of fire;
Ready to wield a battering ram,
Or to devour a mutton-ham;
He seeks for glory's brightest wreath,
Or honor's bed—a soldier's death.
And yonder comes a noble wight—
New Albion's gallant Colonel Wright.
His visage, pale, no dangers swerve,
His sword is grasped with iron nerve;
His plumes pend gaily to the breeze;
He calmly looks on scenes like these.
Undaunted he; his veteran skill
Has faced the fires of Bunker Hill! •
The Persian troops young Hickox leads;
His bosom friend by martial deeds.
The soldier's glorious wrath he'll win
If war and carnage once begin.

But why, ah! why, this fierce array?
Why float aloft war's pennons gay?
The sheriff has a writ to serve
On one George Learn—a man of nerve—
Besides, the Indians on Dutch hill
'T is said each nook and corner fill;
And armed with war club and with knife,
They threaten each white man's life;
To steep our streets with human blood,

And burn the house of man and God.
O wonder not that threats like these
Made White's warm blood to icebergs freeze.

Ben Chamberlain, the daring soul,
Before whose vision specters roll
Of slaughtered hosts and burning flame,
To White's relief that instant came.
His "honest face," so deeply red,
Had lost its crimson hue 't is said;
Others maintain 't was but the light
Reflected from the face of "White."
Ben's order called these braves
To save the town and find their graves.
Alas! why was it ever said
The soldier's grave was honor's bed!
To me, this seems a butcher's trade—
Their brightest glory but a shade.

Rest, soldier, rest! tomorrow's morn
The life and drum and bugle horn,
At early dawn, alarm shall sound,
To call thee on to glory's ground.
The mutton-ham and bread are shared;
The soldiers' bed on floors prepared;
The guards are set at daylight's close;
The wearied troops in sleep repose.
But daring Ben, his bosom fired
With love of glory, last retired.
'T is strange we ne'er before could find
The glories of his mighty mind;
But they burst at once to light;
And here we found thy genius, White.

How strange that slander seeks its food
By railing at the great and good!
And that the mean, ignoble, vile, Escape its lashes all the while!

payment out of the State treasury, but this could not be done. Instead an act was passed empowering the comptroller to loan the necessary sum on the credit of the county. Had there been bloodshed not a dissenting voice would have been raised against Sheriff White and other officers. In some respects the "war" appeared ludicrous and ever since its occurrence it has received unrelenting ridicule. Those now living who participated in its unopposed victory express the belief that the magnitude of the power invoked was greatly disproportionate to the danger which threatened. In the Cattaraugus Republican of April 28, 1845, was published an editorial on the subject which doubtless accurately reflects the better element of public opinion of that period. Part of it reads as follows:

"Sheriff White from the first outbreak acted with judgment and discretion. True, he was unwilling to push headlong into a strife with men who were determined to resist the law without proper time for reflection on their part and sufficient means in his hands to enable him to carry out what he undertook. It is well known, in this community at least, that the course he pursued after the disturbance of last June was at the instance and advice of the circuit judge; all of our leading men, and even the land agents themselves, fell in with the proposition that the matter should be delayed in order that the misguided should have time for reflection and with the hope that the excitement would subside. The ordering out of a strong force was sanctioned and

'T is said, by some, that night in sleep
The judge was waked from slumber deep;
A strange click, click, struck his ear;
Appalled, he deemed an Indian near.
He listened, thought the devil in 't—
The Indian seemed to peck his flint.
He seized the tongs, and struck—the shock
To atoms broke—a wooden clock!
But his great soul herself once more,
He soon snored calmly as before.

Rest, soldiers, rest! on village square
The deep-mouthed cannon planted there,
In rows along, each sulphury mouth
Is planted from the court-house south.
See near a gun bold Travis stand;
He holds a lighted match in hand.
Now towards the captain of the gun
Judge Chamberlain walks boldly on;
(Though here and there a rascal sees
A sort of trembling in his knees)
The judge to Travis gives command:
"Captain, the Dutch Hill Indian band,
With scapling knives, will soon be here;
We fight for all to freemen dear.
From yonder south the rogues must come;
Let not your cannon's mouth be dumb.
If they approach—their errand dire—
As 's First Judge 'I command you Fire!"

"'T is morn: the troops in sleighs are stowed,
To start upon the Dutch hill road.
Bold White the chief command assumes;
No sword he wore or waving plumes,
By which the Indians of Dutch hill
Could tell who was the chief to kill.
Along, the war-worn troops advance;
Pass safe the house of Peter Frantz;
An old log barn next met their view,
That trembling passed in safety, too.
And clearing, next, the road's last turn,
They reach the house of Mister Learn.
High on the breeze their pennon streamed;

Their muskets in the sunlight gleamed.
They formed in front a hollow square,
White safely sunning in centre there.
When, lo! Learn's door is open thrown,
A youthful maiden stands alone!
Of laughing eye and manner bland,
She bore a flag of truce in hand.
She waved her flag: "her sire," she said,
"Was sick and could not leave his bed,
If they would to their homes repair
The old man soon would meet them there."
She turned her eye on Archy Clark,
A dashing, gay, and youthful spark,
And said, "I'd like, my gallant soul,
Your bearskin cap for yonder pole."
The maiden, blushing, bowed, retired,
But Sheriff White did as desired.
Like King of France in days of yore,
Shed not a drop of human gore;
But he and his two thousand men
Marched up Dutch hill and down again.

The war is o'er. No more each morn
Is heard the blast of bugle horn.
Our dwellings safe from sack and fire,
The Lord's to boot—what more desire?
Rejoice in safety; now our wives
And babes may pass their tranquil lives.
To give due praise let us begin,
Let us avoid that damning sin
Of all the sins republics know:
Ingratitude—the worst below.
Lord bless, with slumbers sweet and light,
Judge Chamberlain and Sheriff White.
'T was their wise counsel saved us all
From sack and flame and murderer's pall.
Long in the hollow of the hand
Preserve them, Lord, to bless the land.
And when they die (e'en great men must,
By nature's laws, return to dust)
We'll sacrifice two fattened rams
To deck their graves with mutton-hams!

approved by all reflecting minds, and, as the result has proved, was not without its good. Human life has been preserved and the law enforced. * * * All have acted nobly and manfully, and we rejoice in the assurance afforded by this demonstration of security under protection of law. We have no doubts that process can not now be executed in any portion of the county."

In outlining a sketch of the re-organized militia it must be remembered that for a period of seven years succeeding 1845 only a few feeble attempts were made in Cattaraugus county to revive the worn-out system. About 1852 all strictly compulsory military laws of the State were repealed and a new act promulgated, which authorized the enrollment of all able-bodied white male citizens between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, with the customary exemptions. A commutation fee of fifty cents, however, was provided in lieu of enlistment, which made the duty practically voluntary. None but uniformed companies were mustered, and all arms and equipments were furnished by the State. Annual regimental parades or brigade encampments were required, at which non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates received $1.25 and commissioned officers from $1.25 to $5.00 per day. Cavalrymen and mounted officers also received $1.00 a day for horses, which they furnished. The fund derived from the commutations was applied to these salaries.

When the subject of forcing the commutation fees came before the Board of Supervisors in 1854 that body promptly rejected it. They staunchly refused to carry out the provisions of the law, which plainly set forth their duties and obligations. A suit was finally brought against them in the Supreme Court, and on September 1, 1855, at Lockport, Justice Bowen handed down a decision which convened an extra session of the board and ordered them to levy the collection, which was promptly and satisfactorily done.

The first and only militia organization in Cattaraugus county prior to the Rebellion and under the re-organized system was the 64th Regiment of the 30th Brigade, 8th Division, Col. Thomas J. Parker. Colonel Parker was commissioned December 16, 1852, and recruited and mustered the regiment at Gowanda in August, 1853. The lieutenant-colonel, Daniel G. Bingham, and the major, Enos C. Brooks, were commissioned in July preceding. The adjutant-general's report says that the 64th was composed in 1857 as follows:

Co. A, thirty-eight men, infantry, Capt. Levi W. Strobe, succeeded by Capt. Corydon C. Rugg, who was commissioned September 12, 1857; lieutenants, Marvin F. Crandall and Henry W. Johnson; recruited in Persia.

Co. B, thirty-seven men, infantry, Capt. Timothy A. C. Everett, commissioned November 21, 1856; lieutenants, Henry L. Jones and David F. Wiggins; recruited in Randolph.

Co. C, forty-three men, infantry, Capt. Julius B. Maltbie, commissioned September 10, 1853; lieutenants, Alanson L. Dudley and Jacob Slingerland; recruted in Otto, East Otto, and Mansfield.

Co. D, thirty-five men, Capt. William B. Battin, commissioned September 23, 1857; lieutenants, John N. Semen and F. Phillips.

Co. E, thirty-seven men, infantry, Capt. Joseph L. Savage, commissioned April 22, 1854 (succeeded August 24, 1858, by Capt. Belknap); lieutenants, John K. Comstock and Samuel R. Homer.

Co. K, thirty-seven men, artillery, Capt. Samuel W. Johnson, commissioned February 19, 1855; lieutenants, George W. Baillet, Stephen B. Seward, and Constant S. Trevitt; recruited in Ellicottville.

The 64th Regimental District at its organization comprised Cattaraugus county and the towns of China, Java, and Wethersfield in Wyoming county. The 63d covered the territory of Allegany county and the towns of Eagle, Pike, and Genesee Falls also in Wyoming county. On August 15, 1857, these two districts were consolidated and re-organized, leaving the 64th Regiment composed of the counties of Cattaraugus and Allegany and attaching the towns in Wyoming county to the 61st. The 30th Brigade was composed solely of the 64th Regiment and likewise comprised the counties of Allegany and Cattaraugus. The following Allegany county companies were attached to the 64th upon the consolidation, and in 1861 were composed as follows:

Co. F, fifty-two men, infantry, Capt. James R. Weston, commissioned August 25, 1858; lieutenants, Samuel F. Blood and Samuel S. Stiles.

Co. G, thirty-six men, infantry, Capt. Jared H. Parmelee, commissioned September 4, 1860; lieutenants, Joshua S. Pettinger and Charles G. Andrews.

Co. H, thirty-eight men, infantry, Capt. Daniel D. Gardiner, commissioned November 4, 1858; lieutenant, James S. Green.

Co. L, forty six men, riflemen, Capt. Luke G. Harmon, commissioned August 30, 1860; lieutenants, Robert H. Renwick and John K. McConnell.

Encampments and parades were held as far as can be ascertained at these places: Little Valley, June 4-6, and Gowanda, August 23-25, 1855; Olean, June 16-18, and Ellicottville, September 14-17, 1856; Cuba, September 28-30, 1857; Gowanda, June 22-24, 1858; and Angelica, August 22-27, 1859. Other parades were held at Randolph, Otto, and Allegany. Calvin T. Chamberlain was brigadier-general with rank from July 15, 1851. At the breaking out of the Civil war the regiment had a total of four hundred and forty-seven officers and men. Many of those whose terms of service had expired re-enlisted in the re-organized 64th or volunteered elsewhere. It was not until February 18, 1867, that the 64th Militia Regimental organization was officially disbanded.

All through the great Rebellion the fires of patriotism burned brilliantly in every town in Cattaraugus county. From the startling gun of Sumter to the final surrender of Lee her noble sons went gallantly forward in large numbers to fight the Nation's cause. Bearded sire and zealous youth marched side by side from our woody hills and fertile valleys to the fierce battlefields of the slave-cursed south. Their deeds are deeds of heroism and renown, treasured in memory and in history, storied in poetry and in prose, and recorded in imperishable characters in the archives of freedom. With them went the hearts and hopes of fathers, mothers, sisters, sweethearts, who, left behind to guard homes and property, generously contributed both time and money in providing comforts for the brave soldiers and sailors at the front and in the hospital.

But still another and a sadder tribute remains to be written of those whose memories gently linger as sweet fragrance on the annals of time. I refer to the dead—to many true sons of Cattaraugus whose lives expired on their country's altar. In the terrific battles of the Rebellion, in the awful prison-pens of the south, in the hospitals of the Nation, they suffered and died. They unflinchingly faced the cannon and the bayonet and were mowed down in the fierce carnage of conflict. Some of their remains were returned to their loved ones and rest in peace in the green cemeteries near their homes. Others were buried where they fell and slumber in unmarked graves in the soil dyed with their life's blood. Over all alike waves the stars and stripes in the breezes of a free nation. On Memorial Day of each year their graves are strewn with flowers by loving, living friends, who are touchingly reminded of their heroic valor in patriotic speeches and martial music. All glory to the dead! All honor to the survivors! May generous tribute ever be accorded the country's heroes.

Altogether, Cattaraugus county contributed not far from 3,500 men to the Union armies, who served in no less than one hundred and eighty different organizations. This may seem incredible, but it is a fact nevertheless. Besides these, nearly one hundred men were in the navy, several of whom were on board the Kearsarge, which sunk the privateer Alabama, and all of whom served with credit to themselves and to the county.

THE 37TH N. Y. VOL. INF.—The 37th Regiment was organized in New York city in May, 1861, to serve for two years; colonel, John H. McCunn, resigned September 25, 1861, and succeeded on September 28th by Samuel B. Hayman, who was mustered out with the regiment June 22, 1863. It contained two Cattaraugus companies, viz.: Co. H, "Chamberlain Guards," Capt. Luke G. Harmon, and Co. I, "Cattaraugus Guards," Capt. William T. Clarke. Both of these companies were largely composed of former members of the 64th N. Y. Militia, and were recruited simultaneously at Ellicottville and Allegany. They left for Elmira May 20th and on the 25th were transported to New York city, where they were mustered into the United States service with the 37th Regiment for two years on June 7, 1861. On the 23d the regiment was moved to Washington, where it went into camp. Soon afterward the two Cattaraugus county companies were detailed for special service, and April 15, 1862, rejoined their regiment. The 37th participated in the engagements of Bull Run, Bailey's Cross Roads, Peninsula Campaign, Williamsburg, Seven Pines (or Fair Oaks), Charles City Cross Roads, Seven Days' Fight, White Oak Swamp, Malvern Hill, Second Bull Run, Chantilly, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and second Fredericksburg. It was mustered out at New York city by reason of expiration of term of service June 22, 1863. Veterans re-listed in the 40th N. Y. Inf. The two Cattaraugus county companies returned home. The 37th lost in killed and died from wounds and disease a total of 112 men.

THE 64TH N. Y. VOL. INF.—This regiment was organized as the 64th New York State Militia in 1853 and re-organized as a volunteer command at Elmira in the autumn of 1861. At the breaking out of the Rebellion it was composed as follows: Colonel, Thomas J. Parker, Gowanda; lieutenant-colonel, Daniel G. Bingham, Ellicottville; major, Enos C. Brooks, Olean; Co. A, twenty-eight men, Capt. Corydon C. Rugg; Co. B, forty men, Capt. T. A. C. Everett; Co. C, forty-two men, Capt. Julius B. Maltbie; Co. D, forty-four men, Capt. William B. Battin; Co. E, forty men, Capt. John S. Belknap; Co. F, fifty-two men, Capt. James R. Weston; Co. G, thirty-six men, Capt. Jared A. Parmelee;

Co. H, thirty-eight men, Capt. Daniel D. Gardiner; Co. K, fifty men (artillery), Capt. Samuel W. Johnson; Co. L, forty-six men (rifles), Capt. Luke G. Harmon; band staff, etc., twenty-eight men; total of regiment, 447 men.

Companies F, G, H, and L were Allegany county commands. In the reorganized 64th Regiment Cattaraugus county was represented by six companies, viz.: Co. A, Capt. Rufus Washburne, eighty-two officers and men; Co. B, Capt. Timothy A. C. Everett, eighty-three; Co. C, Capt. Julius B. Maltbie, eighty-four; Co. F, Capt. William B. Battin, eighty-three; Co. I, Capt. Robert H. Renwick, eighty-two; and Co. K, Capt. William Fancher, eighty-three. The other companies were Co. D, Capt. Phipps Lake, and Co. G, Capt. Joshua S. Pettinger, eighty-three men each, from Allegany county; Co. H, Capt. Samuel Barstow, seventy-five men, from Tioga county; and Co. E, Capt. William Glenny, eighty-four men, from Tompkins county. The regiment contained a total of 848 men. It was mustered into service from September 7 to December 10, 1861, for three years, with the same field officers as previously given, and arrived in Washington on December 11, 1861, going into camp near the capitol. It was one of the fighting regiments of the war. "It commenced active service in Virginia, January 2, 1862, performing picket duty, with an occasional reconnaissance, until April 5th, when it sailed for the Peninsula with General McClellan's army. It served there in Richardson's Division—afterwards Hancock's—remaining in that division (1st Division A. C.) until the end of the war. The 64th, under Colonel Bingham, distinguished itself at Chancellorsville, where, in company with four other regiments, it held successfully an advanced skirmish line against the persistent attack of a large force of the enemy." * The colonels in command of the 64th, with the date of rank, were Thomas J. Parker, November 13, 1861; Daniel G. Bingham, July 12, 1862; Leman W. Bradley, July 4, 1864; William Glenny, October 4, 1864.

The regiment participated in the following engagements, the figures after each indicating the number (1) killed and (2) wounded and missing: Fair Oaks, 30, 143; Seven Days' Fight, 2, 36; Antietam, 8, 42; Fredericksburg, 4, 68; Chancellorsville, 15, 29; Gettysburg, 15, 83; Auburn, Va., 5, 12; Bristoe Station, Va., 1, 24; Mine Run, 1, 2; Wilderness, 0, 8; Po River, 2, 14; Spotsylvania, 10, 49; North Anna, 0, 2; Tolopotomoy, 0, 2; Cold Harbor, 2, 10; siege of Petersburg, 7, 28; Weldon Railroad, 0, 30; Deep Bottom, 1, 3; Ream's Station, 0, 12; Hatcher's Run, 4, 13; White Oak Road, 3, 14; Sutherland Station, 2, 5; Farmville, 5, 11. The 64th was present also at Yorktown, Gaines's Mill, Snicker's Cap, Savage Station, Peach Orchard, White Oak Swamp, Glendale, Malvern Hill, Second Bull Run, Strawberry Plains, Sailor's Creek, and Appomattox. The total loss in killed, wounded, captured, and missing aggregated 757 men, of whom 18 officers and 274 volunteers died on the field of battle, of disease and accidents, or in Confederate prisons. The original members were mustered out at the expiration of their term of service, and veterans and recruits continued the regimental organization until the close of the war, being themselves mustered out July 14, 1865.

THE 154TH N. Y. VOL. INF.—This was almost distinctively a Cattaraugus county organization. It was recruited in 1862 and mustered into the United States service at Jamestown, for three years, September 24–26, 1862, with the following field, staff, and company officers: Colonel, Patrick H. Jones; lieutenant-colonel, Henry C. Loomis; major, Samuel G. Love; surgeon, Henry Van Aernam; chaplain, Henry D. Lowring; adjutant, Samuel C. Noyes, Jr.; quartermaster, Edward Porter; Co. A, Capt. B. Leonard Saxton; Co. B, Capt. Daniel B. Allen; Co. C, Capt. Lewis D. Warner; Co. D, Capt. Harrison Cheney; Co. E, Capt. Joseph B. Fay; Co. F, Capt. Thomas Donnelly; Co. G, Capt. M. B. Cheney; Co. H, Capt. John F. Nelson; Co. I, Capt. Edward S. Mills; Co. K, Capt. Henry Hugaboom. Co. E was recruited, wholly in Chautauqua county, as was also a portion of Co. F. The remainder were composed entirely of Cattaraugus county men.

Col. Addison G. Rice had command, however, during its organization and until the regiment reached the front, when Col. Patrick H. Jones relieved him. Colonel Jones had been major in the 37th and received his commission October 8, 1862. The 154th left Jamestown on September 28, 1862, received their arms and equipments at Elmira, and reached Washington on the 1st of October. The regiment was immediately assigned to the First Brigade, Second Division, Eleventh Army Corps, under General Sigel, and participated in the following battles and skirmishes: Haymarket, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Wauhatchie, Lookout Valley, Missionary Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Rocky Face Ridge or Resaca, New Hope Church, Pine Knob, Peach Tree Creek, capture of Atlanta, and Sherman's march to the sea. The 154th Regiment was mustered out of service June 11, 1865, at Bladensburg, and reached home the latter part of the month. The greatest loss the 154th sustained in a single battle was at Rocky Face Ridge, May 8, 1864, when fourteen were killed and forty-two wounded. The total number of deaths on the battlefield, in prison, and of disease was 278, of which ninety occurred in Confederate prisons.

THE 44TH N. Y. VOL. INF. ("THE PEOPLE'S ELLSWORTH REGIMENT").—This command was organized at Albany and mustered into the service of the United States on September 24, 1861, for three years or during the war. It was named in honor of Col. Elmer E. Ellsworth, one of the first heroes to fall in the war of the Rebellion. It was composed of volunteers from nearly every town and ward in the State, and contained a superior class of young men, all being under thirty years of age. The regiment left Albany on October 21st by boat, and from New York proceeded by rail, reaching Washington on the 22th. The principal engagements in which it participated were Yorktown, Hanover Court House, Gaines's Mill, White Oak Swamp, Malvern Hill, Second Bull Run, Antietam, Shepherdstown Ford, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Aldie, Gettysburg, Jones's Cross Roads, Rappahannock Station, Mine Run, Wilderness, Laurel Hill, Spotsylvania, North Anna, Bethesda Church, Cold Harbor, Weldon Railroad, and Petersburg. Its colonels were Stephen W. Stryker, September 24, 1861, resigned July 4, 1862; James C. Rice, July 4, 1862, promoted brigadier-general August 17, 1863; Freeman Conner, August 27, 1863 (not mustered as colonel). The 44th was mustered out of service October 11, 1864. The veterans and recruits were transferred to the 140th and 146th N. Y. Vols. The regiment went into service with (rank and file) 1,061 men. It received 304 recruits, had 182 killed, lost 101 by disease, lost 603 by wounds, and had 141 promoted from its ranks.

THE 85TH N. Y. VOL. INF.—The 85th Regiment, like the 37th, contained two Cattaraugus companies, the others being from Allegany and Ontario counties. It was organized at Elmira and mustered into the service December 3-13, 1861, with Col. Uriah Davis, Lieut.-Col. Jonathan S. Belknap, and Maj. J. A. Williams. It participated in the battles of Fair Oaks, Savage Station, Franklin (Va.), Kingston, Whitehall, and Goldsboro. Its total loss aggregated three hundred and sixty-one men, of whom thirty-five were killed and died of wounds and two hundred and twenty-two met death in Confederate prisons, the regiment having been captured at Plymouth, N. C., April 20, 1864. The original members, not veterans, were mustered out at the expiration of their three years' term of service, and the veterans and recruits themselves mustered out July 27, 1865.

THE 105TH N. Y. VOL. INF.—The 105th Regiment contained parts of two companies (C and D) from Cattaraugus county, and was mustered into the service of the United States for three years in March, 1862, at Le Roy, Lyons, and Rochester. It was mustered out at the close of the war.

THE 9TH N. Y. CAVALRY.—This regiment was organized at Albany and mustered into the service of the United States from September 9 to November 19, 1861, for three years, under field officers: Colonel, John Beardsley; lieutenant-colonel, William B. Hyde; and majors, William Sackett, Charles McL. Knox, and George S. Nichols. It contained two companies from Cattaraugus county—under Capt. Benjamin F. Chamberlain and Capt. Emery A. Anderson (afterward major). The regiment left for Washington on November 26th and is credited with participating in the following engagements: Cedar Mountain, Brandy Station (where it lost four killed and twenty-five wounded and missing), Aldie, Upperville, Gainesville, Second Bull Run, Chantilly, Antietam, Gettysburg, Kelly's Ford, Rappahannock Station, Sulphur Springs, Opequon, Trevilian Station (where four were killed and forty-six wounded and missing), the Wilderness, Cold Harbor, Mechanicsville, Deep Bottom, Winchester, Fisher's Hill, Germantown, Haymarket, Berryville, Middleburg, Spotted Tavern, Goose Creek, Boonesboro, Funkstown, Falling Waters, Stevensburg, Culpepper, Bealton, Cedar Creek, Petersburg, and Richmond. The total deaths numbered two hundred and twenty-three, of whom ninety were killed and died of wounds. On the expiration of their term of service the original members, not veterans, were mustered out. The 4th N. Y. Cavalry was transferred to the 9th as Companies B, E, and L, and the whole, veterans and recruits, mustered out of service July 17, 1865.

THE 5TH N. Y. CAVALRY ("FIRST IRA HARRIS GUARD").—This organization was mustered into the United States service for three years in New York city from August 15 to October 31, 1861. It contained two Cattaraugus companies, the others being recruited from New York, Kings, Allegany, Wyoming, Tioga, Essex, and Greene counties. It was in the engagements of Big Bethel, Yorktown, Hanover Court House, Mechanicsville, Gaines's Mill, Peach Orchard, Savage Station, White Oak Swamp, Glendale, Malvern Hill, Gainesville, Second Bull Run, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and the Wilderness. The total death losses of the regiment numbered three hundred and twenty-six, of whom ninety-nine died in southern prisons.

THE 15TH N. Y. CAVALRY.—This regiment was organized for three years, at Syracuse, and was composed of companies raised in the counties of Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Erie, Genesee, Oneida, Onondaga, Ontario, Orange, and Tompkins. It was mustered into service August 8, 1863, to January 14, 1864, and on June 17, 1865, consolidated with the 6th N. Y. Cavalry under the designation 2d N. Y. Provisional Cavalry. It lost altogether one hundred and sixty-eight men.

THE 13TH N. Y. HEAVY ARTILLERY.—This was organized at New York and contained a number of recruits from this county. It was mustered in October 15, 1861, for three years. Original members, not veterans, mustered out at expiration of service, and veterans and recruits retained until July 28, 1865. It participated in the battles of Cross Keys, Waterloo Bridge, Second Bull Run, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Mission Ridge, Chattanooga, Atlanta, and Cedar Creek. The regiment lost in killed, disease, and prison one hundred and twenty-nine men.

THE 14TH N. Y. HEAVY ARTILLERY.—The 14th H. A. was formed at Rochester and mustered into the service of the United States from August 29 to December 17, 1863, for three years. The companies of which it was composed were raised in the counties of Cattaraugus, Jefferson, Lewis, Livingston, Monroe, Oneida, St. Lawrence, and Steuben. It was engaged in the battles of Spotsylvania, Petersburg, Weldon Railroad, Poplar Spring Church, Cold Harbor, and Hatcher's Run. The regiment was mustered out of service August 26, 1865. Its total loss was nine men.

In a work of this character—confined strictly as it is to a history of Cattaraugus county—it is impossible in the limited space to present a detailed narrative of each organization or of individuals. The prompt and patriotic action of our people in the various wars, the veterans we have been proud to claim as citizens from time to time, and the energetic part the inhabitants of the county have always taken in complying with the military requirements of the State and Nation have been fairly well outlined. For various reasons it has been deemed advisable to limit the sketches of the several Cattaraugus county regiments in the Rebellion to brief facts. In the roster comprising the following chapter appears a more detailed account of the soldiers and sailors who served from this county in that sanguinary struggle.

Nearly a score of years and ten have glided by since the closing days of that fierce conflict. Age is steadily creeping upon the surviving veterans, who one by one are rapidly joining their comrades on the other shore. Ever since the close of the Rebellion it has been customary for the soldiers and sailors to hold occasional or periodical reunions, and those occurring in this county have been well attended and profitable. From time to time grand army posts have been organized in the various villages, but a number have gone down in recent years mainly because of the death-depleted ranks of their members. The posts existing at the present day are noticed in their respective towns.

Cattaraugus county has sent ten cadets in all to the United States Military Academy at West Point, the first one entering in 1836. Of this number four have graduated. Allegany county has given seven and Chautauqua nine. The cadets entering from this county, with the dates of their admission, are as follows: Oscar F. Winship, Persia, 1836; Staley N. Clarke, Jr., Ellicottville, 1846; Alexander Chambers, Ellicottville, 1849; Henry Martin, Olean, 1853; Luke G. Harmon, Ellicottville, 1854; William S. Stanton, Randolph, 1861; Hiram M. Chittenden, Yorkshire, 1880; Wm. S. Card, East Randolph, 1884; Norman S. Thrasher, Dayton, 1889; Edward P. O'Hern, Olean, 1890.

The 43d Separate Company, N. G. S. N. Y., Olean, is the only military organization in the county at the present time. It was recruited and mustered into the service of the State of New York at Olean on March 17, 1887, by Adjutant-General Josiah Porter and Assistant Inspector-General Thomas H. McGrath, with fifty-two enlisted men and four officers, the latter being Capt. C. G. Thyng, First Lieut. H. F. Lee, Second Lieut. W. H. Corringer, and Assistant Surgeon Selden J. Mudge (ranking as first lieutenant). Lieutenants Lee and Corringer have since resigned and R. M. Whitney and R. H. Franchot were elected to their respective places. The present strength of the company is ninety-three. The company has quarters in the State armory, which was completed in 1890 and occupied in January, 1891. For the construction of the armory an appropriation of $25,000 was received from the State and $8,700 from the county, the latter being appropriated for the site, which, when purchased, included a neatly constructed brick building. This was fitted up as the administration department and a spacious drill room subsequently attached. The total amount received from appropriations, active and honorary members, and subscriptions, and expended on the premises, aggregates $46,700.

CHAPTER XVII.

BENCH AND BAR OF CATTARAUGUS COUNTY.

[By CHARLES Z. LINCOLN, Esq.]

CIVILIZATION has not yet accomplished the achievement of lifting mankind to a plane of intelligence and morals where the aid of the Bench and Bar is no longer necessary in protecting the citizen in the enjoyment of his rights and privileges under our complicated social system. "Man," says Aristotle, "is a social being"; and the Scriptures declare that "God setteth the solitary in families." Some form of organized society is a necessary condition of mankind, but this social arrangement demands the surrender of certain rights which a person might enjoy alone, and imposes new duties and responsibilities in his relations with his fellows. The proper adjustment of these relations, with the aim of producing the greatest good to the greatest number, is the great work of the philosopher, the statesman, and the patriot. Life has been defined to be the sum of the forces which resist death. We may paraphrase this definition and define civilization as the sum of the forces which resist barbarism. Withdraw or cut off the resisting forces in the human mechanism and death ensues. So nations relapse into barbarism when the benign influences of a resisting and progressive culture are turned aside or destroyed.

Society is not maintained without an effort. "The bond which holds it together would be weak indeed, and forever in jeopardy, if a protective power were not established superior to individual wills, to keep them within bounds, and defend the persons and the rights of each against the attacks of violence."

"As soon as a people emerge from barbarism a body of men who make it their business to expound the law, and assist those who may need assistance in legal matters, is always observed to make its appearance as one of the requisites of civilization and legal order, and the State confers upon its members special and peculiar privileges, and at the same time places them under regulations more or less strict for the protection of the public and of those who may place their interests in their care."*

The proper administration of justice has been an indispensable factor in the development of civilization; and this has been due to the intelligence and patriotism of the legal profession. Every civilized nation has felt this influence. De Tocqueville remarks that "the members of the legal profession have taken a part in all the movements of political society in Europe for the last five hundred years," and he observes that the authority which the American people have intrusted to this profession, and the influence which they exercise in the government, is the most powerful existing security against the excesses of democracy. "Men who have made a special study of the laws derive from this occupation certain habits of order, a taste for formalities, and a kind of instinctive regard for the regular connection of ideas, which naturally render them very hostile to the revolutionary spirit and the unreflecting passions of the multitude." "Lawyers are attached to public order beyond every other consideration, and the best security of public order is authority. The courts of justice are the visible organs by which the profession is enabled to make itself felt in its love of order and stability. The judge is a lawyer who, independently of the taste for regularity and order which he has contracted in the study of law, derives an additional love of stability from the inalienability of his own functions." "The lawyers of the United States form a party which is little feared and scarcely perceived; which has no badge peculiar to itself; which adapts itself with great flexibility to the exigencies of the time and accommodates itself without resistance to all the movements of the social body."

The celebrated French philosopher and statesman, from whose great work, "Democracy in America," I have quoted somewhat freely, visited this country in 1831 and remained two years examining our institutions with a critical but not unfriendly eye. Later, another acute observer, Prof. James Bryce, of England, visited this country and made a careful study of American institutions and gave expression to his views in "The American Commonwealth," published in 1888. Upon the subject now under consideration he says: "As the respect of the judges for the bar tends to keep the judges in the straight path, so the respect and regard of the bar for the bench, a regard founded on the sense of professional brotherhood, insures the moral influence of the court in the country. The bar has usually been very powerful in America, not only as being the only class of educated men who are at once men of affairs and skilled speakers, but also because there has been no nobility nor territorial aristocracy to overshadow it. Politics have been largely in its hands, and must remain so as long as political questions continue to be involved in the interpretation of constitutions. For the first sixty or seventy years of the Republic the leading statesmen were lawyers, and the lawyers as a whole moulded and led the public opinion of the country."

The legal profession has always and necessarily been a learned profession. The laws of any civilized community are sufficiently complicated to require special study. Besides, every aspect and interest of our social system receives, at some time, the attention of the bar. Public, political, and economic questions, as well as those relating to the more private rights of the individual, are presented to the lawyer for solution. All learning is laid under tribute to assist in their elucidation. The limits of civilization are only measured by man's wants and his ability to accomplish his desires. The constant struggle for advancement requires a constant change in the mutual relations of mankind and a new and shifting application of the fundamental principles by which human society is governed. This necessitates a class of men trained in the science of law, skillful in the art of applying known principles of law to the varying circumstances of everyday life, and devoted to the good order and well-being of the community.

Every civilized community has made provision for the training of this class of men. In the consummate jurisprudence of Rome great care was taken in the instruction of those who were to take a part in the administration of justice. In the early period legal instruction was imparted principally by private teaching, though lectures and practical demonstration were used as methods of tuition. At a later period public schools were established. Mr. Hunter, in his work on Roman law, says that one probably existed in the end of the fourth century. "In A. D. 425 Theodosius II. established one for the study of rhetoric, philosophy, and jurisprudence at Constantinople, prohibiting the professors from giving private instruction and all others from giving public instruction. In the time of Justinian we hear of another recognized public school of law at Berytus. On the promulgation of the Digest (A. D. 533) Justinian addressed a constitution to the eight professors of law, remarking on the ineffective practice of the schools in the past, and prescribing a reformed course to be followed in the future." Hitherto the law course had occupied four years, with a "miserably deficient" system, which Justinian superseded by a course of five years, beginning with the institutes of Justinian and ending with the constitutions in the Code.

Sir William Blackstone, in his lecture at Oxford on the opening of the Vinerian course, deplores the fact that in the knowledge of the laws and constitution of their country the gentlemen of England were more remarkably deficient than those of all Europe besides. He refers to the excellent law schools on the Continent, where the civil law was studied, and to which English youth were sent to complete their education; and he urges them to begin at home a systematic study of law drawn from English sources. Since his day no student has been without a guide in the study of English jurisprudence. His commentaries have been the basis of legal study for more than a century, and they have been fitly supplemented to the American student by the great work of our own unrivalled Kent. With these great commentaries on English and American law every lawyer who aims at a complete survey of our jurisprudence must become acquainted, and the deeper he drinks at these fountains of law the more thoroughly will he become equipped for the proper discharge of the duties of his profession.

By the first constitution of the State, which went into effect in 1777, it was provided (Art. 27) that "all attorneys, solicitors, and counselors at law, hereafter to be appointed, be appointed by the court, and licensed by the first judge of the court in which they shall respectively plead or practice, and be regulated by the rules and orders of said courts." On the 9th of October, 1779, the Legislature passed an act (Chap. 12) providing that attorneys who had been practicing in the colony before the independence of the State was declared should prove their loyalty, and means were prescribed for making the necessary proof; and attorneys were prohibited from practicing until they were able to satisfy the Supreme Court of their loyalty. A general act for the admission of attorneys was passed February 20, 1787 (Chap. 35), and it was enacted "that no person shall henceforth be admitted a counselor, attorney, solicitor, advocate, or proctor, in any court, but such as shall have been brought up in the same court, or are otherwise well-practiced in soliciting causes, and have been found by their dealings to be skillful and of honest disposition; and that every person hereafter to be admitted a counselor, attorney, solicitor, advocate, or proctor of any court shall, before such admission, be examined by the judges or justices of the same court, and such only as shall be found virtuous and of good fame, and of sufficient learning and ability, shall be admitted." Their names were required to be put on a roll or book, and they were required to take an oath "to truly and honestly demean" themselves in their business. They were required to render a bill for fees eight days before bringing suit for the same. Another general act similar to this was passed in 1801 (Chap. 32); no other general statutes relating to the admission of attorneys were passed until the general revision of 1828.

It seems that lawyers in the earlier days sometimes engaged in duels, and an act to suppress this practice was passed November 5, 1816, which, among other things, provided that any person who should be admitted to practice in any of the courts of the State should, in addition to the ordinary oath upon admission, take an oath that he had not been engaged in duelling, either by sending or accepting a challenge or by fighting a duel. By the revised statutes of 1830 it was provided that attorneys should be licensed and appointed by the several courts in which they intended to practice, and should hold their offices during life, subject to removal or suspension for cause. The Supreme Court adopted rules regulating the admission of attorneys. An applicant must be a citizen of the United States, and must be examined under the direction of the court and approved for his good character and learning. He must also have served a regular clerkship of seven years in the office of a practicing attorney of the court, but if he had regularly pursued classical studies for four years, or for any shorter period after the age of fourteen years, it might be allowed in lieu of an equal term of clerkship.

The constitution of 1846 removed many of the restrictions which had been placed upon admission to the legal profession, and substantially opened the profession to all by providing that "any male citizen of the age of twenty-one years, of good moral character, and who possesses the requisite qualifications of learning and ability, shall be entitled to admission to practice in all the courts of this State." This constitution re-organized the judiciary of the State and was followed by the judiciary act of 1847, intended to provide in detail for the re-organization of the courts in conformity to the constitutional changes. By this act attorneys were to be admitted by the general term of the Supreme Court after examination by the justices thereof. The court was required, by general rules, to prescribe what should be deemed sufficient proof of good moral character, "and no term of clerkship or period of study shall be required." A new judiciary article of the constitution was adopted in 1869, which contained no provisions relating to the admission of attorneys. In 1871 an act was passed on this subject (Chap. 486) which made it the duty of the judges of the Court of Appeals to prescribe such rules and regulations as they might deem proper in relation to the admission of attorneys, solicitors, and counselors in all the courts of this State. Rules were accordingly adopted which, with some modifications, are still in force. These rules require a three years' course of study unless the applicant is a graduate of a college or university, in which case an allowance of one year is to be made. "Any portion of time, not exceeding one year for graduates receiving the foregoing allowance and two years for other applicants actually spent in regular attendance upon the law lectures, or law school connected with any college or university having a department organized with competent professors and teachers in which instruction is regularly given, shall be allowed in lieu of an equal period of clerkship in the office of a practicing attorney of the Supreme Court, but in no case shall an applicant be entitled to admission as an attorney and counselor without having served a clerkship in the office of a practicing attorney of the Supreme Court for the period of at least one year." The applicant must either be a college graduate or he must have passed the examination prescribed by the Regents of the University of the State of New York, and he must pass a satisfactory examination upon the law of pleadings, practice as regulated by the code of civil procedure, and by the Supreme Court rules, and generally upon the laws of real and personal property, contracts, partnership, negotiable paper, principal and agent, principal and surety, insurance, executors and administrators, bailments, corporations, personal rights, domestic relations, wills, equity jurisprudence, criminal law and the law of evidence, and such additional subjects as to the court or committee shall seem advisable. Such examination shall be conducted both orally and in writing, and when in writing the answers to the questions presented shall be written by the applicant in the presence of the court or of the committee.

Thus, after the loose system under the constitution of 1846, we have again a system which aims to make the legal profession what it has always claimed to be—a learned profession. By Chap. 425 of the Laws of 1886 it was provided that the race or sex of the applicant shall constitute no reason for refusing admission to practice in the courts of this State as an attorney and counselor.

In 1883 an act was passed which provided that “any male citizen of this State of good moral character, who shall have served a full term as surrogate of any county of this State, shall, on passing a satisfactory examination, be entitled to admission to the bar of this State.” The examination was to be conducted in the same manner as in cases of ordinary applicants.

It has been said that the judicial system of the State of New York is a growth of the soil. It has been developed from small beginnings, and has a mixed Dutch and English origin. The system, which is the pride of the Empire State today is the result of many struggles, much halting and uncertainty, and numerous compromises. The judicial system of any commonwealth is an index of its character, customs, and civilization. The rude judicial tribunals of the early colonial periods were copied from those of European countries, with the modifications required by pioneer conditions and the necessary simplicity of provincial life. The development of those tribunals during two centuries and a half is an interesting study; and it will be profitable to trace briefly the development of our judicial system from the earliest Dutch occupation of Manhattan Island. In doing this the writer has freely gleaned from various sources, including the work of Hon. Charles P. Daly, of the New York Court of Common Pleas, who wrote a history of that court which is found in the first volume of E. D. Smith's Reports; and also from a series of articles written by Robert Ludlow Fowler, of New York, and published in volume nineteen of the Albany Law Journal. The documents relating to the colonial history of New York and the early statutes and constitutions have also been consulted.

The colony of New Netherland was planted by the great West India Company, a commercial corporation of Holland. This gigantic corporation was invested not only with vast commercial privileges, but also with the most comprehensive judicial powers. "It was exclusively entrusted with the administration of justice in the colonies it should establish, having the right to appoint governors, officers of justice, and all other public officers; to maintain order and police; and generally, in the language of the charter, to do all that the service of those countries might require." From the discovery of Manhattan Island by Capt. Henry Hudson, in 1609, to 1623 no regular attempt had been made to establish a colony; but in the latter year the colony of New Netherland was formally organized by May, the first director or governor appointed by the Amsterdam Chamber, and a settlement was established at Manhattan, the present site of the city of New York. Whether during May's administration or that of his successor, Verhulst, any provision was made for judicial tribunals can not now be determined. The number of the colonists was so small, and they were so fully occupied in providing for their immediate wants, that there could be little, if any, occasion for organizing courts.

Minuit came out as governor in 1626, and "he had, to assist him, a council of five, who, with himself, were invested with all legislative and judicial powers, subject to the supervision and appellate jurisdiction of the Chamber at Amsterdam." There was also attached to the body an officer well known in Holland by the name of the "schout fiscal." "He was a kind of an attorney-general, uniting with the power of a prosecuting officer the executive duties of a sheriff." The administration of justice was left to this body—the governor, the council, and the schout fiscal—during the six years of Minuit's incumbency and the four of his successor, Van Twiller; that is, from 1626 to 1637. In what manner judicial proceedings were conducted is unknown. Records were kept under Van Twiller, but they are utterly lost. Governor Clinton, in 1816, suggested to the Legislature that an effort be made to collect information respecting our early colonial history. At that time the voluminous records of the Dutch West India Company were in existence and would have been willingly presented to the State by the Dutch government, but when, in 1841, the State undertook to collect this information it was found that the records had been sold but a few years before as waste paper. We may conjecture how the keen historical instinct of a Macaulay, a Motley, or an Irving would have revelled in this mass of material, bringing from it a clear statement of the affairs of this great corporation and incidentally the story of the early development of our commonwealth.

William Kieft came out as governor in 1638, and he misgoverned the colony for nine years, ruling with a high hand, and retaining in his own hands the sole administration of justice. He was obliged to have a council, but he reduced it to one member, reserving two votes to himself. The administration of Kieft was so oppressive and tyrannical that he was constantly in trouble with his people, who demanded the establishment of the courts to which they had been accustomed in Holland. This agitation finally resulted in Kieft's recall. He was succeeded in 1647 by Peter Stuyvesant, who immediately established a court of justice with power to decide "all cases whatsoever," subject to appeal to the governor in certain cases.

The desire for popular government had manifested itself very strongly during Kieft's administration; and soon after Stuyvesant's arrival he found the sentiment so vigorous that he was obliged to make some concessions. He ordered an election of eighteen men from different parts of the colony, and from these he selected nine "as interlocutors or trustees of the commonwealth" or "tribunes" of the people. "These nine men were to hold courts of arbitration weekly, and were to give advice to the director and council in all matters submitted to them. They received their appointments September 25, 1647. Three were taken from the merchants, three from the burghers, and three from the farmers. Thus was preserved and continued the system of giving representation to the various vocations which formed the groundwork of municipal organization in the Netherlands." Three of their number attended in rotation upon every court day, to whom civil causes were referred as arbitrators. This tribunal of the nine men continued for seven years. But there was constant collision between the governor and the people. His government became insufferably oppressive. The colonists appealed to the home company, and after five years of struggle succeeded in procuring an order for the establishment in the colony of a municipal court of justice, to be composed of one schout, two burgomasters, and five schepens. A burgomaster was a kind of mayor; a schepen was an officer resembling an alderman; and a schout combined the functions of a sheriff and a district attorney. "On the 2d of February, 1653, Governor Stuyvesant issued a proclamation appointing as burgomasters Arent Van Hatten and Martin Krieger, and as schepens Paulus L. Vander Grist, Maximilian Van Gheel, Allard Anthony, Peter W. Cowenhoven, and William Beekman; Cornelius Van Tienhoven was schout and Jacob Kip was clerk." The magistrates met on the 7th and gave notice that the court would meet at the city hall "every Monday morning at 9 o'clock" for hearing and determining all disputes between parties as far as practicable. The city hall not being in readiness on the following Monday the next meeting took place four days afterwards at the fort, when the court was organized for the despatch of business and the proceedings were opened with prayer. This court was called the "Worshipful Court of the Schout, Burgomasters, and Schepens." Stuyvesant did not like the court. He and the members of it were frequently in collision, and he sometimes contemptuously referred to it as "the little bench of justice"; but it seems to be well established that "the court was composed, in the main, of magistrates who were men of intelligence, independence, and high moral character, evincing an unswerving adherence to established rules and customs, sterling good sense, and a strong love of justice." The procedure in this court was simple and summary, and strongly resembles, in many respects, the procedure established for the Roman people by the law of the Twelve Tables. The court exercised unlimited civil and criminal jurisdiction, except the infliction of punishment in capital cases. When judgment was given against a defendant for a sum of money time was given for payment, usually fourteen days for the discharge of one-half and the remainder in a month. If he did not pay within the time fixed proceedings were taken to levy on his goods, which were taken by the officer and detained six days subject to redemption; at the end of that time, if not redeemed, the property was sold at auction in a very peculiar manner. "The officer lighted a candle and the bidding went on while it was burning, and he who had offered the most at the extinction of the candle was declared the purchaser."

The court did a general business, and was also a court of admiralty and a court of probate in taking proof of last wills and testaments and in appointing curators to take charge of the estates of widows and orphans. Some of its proceedings in the exercise of this branch of its jurisdiction will serve to illustrate how tenaciously the Dutch clung to old forms or legal ceremonies: as when a widow, to relieve herself from certain obligations, desired to renounce her husband's estate it is, in all such cases, recorded that the intestate's estate "has been kicked away by his wife with the foot" and that she has duly "laid the key on the coffin."

It is worthy of note that the origin of a fee bill for regulating, by a fixed and positive provision of law, the costs of attorneys and other public officers is to be traced to Stuyvesant. On the 25th of January, 1658, he issued a proclamation with a preamble reciting the abuses that had arisen, by reason of the conduct of certain officers, in demanding excessive fees, and fixing, with detail, the fees thereafter to be charged. "It is then provided that the officers enumerated shall serve the poor gratis for God's sake, but may take from the wealthy the fees specified."

Courts of a similar character were established in other parts of the province. From all these local courts an appeal lay to the appellate court, composed of the Governor and Council at New Amsterdam. These constituted the judicial tribunals of New Netherland until the colony passed into the hands of the English, which event occurred on the 6th of September, 1664. Col. Richard Nicolls, the first English governor, immediately changed the name of the colony and city to New York, but no change was made in the courts until a later period. Early in the year 1665 a code prepared by Lord Chancellor Clarendon, called the "Duke's Laws," was promulgated and went into operation at Long Island and Westchester; afterwards its provisions slowly made their way in New York and the remainder of the province.

Under the "Duke's Laws" justices of the peace were commissioned for the various towns who were clothed with all the powers exercised by such officers in England. A local court was created in each town for the trial of actions of debt or trespass, under five pounds. Six overseers, elected by the people, with a constable, or seven without him, constituted a quorum for the transaction of business; all questions were determined by a vote of the majority, and if the overseers were evenly divided the constable had the casting vote. In 1666 the number of overseers was reduced to four, and any two of them, with the constable, held the court; the town clerk was clerk of the court.

The province was divided into three ridings, known as the east, west, and north riding, and in each a Court of Sessions was established, which was held twice a year; that is, on the first, second, and third Wednesdays in March and the corresponding Wednesdays in June. The Court of Sessions was held by all the justices living in the riding. All actions at law and all criminal cases were tried before a jury. The jurors were drawn from the overseers, each town electing eight. "Seven jurors were empanelled for the trial of a cause and the verdict of a majority was sufficient, except in capital cases, when the court might empanel twelve, which was uniformly done, and the twelve were required to be unanimous." This court had both civil and criminal jurisdiction. It was also a court of probate and exercised the jurisdiction now intrusted to surrogates.

The highest tribunal in the province was the Court of Assize, or, as it was sometimes called, the General Assizes. It was held once a year in the city of New York by the Governor and Council and such of the justices of the peace as saw fit to attend it. This court had original jurisdiction, civil, criminal, and equitable, and was the appellate court from the inferior tribunals.

In June, 1665, the Court of Burgomasters and Schepens was abolished in the city of New York and a new court organized called the Mayor's Court, a title by which it was known for 146 years afterwards. The members of the court were the mayor, aldermen, and sheriff. The change was more formal than real; "it was merely altering the burgomaster into a mayor, the schepen into an alderman, and the schout into a sheriff." The records were directed to be kept in English and Dutch, and a jury of twelve was required to be empanelled for the trial of civil causes.

There was no Court of Chancery, but matters in equity were heard in any of the courts organized in conformity to the Duke's Laws. On the 9th of August, 1673, the city was retaken by the Dutch, who immediately undertook to re-establish the former judicial tribunals; but they held the city only a little more than a year when the English reconquered it and terminated the Dutch dynasty. The English courts were re-organized in 1674, and continued from that time, with various modifications, until 1685, when a momentous change occurred in the system of government. Dongan was appointed governor in 1682. For sixteen years the people of the colony had felt and often expressed the need of a representative assembly, by which they might exercise more power in the administration of the government. "Taxation only by consent" was one of the principles of government strenuously maintained by the Dutch, and they would not consent to any form of government where they were denied a voice upon questions of taxation. Hence the constant agitation upon this subject, which was but a prelude to a remarkable change in the judicial history of New York, "the establishment of constitutional government, the foundation of a provincial legislature." Upon the advice of William Penn King James yielded to numerous requests made by men of every rank in the province and ordered Governor Dongan to call an assembly. Writs were issued by the governor for the election by the freeholders of deputies to a general assembly, to be held in the city of New York on the 17th day of October, 1683. "On this day met the first General Assembly of New York—the reign of constitutional government had at last begun. Its first acts will never cease to be of interest in New York history. The Assembly of today is its successor. Changes of dynasty and government have passed by this institution, but it is almost the same now as at its origin." In tracing the institutions of our State Mr. Fowler remarks: "Our present law is the result, modified by certain accidents, of all that which has been happening among the European residents of this territory since their sojourn here. It is the result of natural development and not the result of political miracles, and if it is looked on in any other light it can not be understood." "The acts of the first Assembly are still discernible in the law of today, and some of the courts created then are still tribunals in the same jurisdiction, and precedents then are recognized still."

Not only was the first Assembly an important element in the development of our jurisprudence, but its work makes an interesting chapter in the "story of liberty." Its first act was called "The charter of liberties and privileges granted by his Royal Highness to the inhabitants of New York and its dependencies," passed October 13, 1683. By this act the supreme legislative authority under his Majesty and Royal Highness the Duke of York was declared "to be and reside in a governour, counsell, and the people mett in general assembly." It was afterwards objected by the Crown that these words, "the people," were not in any other of the constitutions in America. It is worthy of remembrance by every citizen of the Empire State that these great words—"the people,"—the keystone of our political system, were first used in New York. The principal features of Magna Charta are contained in this act. It is said that eighteen nationalities were represented in the province under Stuyvesant, yet they all united in framing the "charter of liberties." The Duke of York signed this charter October 4, 1684, but kept it in his possession. While deliberating upon the matter Charles II. died and the duke, in February, 1685, became King James. As king he objected to certain provisions in the charter and withheld his royal assent; nevertheless Dongan's Assembly stands as the pioneer in the struggle for a broader freedom for the people.

This Assembly passed an act dividing the province into twelve counties. Its third act was entitled "An act to settle courts of justice." By this act four distinct tribunals were created—"a petty court for the trial of small causes for every town; a Court of Sessions for each county; a Court of Oyer and Terminer and general gaol delivery; and a Court of Chancery for the entire province." The Court of Assize was abolished. The fluctuation of the jurisdiction of courts in matters of equity cognizance will be observed when we recall the fact that the Court of Assize, which was the first English court of the province, possessed both law and equity jurisdiction like the present Supreme Court of the State. The Court of Oyer and Terminer had both civil and criminal jurisdiction, and a term was required to be held in each county once every year.

In October, 1688, William of Orange landed in England and James II. fled from his kingdom. "For the third time a Dutchman reigned in New York." Henry Sloughter was the first governor of New York appointed by William and Mary, and he came out in 1691. By his commission he was authorized to call an assembly to be elected from the freeholders. The first provincial assembly in this reign met at New York on the 9th of April, 1691. The governor advised them to establish new courts of justice by act of Assembly. It passed in all fourteen laws, among them an act substantially re-enacting the "charter of liberties" of 1683. But the most important act of this Assembly, for our present purpose, was the act re-organizing the judicial system of the colony. This was prepared by James Graham, the speaker of the Assembly, and was introduced and passed on the 17th of April, 1691. Upon this statute Mr. Fowler, in his "Observations," comments as follows: "This act founded the Supreme Court. It seems strange that an act of so much importance, not only in the judicial history of the province, but in that of the State, should be so obscure and so difficult of access as it now is. Not only did this act erect the tribunal which still continues the great law court of the State, but it vested in it a jurisdiction which change of government and constant reforms and revolutions in procedure have been powerless to abridge in any material respect, for while its jurisdiction has been enlarged by its union with the Court of Chancery its ancient jurisdiction still remains unimpaired. The Supreme Court of the province was the instrument by which the great body of the jurisprudence of the English common law was applied to New York. This court was the King's Bench of the province, where the King himself (coram ipso rege) theoretically sat in person to administer justice to his subjects in this part of his dominion. It was from the act of 1691 that the Supreme Court of this State inherited not only the traditions of the Saxon Aula Regis, but the best fruits of centuries of English law. So wise were the provisions of that early act of 1691 that the patriotic framers of the first State government recognized its creation, the supreme court of the province, as an appropriate tribunal for a free people and a new order of things. And yet this act which founded the Supreme Court and invested it with a jurisdiction, the result of centuries, is now to be found only in the back of an obsolete book on Practice and in several rare volumes preserved as unique specimens of the printer's art. But so important is this act in its every aspect that always in the history of the State it will be still the link which connected the judicial system of New York and the very dawn of English law."

This act was regularly approved by the Governor and Council and became a law on the 6th of May, 1691. It is not generally accessible, and the editor of this chapter deems it of sufficient importance in our judicial history to warrant its publication here in full:

"An Act for Establishing Courts of Judicature, for the Ease and Benefit of each respective City, Town and County, within this Province.

"WHEREAS, the orderly Regulation, and the establishment of Courts of Justice throughout this Province, as well in the respect of Time as Place, doth tend very much to the Honour and Dignity of the Crown, as well as to the Ease and Benefit of the Subject, Be it Enacted by the Governour and Council and Representatives convened in General Assembly, and it is hereby Enacted and Ordained by the Authority of the same, That every Justice of the Peace that resides within any Town or County within this Province, are hereby fully empowered and authorized to have Cognizance of all Causes, Cases of Debt, and Trespass to the value of Forty Shillings or under; which Causes and Cases shall be heard, tried, and finally determined without a jury, by every Justice of the Peace that resides within any Town or County, within this Province; he taking to his Assistance, at the time of his hearing and determining such Cause or Cases of debt and Trespass to the value of Forty Shillings and under, one of the Freeholders of the Town and place where the cause of Action doth arise. The Process of warning shall be a summons under the hand of the Justice, directed to the Constable of the Town or Precinct, or any deputed by him, where the Party complained against doth live. Which Summons being Personally served, or left at the Defendant's House two days before the Day of Hearing of the Plaintiff, shall be sufficient Authority to and for the said Justice, assisted with one of the Freeholders, as aforesaid, to proceed on such Cause and Causes, and determine the same in the Defendant's absence; and to grant execution thereon against the Defendant's Person, or for want thereof, his Estate, which the Constable of the Town or Precinct, or his Deputy, shall or may serve.

"Always provided, and be it further Enacted, by the Authority aforesaid, That if the Plaintiff or Defendant shall desire a Jury, it shall be allowed, but at the proper cost and charges of the Person desiring the same.

"And for the Increase of Virtue, and Discouraging of Evil-doers throughout this Province, Be it further Enacted, by the Authority aforesaid, that there shall be held and kept in every respective City and County within this Province, (at the Times and Places hereafter named and expressed,) a Court of Sessions of the Peace, that is to say,

"For the City and County of New York, at the City Hall of the said City, four times every year, viz. The first Tuesday in May, the first Tuesday in August, the first Tuesday in November, and the first Tuesday in February.

"For the City and County of Albany, at the City Hall of the said City, the first Tuesday in June, the first Tuesday in October, and the first Tuesday in February.

"For Westchester, at Westchester, the first Tuesday in June, and the first Tuesday in December.

"For Ulster, at Kingston, the first Tuesday in September, and the first Tuesday in March.

"For the County of Richmond, at the Court House, the first Tuesday in September, and the first Tuesday in March.

"For Kings County, at Flatbush (alias Midwout), the second Tuesday in May, and the second Tuesday in November.

"For Queens County, at Jamaica, the third Tuesday in May, and the third Tuesday in September.

"For Suffolk County, at Southold, the last Tuesday in September.

"And the last Tuesday in March at Southampton. Orange County to be annexed to the County of New York, and Dutchess County to the County of Ulster.

"Which Sessions of the Peace shall only hold and continue for the space and time of two Days, and no longer.

"And for the more regular and beneficial Distribution of Justice to the Inhabitants of each respective City and County within this Province, Be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That there be kept and held a Court of Common Pleas in each respective City and County within this Province, at the Times and Places hereafter named and Expressed: That is to say, At such Places in each respective County as the said Court of Sessions are to be kept; and to begin the next day after the Sessions terminates, and only to hold and continue for the Space and time of two days, and no longer: And that there be one Judge, with three Justices, in each County, Appointed and Commissionated to hold the same Court of Pleas; Three whereof to be a Quorum. And that the several and respective Courts, hereby established, shall have Jurisdiction to Hear, Try, and finally to Determine all Actions or Cause of Actions, and all Matters, and Things, and Causes Tryable at the Common Law of what Nature or Kind soever.

"Provided always, and it is hereby Enacted, that there shall not be any Appeal or Removal by Habeas Corpus, of any person, or of any Action or Suit, or of any Judgment or Execution, that shall be determined in this Court to the value of Twenty Pounds or under, anything contained herein to the contrary in any ways notwithstanding.

"Provided always, and it is hereby Enacted, That the Courts of Mayor and Aldermen of the respective Cities of New York and Albany, shall have in each of their respective Cities the Power and Authority to Hear, Try, and finally to Determine all such Actions and Suits as is commonly cognizable before them, from which final Determination, there shall not be any Appeal or Removal by Habeas Corpus, of any Person, or of any Action or Suit, or of any Judgment or Execution, to the value of Twenty Pounds, or under, any thing contained herein to the contrary in any ways notwithstanding.

"To which respective Courts of Common Pleas there shall belong, and be appointed, and Commissioned for that purpose, one Clark of the Court, to draw, enter, and keep the Records, Declarations, Pleas, and Judgments, then to be had and made—And one Marshal or Cryer of the Court, to call the Jurors, and proclaim the Commands and Orders of the Court.

"And for the more regular Proceedings in the said Court, all Processes and Writs, of what nature soever, for the command of Persons to appear, and to execute the Judgments and Executions of the respective Courts aforesaid, shall be directed to the respective Sheriffs of each City and County within this Province, and executed by them, their Under-Sheriffs, or Deputy or Deputies. And all Processes and Writs for Actions betwixt Party and Party in the said Court shall issue out of the Office of the Clark of the Court in each City and County respectively, signed Per Curiam.

"And that their Majesties Subjects inhabiting within this Province, may have all the good, proper, and just ways and means, for the securing and recovering their just Rights, and Demands, within the same, Be it further Enacted, and it is hereby Enacted and Ordained, by Authority aforesaid, That there shall be held and kept, a Supream Court of Judicature, which shall be duly and constantly kept, at the city of New York, and not elsewhere, at the several and respective times hereafter mentioned. And that there be five Justices at least, appointed and commissioned to hold the same Court. Two whereof, together with one Chief Justice, to be a Quorum. Which Supream Court is hereby fully Impowered and Authorized to have Cognizance of all Pleas, Civil, Criminal, and Mixt, as fully and amply to all intents and purposes whatsoever, as the Courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas and Exchequer, within their Majesties Kingdom of England, have or ought to have. In and to which Supream Court all and every Person and Persons whatsoever, shall or may, if they shall so see meet, commence or remove any Action or Suit, the Debt or Damages laid in such Action or Suit being upwards of Twenty Pounds, and not otherwise; or shall or may by warrant, Writ of Error, or Certiorari, remove out of any of the respective Courts of Mayor and Aldermen, Sessions and Common Pleas, any Judgment, Information, or indictment there had or depending; and may correct Errors in Judgment, or Revise the same, if there be just cause. Provided always, that the Judgment removed, shall be upwards the value of Twenty Pounds.

"Always provided, and be further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That this Supream Court shall be duly and constantly kept once every six Months, and no oftener; That is to say, On the first Tuesday of October and on the first Tuesday of April annually, and every Year, at the City Hall of the said City of New York; provided they shall not sit longer than eight dayes.

"And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That it shall not be lawful for any Person or Persons whatsoever, appointed, or elected, or commissioned to be a Justice or Judge of the aforesaid to execute or officiate his or their said place or Office until such Time, as he or they shall respectively take the Oathes appointed by Act of Parliament, to be taken instead of the Oathes of Allegiance and Supremacy, and Subscribe the Test in open Court.

"And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all and every of the Justices or Judges of the several Courts before mentioned, be and are hereby sufficiently impowed to make, order, and establish all such Rules and Orders, for the more orderly practicing and proceeding in their said Courts, as fully and amply to all intents and purposes whatsoever, as all or any of the said Judges of the several Courts of the Kings Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer in England legally do.

"Provided always, and be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That no Person's Right or Property shall be by any of the aforesaid Courts determined, except where matters of Fact are either acknowledged, or passeth by the Defendants Fault for want of Plea or Answer, Unless the Fact be found by the Verdict of Twelve Men of the Neighborhood, as it ought of Right to be done by the Law.

"Be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That there shall be a Court of Chancery within this Province, which said Court shall have power to Hear and Determine all Matters of Equity, and shall be esteemed and accounted The High Court of Chancery of this Province.

"And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Governour and Council be the said High Court of Chancery, and hold and keep the said Court; and that the Governour may depute, nominate, and appoint in his stead, a Chancellor, and be assisted with such other Persons of the Council as shall by him be thought fit and convenient, together with all necessary Officers, Clerks, and Registers, as to the said High Court of Chancery are needful.

"Provided always, and it is hereby further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That any Free-holder, Planter, Inhabitant, or Sojourner within this Province, may have Liberty, if he or they see meet, to make his or their Appeal or Appeals, from any Judgment obtained against him or them, in case of Error, in the several Courts aforesaid, in such manner and form as is hereafter expressed, that is to say, From the Court of Mayor and Aldermen, and Courts of Common Pleas, To the Supreme Court, for any Judgment above the value of Twenty Pounds; And from the Supreme Court at New York, to the Governour and Council, for any Judgment above the value of One Hundred Pounds; And from the Governour and Council, To Their Majesties Council, for any Decree or Judgment above the value of Three Hundred Pounds, as in their Majesties Letters Patent to his Excellency doth and may more fully appear. Alwayes provided, That the Party or Parties so Appealing shall first pay all Costs of such Judgment or Decree from which the Appeal ariseth, and enter into Recognizance, with two sufficient surities, for double the value of the Debt, Matter, or Thing recovered, or obtained by Judgment or Decree against him or them, to the said Court from which they Appeal, That they will prosecute the said Appeal or Appeals with effect and make Return thereof within twelve months after the said Appeal or Appeals here made. And if default happen thereon then Execution to issue out upon the Judgment, against the Party, or their Sureties, in course, without any Scire facias. Provided alwayes, That the Establishing of these Courts shall not be or remain longer in force, than for the time and space of two Years, and until the End of the sitting of the next Assembly, after the expiration of the said two Years."

Immediately upon the passage of this act the Supreme Court was organized and Joseph Dudley appointed chief justice: Thomas Johnson, second judge; and William Smith, Stephen Van Cortland, and William Pinthorne, associate judges. The act took effect but for ten years, but it was re-enacted from time to time and continued by proclamations, and was in force, with some modifications, at the time of the Revolution and organization of the State government in 1777.

By the first constitution of 1777 the existing courts were recognized and continued, and a new court for the trial of impeachments and the correction of errors was established, familiarly known as the "Court of Errors," which continued down to the adoption of the constitution of 1846. Sheriffs and coroners were to be annually appointed and no person could hold either of said offices more than four years successively, and the sheriff could not hold any other office at the same time. It was also provided that registers and clerks in chancery be appointed by the chancellor, the clerks of the Supreme Court by the judges of said court, the clerk of the Court of Probates by the judge of said court, and the register and marshal of the Court of Admiralty by the judges of the Admiralty. It was also provided that new commissions should be issued to judges of the County Courts (other than the first judge) and to justices of the peace once at least in every three years. The Legislature was prohibited from instituting any new courts but such as should proceed according to the course of the common law.

As already stated, the Supreme Court was at first composed of five judges. From 1701 to 1758 the number was three—a chief justice and two associate justices. In the latter year a fourth was added. It may perhaps indicate somewhat the growth of the State to note that there are now forty-five justices of the Supreme Court, besides the Court of Appeals, the various city and county courts, and the inferior local tribunals in towns and villages. The judicial machinery of the State has assumed vast proportions. In 1778 the Supreme Court was re-organized. The judges were empowered to devise a seal and the proceedings were directed to be in the name of the people of the State instead of that of the king. The judges were appointed by the Council of Appointment and their terms of office limited to the age of sixty years. It is said that in 1741 the duty of revising the laws in force, with notes and references, was assigned to Daniel Horsmanden, a justice of the Supreme Court, but this, from his advanced age, was not performed. This is said to have caused the adoption of the principle of limiting the office of the judges to sixty years of age to avoid the inconvenience that might result from the infirmities of advanced age. This limitation has since been extended to the last day of December next after a judge shall be seventy years of age.

Of the early courts it is said that the judges and those practicing before them wore no particular costume, nor was there any distinction or difference of degrees among the lawyers. Persons who had served seven years under an attorney, or had taken a collegiate course and served a three years' apprenticeship, were granted license to practice in the Supreme Court by the governor under his seal, on the recommendation of the chief justice, and on subscribing the usual oaths. The first rules of the Supreme Court were drawn by Judge Egbert Benson, and were adopted at the April term of 1796. The decisions of the Supreme Court have been reported since the January term of 1799. In 1804 an act was passed providing for an official reporter of the court, and William Johnson was first appointed to this office. He also became the first reporter of the Court of Chancery and began reporting for that court in 1814.

Important and organic changes were made in the Supreme Court by the constitution of 1821. The court was to consist of a chief justice and two justices, any of whom might hold the court. The State was to be divided into not less than four nor more than eight circuits, for each of which a circuit judge was to be appointed, who had the powers of a justice of the Supreme Court at chambers and in the trial of issue and in Courts of Oyer and Terminer. The judges were appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate, and held office during good behavior, or until they arrived at the age of sixty years. Clerk's offices were continued at New York, Albany, and Utica. In 1829 an additional clerk's office was established at Canandaigua, which was removed in 1831 to Geneva and in 1841 to Rochester. The clerks were appointed for three years, unless sooner removed.

A radical re-organization of our judicial system was effected by the constitution of 1846. The old Supreme Court and the Court of Chancery were abolished, and our Supreme Court created with full legal and equitable jurisdiction. Intermediate general terms were provided, to which appeals from the lower branches of the Supreme Court were carried. A Court of Appeals was also created, taking the place of the old "Court of Errors," which was abolished. A further re-organization of these courts was accomplished by an amendment to the constitution, which was adopted in 1869; and the system then established is still in existence. The Court of Appeals is composed of a chief judge and six associate judges, and it has a clerk and a reporter. The State is divided into eight judicial districts, each with the following number of justices of the Supreme Court: First district, six; second, six; third, five; fourth, five; fifth, six; sixth, five; seventh, six; and eighth, six; making forty-five in all. The State is also divided into five judicial departments, each with a General term, composed of justices of the Supreme Court. Each justice may hold Special terms, Circuit Courts, and Courts of Oyer and Terminer in any county in the State.

The State of New York formerly had a Court of Exchequer, originally created by Governor Dongan in 1685, discontinued in 1691, and re-organized as a branch of the Supreme Court in 1786 "for the better levying and accounting for fines, forfeitures, issues, amercements, and debts due to the people of the State." The court ceased to exist January 1, 1830. There was also a Court of Admiralty, which was discontinued upon the adoption of the federal constitution in 1789.

The first Assembly of the colony of New York met on the 17th of October, 1683. The second act of the Assembly, passed November 1st, divided the province into shires and counties. The counties were twelve in number, viz.: Albany, Cornwall, Dukes, Dutchess, Kings, New York, Orange, Queens, Richmond, Suffolk, Ulster, and Westchester. The second Assembly, which met in 1691 under authority of the new sovereigns, William and Mary, passed a resolution declaring the legislation of the previous Assembly null and void. This resolution was never presented to the Governor and Council for their concurrence as was required by law, and therefore is said not to have had any effect. By an act passed October 1, 1691, re-organizing the counties, the county of Albany was "to contain the manor of Rensselaerwyck, Schenectada, and all the Villages, Neighborhoods, and Christian Plantations on the east side of Hudson's River from Roeloff Jansen's Creek, and on the west side from Sawyer's Creek to the outmost end of Saraghtoga." Subsequent legislation extended the boundaries of Albany county so as to embrace all of New York to its northern and western limits. An act was passed March 12, 1772, erecting Tryon county from a portion of Albany county. The new county included all of the province west of the Delaware river and a line extending northwardly through Schoharie county and along the eastern boundaries of the present counties of Montgomery, Fulton, and Hamilton, and thence continuing north to the Canada line. "The county was named in honor of William Tryon, the last royal governor of the province whose authority was recognized by the people of New York. This name was discontinued September 2, 1784, and that of Montgomery was substituted in honor of the hero who fell in the assault on Quebec."

March 7, 1788, the Legislature passed an act dividing the State into counties. By this act all that part of the State bounded easterly by the counties of Ulster, Albany, Washington, and Clinton, southerly by the State of Pennsylvania, and westerly and northerly by the west and north bounds of the State was erected into a county called Montgomery. This embraces the present territory of Cattaraugus county. By Chap. 64, passed the same day, the Legislature divided the counties into towns. By this act that part of Montgomery county embracing the present county of Cattaraugus and considerable other territory was erected into a town called White's Town. In 1789 Montgomery was divided, and the western part, embracing Cattaraugus and other counties, was erected into a separate county called Ontario. April 3, 1801, another general act was passed dividing the State into counties, by which Ontario county was continued substantially as originally erected. April 7th of the same year an act was passed dividing the State into towns, by which it was provided that "All that part of the county of Ontario which lies westerly of the following described line, viz.: Beginning at the mouth of the Genesee river on Lake Ontario, thence running southerly up 'the middle of said river, following the courses thereof, to the confluence of the said river with the Canaseraga creek, and thence south on the Indian line (so called), being a meridian line, to the north line of the State of Pennsylvania, shall be and continue a town by the name of Northampton." March 30, 1802, the county of Genesee was erected, to embrace all that part of Ontario which had been included in the town of Northampton. By the same act the town of Batavia was erected, forming a part of Genesee county and embracing the present county of Cattaraugus and other territory.

April 11, 1804, Batavia was divided into four towns: Willink, Erie, Chautauqua, and Batavia. By this division the town of Batavia as then established would include the present town of Portville, the eastern half of Hinsdale, Ischua, Farmersville, and Freedom, and the greater part of Lyndon. The remainder of Freedom, Farmersville, Lyndon, Ischua, and Hinsdale, all of the towns of Olean, Allegany, Humphrey, Franklinville, Machias, Yorkshire, Carrolton, Great Valley, and Ellicottville, with the southeast part of East Otto and all of Ashford except the northwest corner between the Cattaraugus and Connoirtoirauley creeks, were then included in Willink. All the remainder of Cattaraugus (that is, the western half of the county), with the eastern range of townships in Chautauqua county, were covered by the town of Erie. The town of Chautauqua included all the territory within the present county of the same name except the tenth range of townships. April 7, 1806, Allegany county was erected from Genesee, and its boundaries included Olean, Portville, Allegany, Hinsdale, Ischua, Humphrey, Franklinville, Lyndon, Farmersville, Machias, Yorkshire, and Freedom in Cattaraugus county.

On the 11th of March, 1808, an act was passed which provided that that part of Cattaraugus county embraced in the towns above named be annexed to the county of Genesee. This restored to Genesee county all the territory now within the county of Cattaraugus which had previously been held by Allegany. This act also provided for the erection of the county of Cattaraugus, as follows: "That that part of the county of Genesee bounded north by the division line, being part of the south bounds of the county of Niagara, west by the east bounds of the county of Chautauqua aforesaid, south by the north bounds of Pennsylvania, and east by the west bounds of the county of Allegany aforesaid, be erected into a county by the name of Cattaraugus." Another act dividing the State into counties was passed March 6, 1813, by which the boundaries of Cattaraugus were continued substantially as given in the act of 1808. The present boundaries of the county are defined in that part of the revised statutes of 1828 providing for the division of the State into counties, and are as follows: "Easterly by the county of Allegany; northerly by the counties of Genesee and Erie; westerly by a meridian line between the ninth and tenth ranges of townships of the Holland Company's purchase; and southerly by the south bounds of the State." May 19, 1841, the southern part of Genesee county was erected into a county called Wyoming, which is its present name, and which is a part of the northern boundary of Cattaraugus.

ORGANIZATION OF THE COURTS.

The act of March 11, 1808, already referred to, which erected the county, provided that Chautauqua and Cattaraugus counties should be organized and for all county purposes should act in conjunction with the county of Niagara as a part thereof, and should respectively remain so organized until they respectively should contain five hundred taxable inhabitants qualified to vote for member of Assembly; the number to be ascertained by the supervisors from the assessment rolls and certified to the governor, and after filing such certificate such counties were to be organized as separate counties. This act required the first Court of Common Pleas and General Sessions of the Peace (including for this purpose Chautauqua and Cattaraugus) to be held at the house of Joseph Langdon in the village of New Amsterdam. This act also provided that the governor should in his discretion appoint three persons commissioners to "explore the counties of Chautauqua and Cattaraugus and designate and fix a site for a court house and jail in and for the said counties respectively, and file a certificate in the clerk's office of the county of Niagara." The act also provided that the supervisors of the counties of Chautauqua and Cattaraugus, at their first annual meeting after their organization, should raise a sum not exceeding $1,500 for building a court house and jail. The act further provided that after the organization of the county "there shall be held a Court of Common Pleas and General Sessions of the Peace, and that there shall be three terms of said Court of Common Pleas and two terms of the General Sessions of the Peace in each year. The terms of the Common Pleas to begin the third Tuesday of February and the fourth Tuesdays of June and November, and the General Sessions of the Peace to begin also the fourth Tuesdays of June and November, and may continue to be held until the several Saturdays next following, inclusive." The courts were to possess the same power and jurisdiction as like courts in other counties. The courts were directed to be held at the court house when it should be in readiness, and until then to be held at such place as the supervisors may appoint. The act further provided that no Circuit Courts or Courts of Oyer and Terminer and general jail delivery should be held in either of said counties until the same in the opinion of the justices of the Supreme Court should be necessary.

This act also provided that "the county of Cattaraugus be erected into a town by the name of Olean, and that the first town meeting in the town of Olean be held at the dwelling house of Joseph McClure in said town." By Chap. 173, Laws of 1812, passed June 16th, the town of Olean was divided into two towns, the new town to be called Ischua. By this act the county of Cattaraugus was annexed to the county of Allegany for county purposes, and the inhabitants of the county were exempted from serving as jurors or constables in courts of record for the term of three years, or until the county should contain five hundred taxable inhabitants and should be separately organized. By an act passed April 13, 1814, it was provided that "All that part of the county of Cattaraugus lying and situated east of the east boundary line of the 7th range of townships of the Holland Land Company's lands in the county of Cattaraugus shall be annexed to and is hereby considered as a part of the county of Allegany for all purposes whatsoever." This part of the county was to remain in two towns, Olean and Ischua. The remainder of the county was annexed to the county of Niagara, and was erected into a town called Perry.

The organization of the county was completed in 1817 by an act entitled "An Act Organizing the County of Cattaraugus," passed March 28th, which provided "that the freeholders and inhabitants of the county of Cattaraugus shall have and enjoy the rights, powers, and privileges which the freeholders and inhabitants of any other county in this State are by law entitled to have and enjoy." The act also provided for a new Court of Common Pleas and General Sessions of the Peace to be held on the first Tuesdays in February, July, and November, and which might continue to be held until the Saturdays following, inclusive. No Circuit Courts and Courts of Oyer and Terminer and general jail delivery were to be held until the justices of the Supreme Court should deem it necessary. It was also provided that courts should be held at some convenient place from time to time, to be appointed for that purpose by the judges for the time being, and that the prisoners of the county be confined in the jail of Allegany county until provision was otherwise made for them. It was also provided that after holding the first term of the Court of Common Pleas deeds, mortgages, etc., should be recorded in the clerk's office of the county.

Timothy H. Porter was appointed first judge and James Brooks, Ashbel Freeman, Francis Green, and William Price were appointed associate judges of the first Court of Common Pleas. Judge Brooks took the oath of office

May 27, 1817, Judges Freeman and Green June 5th and Judge Price June 18th of the same year. Judge Porter did not take the oath of office until July 1st, the day on which the first court was opened. The associate judges made the following order fixing the place for holding the first term of the court :

" WHEREAS, An act of the Legislature of the State of New York, for organizing the county of Cattaraugus, passed March 28, 1817, has made it a duty of the judges for the time being to appoint a place for holding the Courts of Common Pleas and General Sessions of the Peace, in and for said county :

" Therefore, we, Francis Green, Ashbel Freeman, and James Brooks, judges of the Court of Common Pleas, in and for the county aforesaid, convened at the house of William Baker, in the town of Olean, in the county aforesaid, have (conformably to the act above mentioned) appointed, and by these presents do appoint and declare, the house of William Baker, in the said town of Olean, in the county aforesaid, to be the place for holding the first Court of Common Pleas and General Sessions of the Peace, in and for the county of Cattaraugus.

" In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands this 5th day of June, 1817.

THE COUNTY SEAT.

As already stated, the act erecting the county of Cattaraugus authorized the governor to appoint three commissioners to "explore" the county and locate a suitable site for the court house and jail. Jonas Williams and Asa Ransom, of Chautauqua county, and Isaac Sutherland, of Cattaraugus, were selected to perform this duty. "At that time the entire county was nearly an unbroken wilderness, without towns or roads. They started on their mission with the very laudable idea of fixing the site of the future capital as nearly as possible in the exact center of the county. After a tedious journey, and evidently much careful calculation, they fixed on the present site of Ellicottville, and a large ironwood post was set up in the wilderness on the bank of Great Valley creek to mark the chosen spot from which the edicts and manifestoes of the new county magnates were thereafter to be issued." It was further provided that the bills of the commissioners for such services be presented to the Board of Supervisors at the first annual meeting after the organization of the county. At the meeting of the Board of Supervisors held October 7, 1818, Mr. Sutherland presented a bill for services as commissioner in October, 1808, in which he charged for ten days at $2 a day and $10 for expenses, in all $30, upon which he charged $12.90 interest. The whole account, amounting to $42.90, was ordered paid by the board.

April 21, 1818, an act was passed directing the Board of Supervisors to raise $1,500 for building a court house in Ellicottville, and the board was authorized at its next annual meeting to cause to be levied on the freeholders and inhabitants of the county said sum with the addition of five per cent. on a dollar for collecting the same. This act also provided that until the court house should be erected courts were to be held at the house of Baker Leonard, in the village of Ellicottville, in the town of Ischua. By Chap. 38, of the Laws of 1819, provision was made for building a jail in Ellicottville, and David Goodwin, Baker Leonard, and Benjamin Waterman were appointed commissioners to superintend its erection. The site for the jail had already been designated and Seymour Bouton, Thomas Morris, and Silas Nash had been paid $5 each for services in fixing the site. At a meeting of the Board of Supervisors held at the house of Baker Leonard, October 5, 1819, a resolution was adopted reciting that the supervisors had designated lots 38 and 39 in the village of Ellicottville whereon to build a court house and jail for the county, and had requested a deed of the premises from the Holland Land Company, and appointing Ebenezer Lockwood, supervisor of Olean, a committee to call on the Holland Company's agent at Batavia and ask for and receive a good and sufficient deed to the supervisors of the county and their successors in office. The records of the board also show that a deed of the premises was presented to the board at their adjourned meeting on the 2d of November, 1819, and had been duly considered, but the deed not meeting with their approval "it was unanimously resolved that the deed or instrument contains provision that may at some future period be injurious to the interests of the inhabitants of the county and inconsistent with the rights and privileges of its citizens, and that a conveyance vesting the fee of the lands described in the aforesaid instrument fully and unconditionally in the supervisors of Cattaraugus county and their successors in office forever ought to be obtained"; and the clerk was directed to return the deed to the Holland Land Company. In due time another deed was received from the company, dated January 17, 1820, which was accepted by the Board of Supervisors at their annual meeting October 3, 1820, and was recorded in the county clerk's office October 4, 1820.

A building to be used as a court house and jail was erected in 1820 on the public square in Ellicottville. The lower story was used as a jail and the second story as the court room or court house. The jail is described as being formed of an inner and outer structure of scored logs, there being left between these a considerable space which was solidly filled with stones as a means of greater security against the escape of prisoners; the building stood upon a stone foundation, which was filled in the same manner over the entire surface beneath the floors. The jail was divided by a hall through the center. On one side were the cells and on the other two large debtors' rooms, each twenty feet square. At the November term of the Court of Common Pleas, 1820, it was ordered "that all process hereafter to be made returnable in this court be made returnable at the court house in the town of Ischua, and that the building now erected in said town for a prison and court house shall in all process and pleadings be denominated the court house in and for the county of Cattaraugus." This building was destroyed by fire in the winter of 1829. By Chap. 149 of the Laws of 1829 the sum of $6,000 was appropriated to build a court house and jail, separately, in Ellicottville, and the Board of Supervisors were directed to raise the money for that purpose. Alson Leavenworth, Benjamin Chamberlain, and Benjamin Searl were appointed commissioners to superintend the building, and the act provided that the next term of court should be held at the house of Lothrop Vinton in Ellicottville. The court house was built during the same year and so nearly completed that the January term of court for 1830 was held in it. By an act passed April 5, 1830, the comptroller was authorized to loan Cattaraugus county $3,300 belonging to the capital of the common school fund at six per cent. interest, to enable the county to pay for the court house and jail built in accordance with the act of 1829. By an act passed March 25, 1831, a further sum of $1,200 was appropriated to complete the court house and jail, and William Stilwell, Andrew Mead, and Abner Chase were appointed commissioners to superintend the completion of the buildings.

A special session of the Board of Supervisors was held at the court house in Ellicottville on January 6, 1865. At this meeting James Freeland, supervisor from the town of Allegany, offered the following resolution, which was adopted by a vote of fourteen to twelve:

"Resolved, That we, as a Board of Supervisors of Cattaraugus county, respectfully petition the Legislature of this State to locate the county site of the said county at some place on the line of the Erie railway in said county, between Olean and Dayton. Said site to be located by three commissioners appointed by the governor of this State, and that proper action be taken by the Legislature to carry into effect the removal of said site as soon as it can properly be done."

April 17, 1865, the Legislature passed an act entitled "An Act to Remove the County Site of Cattaraugus County to the Erie Railway and Locate and Procure a new Site and to Build County Buildings thereon, and to Sell the Old County Buildings." The act required the governor immediately upon its passage to appoint three persons, not residents of Cattaraugus county, to designate some central and convenient point on the line of the Erie railway at which to locate the county buildings and site of the county. The commissioners were required to examine the premises and file in the office of the clerk of Cattaraugus county a certificate under their hands, or a majority of them, designating such point by the name of the town in which the same is located, which point so designated should be at or near some of the villages on the line of said railroad between the villages of Dayton and Olean. The certificate was to be filed on or before the annual meeting of the Board of Supervisors in November, 1865. The act also authorized the Board of Supervisors to appoint three building commissioners "to select and determine upon a suitable site whereon to build a court house, jail, and clerk's office at such point as shall be designated in such certificate." The building commissioners were required to be appointed at the annual meeting of the board either in 1865 or 1866. Such building commissioners were required within sixty days after appointment to file in the county clerk's office a survey and description of the site so selected by them, with a certificate that they had selected the same for the purposes above stated; and they were also required to procure by purchase or otherwise a good and sufficient conveyance in fee of the title to the lands so selected as a site to the supervisors for the county. By the act the building commissioners were given charge of the work of erecting the buildings. The Board of Supervisors were authorized to borrow of the comptroller of the State not exceeding $40,000, to be used in erecting the buildings; or the county might loan it elsewhere, to be paid by a tax on the property of the county. The act also provided that when the new buildings were completed and accepted by the building commissioners the records and offices were to be removed thither from Ellicottville, and such court house, jail, and clerk's office "shall be and remain the court house, jail, and clerk's office of said county, and thereafter the said place shall be the county seat of said county, and all public officers required by law to reside thereat shall there reside, and all public offices and records required to be there kept shall be removed to and kept at said county seat." It was further provided by section 13 of the act that the commissioners appointed to designate the town for a site might consider any donations of land for a site or money to defray the expense of building in designating the town. Such designation was to be void unless ratified by the supervisors in 1865 or 1866. By virtue of the authority conferred in the act the governor appointed Orsell Cook, of Chautauqua, Robert B. Van Valkenburgh, of Steuben, and Seth Wakeman, of Genesee county, commissioners to designate the point for the new county seat. A special town meeting was held in Little Valley on May 26, 1865, and the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the town of Little Valley raise by tax on the taxable property of said town the sum of ten thousand dollars for the purpose of expending in the building of the court house, jail, county clerk's office, and such other buildings as shall be deemed necessary for county purposes in the village of Little Valley, county of Cattaraugus, to be raised by said town, and paid to the treasurer of said county in such proportions and at such times as the Board of Supervisors of said county shall by resolution determine."

A special town meeting was held in the town of Napoli on June 24, 1865, at which a resolution was adopted similar in form to that adopted in Little Valley and appropriating $3,000 for the same purpose. The commissioners appointed by the governor examined the various locations and on July 25, 1865, filed the following certificate in the county clerk's office designating Little Valley as the point for the new county seat:

"The undersigned, commissioners appointed by the governor of the State of New York, under and in pursuance of an act entitled 'An Act to Remove the County Site of Cattaraugus County to the Line of the Erie Railway and Locate and Procure a new Site and Build County Buildings and Sell the Old County Buildings,' passed April 17, 1865, having met pursuant to notice at Salamanca, in said county of Cattaraugus, on the 18th day of July, 1865, and having examined the localities between the villages of Dayton and Olean in said county, and having taken into consideration the several donations of land and money to defray the expenses of building said county buildings, after consultation and deliberation have determined that the village of Little Valley in said county is the most central and convenient point on the line of said Erie, railway, between the points designated in said act, to locate the said county buildings and site for said county of Cattaraugus, and we, the said commissioners, appointed as aforesaid, and by virtue of the power conferred upon us by the act aforesaid, and in consideration of the facts aforesaid, and in further consideration that the citizens of Little Valley will donate the necessary lands on which to locate said buildings, not exceeding five acres, and $25,000 in money towards building said necessary buildings, do certify that we locate said county buildings and site for the said county of Cattaraugus at the said village of Little Valley.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Supervisors in November, 1865, an attempt was made to ratify the designation made by the commissioners and provide for the erection of the county buildings at Little Valley. The resolutions offered for this purpose were rejected by the board by a vote of thirteen to sixteen. At the annual meeting of the Board of Supervisors in November, 1866, the designation of Little Valley as the county seat was ratified by the adoption of the following preambles and resolutions, presented by Erastus N. Lee, supervisor from the town of Little Valley:

"WHEREAS, The Legislature of the State of New York, on the 17th day of April, 1865, passed an act, Chapter 479, entitled 'An Act to Remove the County Site of Cattaraugus County to the Erie Railway, and Locate and Procure a New Site and Build County Buildings thereon, and Sell the old County Buildings.' And

"WHEREAS, By virtue of the authority conferred in the first section of said act, the governor of the State of New York appointed Hon's. Orsell Cook, of Chautauqua county, Robert B. Van Valkenburg, of Steuben county, and Seth Wakeman, of Genesee county, commissioners to designate some central and convenient point on the line of the Erie railway at which to locate the county buildings and site of the said county of Cattaraugus, and the said commissioners having examined the various locations designated the town of Little Valley for the location of such new county site, and duly filed a certificate of such location in the office of the clerk of Cattaraugus county on the 25th day of July, 1865. Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That in conformity with the provisions of section two, of said act, Frank L. Stowell of the town of Olean, Lemuel S. Jenks of the town of Persia, and John Manley of the town of Little Valley be and they are hereby appointed building commissioners, and that upon the execution of the oath of office and giving the bond required by section seven of said act the said building commissioners be and they hereby are instructed and required to select and determine upon a suitable site in the village of Little Valley, of not less than five acres, whereon to erect a court house, with county clerk's, county treasurer's, county judge's, and surrogate's offices, court room and jury rooms therein, and a jail, and that they procure a title thereto, free from all incumbrance, at a cost to the county of not exceeding one dollar, and that they immediately proceed in conformity with section three of said act to cause to be erected and built on the site aforesaid fit and convenient buildings for a court house, with the offices above designated therein, and a jail, but without cost to the county for such buildings, and the said building commissioners, or a majority of them, are hereby empowered to do all acts authorized by law, or by the Board of Supervisors. And

"WHEREAS, In conformity with the provisions of section thirteen of the said act, Chapter 479, Laws of 1865, the towns of Little Valley and Napoli at special town meetings, called for that purpose, voted the sum of ten thousand dollars and three thousand dollars respectively, and the proceedings of such town meetings having been legalized by the act in Chapter 683, Laws of New York, 1866. And

"WHEREAS, In conformity with the provisions of section thirteen, Chapter 479, Laws of 1865, bonds of individuals for money and material have been given for the purpose of erecting said new county buildings; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the said building commissioners be and they are hereby instructed to accept bonds of the town of Little Valley for the sum of ten thousand dollars, and of Napoli for the sum of three thousand dollars, bearing interest at seven per centum, and payable at stated periods, and they are also instructed to accept bonds of individuals, payable in money or materials, and payable at stated periods, which may be guaranteed by responsible parties satisfactory to the building commissioners, or which may be accepted by contractors; or to accept sums of money; and that such bonds, materials, and money shall be used for the purpose of erecting said new county buildings in the village of Little Valley, and for no other purpose.

"Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the building commissioners hereby appointed, before taking any title to the proposed site for the new county buildings, or doing any other act or thing that shall commit the county to the removal of the county site, to receive from the towns of Little Valley and Napoli valid bonds of those towns, and individual bonds, money, and materials, of sufficient amount, not less than thirty thousand dollars in amount and value, to guarantee the erection and completion of all the buildings herein provided for, and to insure the county against any and all taxation for the erection and completion of said buildings, or the site therefor, and that the said building commissioners be and they hereby are instructed in building such buildings to conform to the plans in style and material as furnished by H. N. White, architect, which plans are now in the county clerk's office."

Later in the same session of the board James T. Henry, supervisor from the town of Olean, offered resolutions, which were adopted, providing that the bonds to be issued by the towns of Little Valley and Napoli in accordance with resolutions adopted by special town meetings for the purpose of raising moneys to aid in the erection of county buildings in the village of Little Valley, and also the individual bonds, money, and material of divers persons pledged for the erection of county buildings in case the same should be located in the village or Little Valley, should be "and are hereby accepted on the part of the county, and the commissioners appointed by this board are hereby directed to apply the same or the proceeds thereof to the erection of such county buildings as are required to be erected for the county seat at the village of Little Valley." Another special town meeting was held in Little Valley, November 30, 1866, and a resolution adopted appropriating an additional sum of $5,000 to aid in the erection of the county buildings.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Supervisors in November, 1867, the building commissioners submitted a report in which they stated that the contract for erecting the buildings had been let to Porter Welch, of Gowanda, for the sum of $29,500; that the court house and jail were built of brick with stone foundations (cut stone above ground), cut stone steps, window sills, window caps, belting, with slate roofs; and that the buildings were nearly completed. The commissioners further reported that they had received bonds of the town of Little Valley amounting to $15,000 and of Napoli amounting to $3,000, and personal bonds for an amount sufficient to guarantee the sum of $30,000 as required by resolution of the Board of Supervisors. They further reported that they had received title to the Board of Supervisors of five acres of land at a cost of one dollar. At the annual meeting of the board in November, 1868, the building commissioners submitted a report in which they stated that the buildings were substantially completed and that the commissioners had accepted the same; that the county clerk removed the records of his office from Ellicottville and occupied his office in the new court house on the 21st of May, 1868; that the sheriff removed the prisoners to the jail on the 28th of the same month, and the first session of the Supreme Court, Hon. George Barker presiding, was held in the court house on the 8th of June, 1868. They further say that "the towns of Little Valley and Napoli have complied with the stipulations made by them regarding the construction of the buildings and gift of the land."

November 25, 1868, the building commissioners made a final report, stating that they had settled with Porter Welch, the contractor, for building the court house and jail. The report was accepted, the commissioners were discharged, and their bonds ordered cancelled. The old county buildings at Ellicottville were sold to that town for $1,000.

A proposition to remove the county seat from Little Valley to Salamanca was presented to the Board of Supervisors in 1879, but was rejected. A like proposition with the same result was presented to the board in 1884 and again in 1891. During the time that these several propositions were under consideration by the board the general law of the State required a vote of two-thirds of the supervisors elected to the board to authorize a removal. By a general revision of the laws relating to boards of supervisors and county affairs in 1892 this rule was altered so as to permit a change of a county seat by a vote of a majority of the supervisors to be ratified by a vote of a majority of the voters at the succeeding general election. A petition for the removal of the county seat to Olean and also one for its removal to Salamanca were presented to the Board of Supervisors at their annual meeting in November, 1892. The Olean petition was rejected. A resolution based upon the petition for the removal of the county seat to Salamanca was adopted by a vote of eighteen to fifteen, as follows:

"Resolved, That the site of the court house, the county clerk's office, the sheriff's office, and the county jail, so described in said petition, be removed from their present location in the village of Little Valley in said county to the village of Salamanca in said county, as the boundaries of said village are now by law fixed, located, and determined, as shown by the proceedings to incorporate said village, and that the location of all said county offices so described be changed from the village of Little Valley to the village of Salamanca aforesaid."

To be effectual this resolution must be ratified by a majority of the votes cast upon the question at the general election in November, 1893.

COURTS OF COMMON PLEAS AND GENERAL SESSIONS.

It has already been stated that a Court of Common Pleas and General Sessions of the Peace was provided in each county during the colonial period. These courts were continued, with some modifications, after the organization of the State government. In the early years the number of judges composing the court varied in different counties, in some counties the number being as high as twelve. By an act passed March 27, 1818, the office of assistant justice was abolished and the number of judges was limited to five, including the first judge. This system was continued by the revised statutes and remained in force until the adoption of the constitution of 1846, when the Court of Common Pleas was superseded by the present County Courts.

The Common Pleas in this county was evidently a popular court. This is manifest from the amount of business done, which, during the entire period of its history, was very largely in excess of that transacted in the Circuit. It was the people's court; it possessed original and appellate jurisdiction ample for the litigation of the period. More than 400 causes were disposed of in this court from its organization in July, 1817, until the first Circuit was held in August, 1823; and from that time to the close of its existence, in 1847, 1,600 causes were tried in this court, while only 200 were disposed of in the Circuit during the same period. The Court of Common Pleas was in existence thirty years—from 1817 to 1847—and during that period it disposed of over 2,000 civil causes in some form or other, besides doing a large amount of criminal business and other incidental business which was within its jurisdiction. It was a hard working court. The terms were usually limited by statute to five days, and the records show that its sessions almost invariably began as early as 8 o'clock in the morning, and during the summer terms court was frequently opened at 7 o'clock. Under the practice then in force judgments could not be entered in vacation; all business was done at the term. This required all parties, witnesses, and attorneys to attend court and remain until their business was done. Before the advent of the railroad and the telegraph business at court could not be watched from a distance as now. Hence, "going to court" was an event as well as a business. The Circuits were not held very frequently nor very regularly. The judge came from a distance and was a stranger. The Common Pleas was held by men selected from the body of the county, acquainted with the people, their wants, their relations to each other and to the community, and it is not strange that the court should have been selected as the tribunal in which to settle the common differences and disputes which arose under pioneer conditions. Besides, the judges were men from the ranks of everyday business. Judge Porter, the first presiding judge of this court, was a lawyer. The others were business men and not trained lawyers, yet it is the universal testimony of the older members of the bar and others who remember this court that the Common Pleas judges were men of good sense and judgment, able to deal fairly with the questions which came before the court, and familiar with the principles upon which justice should be administered. The large amount of business done testifies to the confidence and respect in which the court was held by the people of the county.

James Brooks took the oath of office as judge May 27, 1817; Ashbel Freeman and Francis Green took the oath June 5th and William Price June 18th of the same year. July 1, 1817, Timothy H. Porter took the oath as first judge and again July 7, 1818. James Brooks was re-appointed judge in 1818 and again in 1820. James Adkins, Israel Curtis, Dan Allen, Ira Norton, William Kimball, and Royal Tefft were appointed judges during 1820, and James Adkins took the oath as first judge July 21st of that year. In 1821 Israel Curtis was re-appointed judge and Thomas Morris, Alson Leavenworth, and James Green were appointed judges. Judge Leavenworth was re-appointed in 1823, and was appointed first judge in 1828 and held the office until 1833. Griswold E. Warner, Benjamin Chamberlain, Phineas Spencer, and Peter Ten Broeck were appointed judges in 1823. James Parmelee was appointed judge in 1826. Dan Allen and Henry Day were appointed in 1828. Israel Day was appointed judge in 1829 and Andrew Mead in 1831. Benjamin Chamberlain took the oath of office as first judge March 1, 1833; he was re-appointed in 1838 and again in 1843. Dan Allen and Thomas J. Wheeler were appointed judges in 1833. Israel Day was re-appointed in 1834 and Richard Wright was appointed in 1836. Isaac Hall was appointed in 1838 and Frederick S. Martin in 1840. Ashbel H. Hurd was appointed judge in 1843, and Thomas J. Wheeler and Peter Ten Broeck were again appointed the same year. Rensselaer Lamb took the oath of office as judge January 18, 1845, and as county judge June 26, 1847, under the new constitution, succeeding Judge Chamberlain as first judge. Lewis P. Thorp was the last judge appointed to the old Court of Common Pleas, taking the oath of office January 29, 1846.

James Brooks, who was the first member of the old Court of Common Pleas to take the oath of office, was a son of Cornelius Brooks, a Revolutionary soldier who was taken prisoner at the battle of Long Island, and who came to this county in 1806. He permanently settled here in 1808. It is said in Everts's History of the county that "Judge Brooks was noted for his profuse hospitality, and it is said by one who knew him well that for several years prior to his death the family scarcely ever sat down to a meal without some visitor. The judge's residence was familiarly known as the 'Methodist Tavern' and 'House of Refuge' from the fact that the itinerancy of the Methodist church always found a cordial welcome there. Judge Brooks was reverently recognized as the father of Methodism in this part of the country. He was also a firm supporter of the temperance cause." He was an ardent abolitionist and his house was frequently made a station on the "underground railroad" by fugitive slaves escaping to Canada. Judge Brooks died at the old homestead April 17, 1854.

Ashbel Freeman, who was also a member of the first Court of Common Pleas, was one of the early settlers of Farmersville, where he lived several years until his death in 1823. A daughter of Judge Freeman married Peter Ten Broeck, who was afterwards a member of the same court.

Francis Green, another member of the first court, came to Great Valley from New Hampshire about 1812 and settled with his brother Richard near the mouth of Wright's creek. Judge Green represented the town of Great Valley on the Board of Supervisors in 1828, 1838, 1840, and 1842.

William Price, who took the oath of office as a member of the court June 18, 1817, was a resident of the town of Freedom. At the first town meeting held in that town, in 1821, he was elected supervisor and was again elected in 1828, 1829, and 1830.

A sketch of Timothy H. Porter, first judge of the court, will be found in this chapter on a subsequent page.

James Adkins, who became a member of the court February 28, 1820, seems to have been a resident of Ellicottville.

Israel Curtis, who took the oath of office February 28, 1820, came into that part of the county which is now Hinsdale in 1812, and settled upon lot 3, section 4, township 2, range 4. "A few years later Mr. Curtis purchased other lots situated in the central part of the town, and in 1820 was the owner of about one thousand acres. He was the first justice of the peace within the present limits of Hinsdale, the first supervisor, and in 1817 was appointed the first sheriff of Cattaraugus county. He was also an early innkeeper at the stand first opened by Elihu Murray, Jr. He is described as having been a gentleman of large proportions, commanding presence, educated, and the possessor of ability of a high order. He removed to the far west in 1826. Judge Curtis represented the town of Olean on the Board of Supervisors in 1820 and the town of Hinsdale in 1821-23, and was chairman of the board in 1820 and 1823. He also had the honor of being defendant in the first case in the Court of Common Pleas.

Dan Allen, who also became a member of the court in 1820, was one of the early settlers of the town of Perrysburg, from which the town of Persia was afterwards formed. The first settlement in that part of the county which is now the town of Persia was made by Ahaz Allen, a brother of Judge Allen, who came to the county from Vermont. Judge Allen came from Cayuga county in 1813 and engaged with his brother Ahaz in carrying on some of the most important pioneer enterprises. He represented the town of Perrysburg on the Board of Supervisors in 1819.

Ira Norton, who took the oath of office July 25, 1820, was one of the early settlers of the town of Great Valley. He came to Franklinville in 1807, and in 1816 located on a farm near Peth. He was the father of the late Nelson I. Norton, of Hinsdale (q. v.).

William Kimball, who also became a member of the court July 25, 1820, lived in Hinsdale.

Royal Tefft, who took the oath of office August 1, 1820, was a resident of Little Valley. He was supervisor of the town in 1819 and 1820.

Thomas Morris became a member of the court in 1821, and was also a resident of Hinsdale, or of that part of the town embraced in the present limits of Ischua.

Alson Leavenworth, who became an associate judge in 1821, again in 1823, and first judge in 1828, was a prominent physician, and a sketch of his career appears on page 149.

James Green, who took the office of associate judge March 28, 1821, is credited with being the first permanent settler of Great Valley. He came from New Hampshire and located first at Olean Point, and is said to have built the first saw-mill in the town of Olean. He removed thence to near the mouth of Great Valley creek in 1812, being the first white inhabitant to locate on the Allegheny below Olean. Mr. Green was supervisor of the town of Great Valley in 1817 and 1819, and was chairman of the board both years. He afterwards removed to Illinois, where he died in 1854.

Griswold E. Warner took the oath of office February 18, 1823. James G. Johnson, late of Olean, in his "Pioneer Sketches" of the county, says that Judge Warner kept a store in a frame building in Olean, occupying the rear part as a dwelling for his family. "He was a man of large business capacity and remarkable sagacity; and while apparently careless, absent-minded, and deeply absorbed in his general manner, he was always cool, self-contained, quietly energetic, and efficient in all his business transactions. He was noted for his punctilious honesty and kindness of heart. Judge Warner went from Olean to Allegheny city opposite Pittsburg, where he purchased a large quantity of real estate, which became extremely valuable. His business was dealing in lumber, coal, or anything which promised him a profit. He soon became a wealthy and prominent man both in Allegheny city and Pittsburg. He was the principal stockholder in the Second National Bank of Pittsburg. He died a few years ago at the advanced age of eighty or more years, having survived every member of his family except one daughter."

Benjamin Chamberlain* was born July 31, 1791, in the town of Mt. Vernon, Kennebec county, Me., where he resided until he was about ten years of age, when his father and his family removed to the county of Allegany, N. Y., and settled in the town of Belfast on the Genesee river. At that time the whole of western New York was little better than a wilderness, and the rewards of industry and enterprise here were only to be reached through scenes of toils and trials and privations that often tried the sternest energies of those who possessed the courage to encounter them. The family of Judge Chamberlain, like most of our countrymen, were in humble life. Their lot was cast amongst millions whose fate it is to toil, endure, and suffer, and to win their way to such positions of prosperity or distinction as it may be their fortune to attain, unaided and alone. At that early period the educational advantages of this portion of the State were extremely limited. Schools of any description were scarcely known, and the instruction of children was mostly confined to such information as the parents were able to impart or as might be secured by their own unaided efforts. The subject of our sketch had none of the advantages that are placed within the reach of the youth of the present day, and he was compelled by stern necessity, not only by want of opportunity, but a want of means, to set out in the journey of life without any of the aids derived from a proper training in the schools. In March, 1807, when only sixteen years of age, Chamberlain left his home to commence a career seldom equalled in its leading features among the self-made men of the country. Without money or clothes except such as were upon his back, barefoot and alone, he went to Olean in search of employment. Here he commenced work for Maj. Adam Hoops, the founder of the village, and labored diligently by the month for five years. His employment was mostly in saw-mills and at the various branches of lumbering, which was at that time the principal business of the county. As he increased in years and grew in strength his intellect expanded and his powers enlarged until the position of a laborer in a saw-mill at wages by the month could no longer satisfy his ambition, or afford a sufficient field for his energies and active capacity for business. And he began to look about for a wider avenue for usefulness and wealth. In company with a Mr. McKay, long since deceased, he erected a saw-mill in Great Valley and engaged in the business of lumbering, which he steadily followed to within a few years of his death. Soon after the mill was completed it was destroyed by fire. Chamberlain lost all he had, and was not only left without a dollar, but not entirely free from debts, which had been contracted in the business, and McKay was found to be utterly insolvent. Chamberlain determined to rebuild the mill and set to work alone to provide the means. It is said that at this time there was but one merchant doing business in the county. This was Capt. Henry De Forest, who was trading at Olean. Chamberlain applied to him for aid and was readily granted a credit of $1,000 in goods, which enabled him to reconstruct his mill and again embark in business. Judge Chamberlain often attributed his successful commencement in the world to Captain De Forest and regarded him in grateful remembrance as the founder of his fortunes. The rebuilding of the mill was carried on under great disadvantages. The ironwork for the mill had to be transported from Pittsburg in canoes on the Allegheny river, and pork and flour were obtained in the same laborious and expensive manner. From this time for forty-five years Judge Chamberlain enjoyed a degree of prosperity and an unbounded credit seldom secured by any individual.

Aside from his extensive business transactions Mr. Chamberlain was largely identified with the political history of the county of Cattaraugus. On the 25th of July, 1817, he took the oath of office as under-sheriff with Israel Curtis, who was the first sheriff. He held the office of sheriff from February 17, 1820, to June 1st of the same year, and from February 12, 1821, to December 31, 1822. By the constitution of 1821 the office was made elective by the people and at the second election in November, 1825, he was chosen sheriff and served until December, 1828. Having previously served as associate judge of the Court of Common Pleas of the county, with Alson Leavenworth as first judge, Mr. Chamberlain was appointed by the late Governor Marcy first judge of the Common Pleas of Cattaraugus county February 15, 1833. He was re-appointed by Governor Marcy in 1838 for a second term of five years, and again appointed for a third term by Governor Bouck in 1843 and served until June, 1847, when he was succeeded by Rensselaer Lamb under the constitution of 1846. Although Judge Chamberlain had no advantages of education nor the benefit of legal training, he possessed an unsurpassed practical business capacity. To an intuitive knowledge of the motives and characters of men he united a sagacity that penetrated clearly the forensic myths of the bar, enabling him to sift conflicting evidence and present every case in a plain, intelligible manner to the jury. His charges to juries are remembered as models of directness, brevity, and perspicuity. In consequence of his extensive business interests it is said that his own matters sometimes became complicated with those of litigants who came into the Common Pleas to settle their controversies. It is related that on one occasion an action of replevin for a lot of logs was being tried in his court and both parties gave evidence tending to establish their respective claims of title to the property. Judge Chamberlain's "charge" was substantially as follows: "Gentlemen of the jury: The plaintiff has given a good deal of evidence to show that the logs belong to him, and the defendant has also given a good deal of evidence to show that they belong to him. But, gentlemen, I charge you that they are both mistaken, the logs belong to me." In politics he acted with the Democratic party. In 1852 he was a member of the electoral college of the State of New York which cast the presidential vote of the State for Franklin Pierce and William R. King. Judge Chamberlain was prominent in the efforts at improvements of a public character in the county, and manifested a substantial interest in schools, contributing liberally towards the establishment of the Randolph Academy, and was president of the Board of Trustees of the institution from the beginning. In 1866 Judge Chamberlain advised his townsmen that he had decided to present the sum of $50,000 to the academy in order to enlarge its sphere of usefulness and to place it upon broader foundations for the education and benefit of the coming generations. The citizens of Randolph purchased some twenty acres of land adjoining the academy grounds which was given to the institution, and on their petition the school was changed to the "Chamberlain Institute," by act of the Legislature, and transferred to the charge of the Erie Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, as desired by Judge Chamberlain, of which church he had for many years been a communicant. A commodious and elegant brick structure for the institute was erected upon this land by Judge Chamberlain. In addition to his gifts to this institution during his lifetime he made ample provision for it by will, and the school is now enjoying the benefits of his benevolence. At the age of twenty-one Judge Chamberlain married Lucy Hooker, who was then fifteen years old. The marriage took place in Allegany county, and they lived together fifty-seven years. Their only child was the first wife of the late Alonzo Hawley, of Hinsdale. To Mrs. Chamberlain should be given a large share of credit for the achievements of her husband. She rendered valuable aid to him in his operations, taking care of his business while he was away from home, employing hands, preparing and despatching the lumber to market, and maintaining the same vigilant and successful care over the business as though it were her proper place in life, and the great wealth which the judge accumulated was the result of their joint industry, intelligence, and perseverance. Judge Chamberlain came to Cattaraugus county in March, 1807, one year before its incorporation, and at the time of his death he was the oldest citizen by residence in the county. The first census of the county was taken in 1810 and it showed a white population of four hundred and fifty-eight. Judge Chamberlain, like all men of marked intellectual endowment, had some faults, but he was, nevertheless, one of the strongest and most successful business men this county has ever seen, possessing keen perceptions of the character and motives of men, endowed with wonderful sagacity and mental capacity of uncommon power, having a rare judgment of property values, with an unfaltering fund of humor, affable speech, and courteous manners. Judge Chamberlain died in Ellicottville, February 10, 1868.

Phineas Spencer lived in Gowanda and was one of the prominent politicians of the county in the early days. He represented Perrysburg (then embracing Persia) on the Board of Supervisors in 1822 and 1823, and was member of Assembly in 1824 and again in 1837. James T. Henry, in his "Personal Recollections," says of Mr. Spencer that "he was a man of few words, reticent, unassuming, but he bore about him a weight of character that gave him commanding influence with his fellow citizens."

Peter Ten Broeck was of German extraction, and was born in Somerset county, N. J., May 1, 1793. He was the eldest of five sons and the second of a family of ten children. In 1797 his father, Roeloff Ten Broeck, a farmer in moderate circumstances, removed with his family to Otsego county. The opportunities for acquiring an education in those days were very limited, and up to the age of thirteen young Peter had not seen the inside of a school room, and the little education he possessed had been imparted to him by his mother. The nearest school was three miles distant, and there he spent three months in the winter of 1806 acquiring a knowledge of figures. He had already learned to read and write tolerably well at home. This was all the schooling young Ten Broeck could boast until he attained his majority. He then felt his need of a better knowledge of grammar and the other rudiments of an English education. He therefore entered an academic institution then located at Sangersfield, Oneida county, spent six weeks in that institution, and there, as he said, "completed his education." In 1816, at the age of twenty-three, Mr. Ten Broeck left his father's house to seek his fortune. He traveled on foot to Erie, Pa. After giving the country some examination he set out on his return, passing through Mayville, Conewango, Little Valley, and Ellicottville and reaching a small settlement on Ischua creek, now the village of Franklinville, on the 6th of June, 1816. He reached home in the early part of July. In October of the same year Mr. Ten Broeck, with a younger brother, Cornelius, and Richard Tozer, started again for the west. They settled in the town of Farmersville, where they built a log house, but returned to Otsego county for the winter. About this time Mr. Ten Broeck with others made a tour through some of the western States looking for a chance to locate, which they failed in securing for want of money. They returned to Franklinville in August, 1817, and spent the following winter at his father's house in Otsego county. In February, 1818, accompanied by his brother Cornelius, Mr. Ten Broeck returned to Farmersville, where he afterward resided and became one of its most wealthy citizens. In 1822 he married Miss Freeman, a daughter of Ashbel Freeman, then one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas. It is said that he became the owner of between 5,000 and 6,000 acres of land made up entirely of improved farms. In addition to his farming business he was engaged in raising, purchasing, and driving cattle to market. He was a member of the Board of Supervisors from Ischua in 1821 and from Farmersville in 1827, 1837-38, and 1841-42, and was chairman of the board in 1841. He was appointed by Governor Yates an associate county judge in 1822 and served five years, and in 1837 was re-appointed by Governor Marcy and held the office until the abolition of the court by the new constitution of 1846. During the interim from 1827 to 1837 he was appointed an agent of the Holland Land Company, charged with the duty of collecting the debts due the company in the counties of Cattaraugus, Allegany, and Wyoming. In politics he was a Democrat and in 1842 was the candidate of his party for member of Congress, but was defeated by Asher Tyler. Judge Ten Broeck died August 5, 1863. In his last will and testament, after providing for the payment of certain legacies to relatives and friends amounting in all to $60,000, he directed that the balance of his estate, as fast as it could be prudently turned into ready means, should be expended in the construction and endowment of a literary institution to be known as the Ten Broeck Free Academy. This institution is located in the village of Franklinville, and is the educational center of that part of the county. "By reason of his sterling qualities of head and heart he possessed the entire confidence of the community in which he resided. As a neighbor he was quiet, kind, and obliging. As a citizen he was public spirited, ever forward in promoting the general weal. As a man he was the soul of honor and integrity, regarding his word as sacred, allowing no contingency of circumstances or probabilities of profit or loss to interfere with its positive and prompt fulfillment."

James Parmelee was one of the early settlers of the town of Freedom. He represented that town on the Board of Supervisors from 1823 to 1826 inclusive, and was chairman of the board in 1825 and 1826.

Henry Day seems to have been a resident of the town of Conewango. Facts concerning his history are very meager, but he appears to have been town clerk several terms and also to have held the office of justice of the peace.

Israel Day was a resident of Ellicottville, where he died May 4, 1852, in the sixty-ninth year of his age. At the time of his death the Cattaraugus Republican, a newspaper published in Ellicottville, said of him: "Judge Day was born at Killingly, Conn., in the year 1783. He resided for many years at Cooperstown, Otsego county. From thence he removed to Greene and lastly to this county. He has filled many places of honor and trust; judge of the County Courts, postmaster of this village, and was an acting magistrate of the town for many years. He was an active politician of the Democratic faith, and as a citizen maintained a consistent course in all the relations of life."

Andrew Mead (see also page 152) settled in Olean about the year 1820, where he immediately began practicing medicine, which he continued for twelve or fifteen years, when he gave up active practice. He took an active part in public affairs and held various town and county offices. He was for a long time acting magistrate in Olean, was appointed a member of the Court of Common Pleas in 1831, and in 1840 was appointed master and examiner in chancery. In 1847 he moved to Allegany, where he lived until his death in 1869. In 1868 he was supervisor of the town. In 1869 he fitted up a building on the west side of Main street in the village of Allegany, in which he lived alone, being a bachelor, and kept a grocery in the front part. On the evening of December 18, 1869, a young man named Theodore Nicholas entered the doctor's store and soon, in an altercation which arose between him and the doctor, seized an iron stove-poker and attacked the doctor so violently that he was rendered speechless from his wounds and died within a few hours. The murderer took about $55 from the doctor's pocket and also his watch, and locking the door as he went out hid the key and fled to Olean, whence he escaped to Buffalo. About a month afterward he was apprehended and brought back to jail at Little Valley. He made a full confession of his crime, was indicted by the grand jury in January, 1870, and immediately put upon his trial, Messrs. Scott & Laidlaw, of Ellicottville, having been assigned to defend him by Judge Barker, who presided at this term of court. He was convicted and sentenced to be executed on the 18th of March, 1870. Nicholas was executed on the day appointed and was the first person in the county to suffer the death penalty. About 1828 Dr. Mead was appointed the agent of the Holland Land Company in the location and construction of the road which was opened from Olean by way of Chapel hill and Ellicottville to Buffalo. The present route over Chapel hill was first looked out and marked through the woods by him. He is described as a man of decided opinions, and one who left his mark for good or evil distinctly impressed on everything he was in any way connected with. He does not seem to have had any general practice in courts of record, but did considerable business in justice's court.

Thomas J. Wheeler located in the village of Rutledge in the town of Conewango in 1826, and engaged in the practice of medicine, becoming one of the most skillful physicians in the county. He died there in 1875. He was a presidential elector in 1836 and represented the old Sixth Senatorial District in the State Senate in 1846 and 1847. A further sketch of Dr. Wheeler appears on page 120.

Richard Wright was one of the pioneers of the town of Great Valley, where about 1820 he built a saw-mill on Wright's creek, which takes its name from him, and after using the same four or five years he sold it to David Chamberlain. He represented the town of Great Valley on the Board of Supervisors in 1830 and the town of Burton (now Allegany) in 1836, and was elected sheriff of the county in 1837, serving a term of three years.

Isaac Hull lived in the town of Perrysburg and was supervisor of that town in 1835.

Frederick S. Martin was born in the county of Rutland, Vt., April 25, 1794, and was the youngest of six children. His father died before his recollection, and at the age of seven years he left his mother's home and spent three or four years with his relatives, who resided in that vicinity. At the age of ten he went to New Hartford, N. Y. He remained there five or six years and in 1810 went to Whitehall, where he was employed in a mercantile establishment. After spending two years there he took service as steward of the steamer Vermont, a government vessel plying on Lake Champlain. In 1815 he shipped from Newport, R. I., on board a merchantman as a common sailor. The vessel sailed to New Orleans and thence to Liverpool. He was gone about eighteen months on this voyage, when he returned home and soon after came to western New York, arriving at Olean in the spring of 1818, where he lived to the time of his death. In February, 1820, Mr. Martin married Miss Cornelia Russell, daughter of Samuel Russell, of Pike, Allegany county, one of the earliest settlers of that section. In 1821 Mr. Martin began keeping hotel in the "Coffee House," a small hotel then standing upon the present site of the Olean House. He carried on a lumber business in connection with the hotel. He kept this hotel ten years, when he leased it and entered into mercantile business, in which he was engaged for twenty years. "His integrity and uprightness were acknowledged by all, and he was known everywhere as a clear-headed, substantial merchant." Mr. Martin took an active interest in public affairs and held various public positions. In 1826 he was appointed by Governor Clinton major of the 226th Regiment New York State Militia, which position he held until 1830, when he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. He resigned his appointment in 1833. He was appointed post-master at Olean in December, 1830, and held the office nine years. He was appointed a judge of the County Courts in January, 1840, by Governor Seward; he held this office five years. He took an active interest in the construction of the Genesee Valley canal, which became an important outlet for southwestern New York. He was elected to the State Senate in 1847 and served in that body two years; he was elected to the Assembly in 1850. While a member of the Legislature he was a member of the Canal Committee, and by this means was enabled to render valuable service to the interest of a large portion of his constituents. In the fall of 1850 he was nominated and elected to the Thirty-second Congress. "Having decided to support the 'Compromise Measures of 1850' and the leading acts and policy of Mr. Fillmore's administration he did not falter or turn to the right or to the left in doing what he could to render that administration efficient and acceptable to the people of his district. His course in Congress was marked, as his whole public life had been, with a consciousness of the important trust committed to him, and every act of his while there will bear the closest scrutiny. He earned the confidence and esteem of his colleagues, and won for himself an enviable reputation for industry and integrity. His acute discernment and comprehensive line of thought made him a distinguished man among his fellow members; and when he rose to give his views upon any subject—and these cases were rare, for he was a man of few words—he commanded close attention, and was listened to with more than ordinary gratification." Judge

Martin also took some interest in local affairs, representing Olean on the Board of Supervisors in 1830-31, 1836, and 1838.

Ashbel H. Hurd was an associate judge appointed in 1843. He was a practicing lawyer in Gowanda and a further sketch of him appears in this chapter under the head of "The Bar."

Rensselaer Lamb became a member of the Court of Common Pleas in 1845, and was also county judge under the new constitution of 1846. He was a practicing lawyer.—See "The Bar."

Lewis P. Thorp was one of the early settlers of Napoli and was the last judge appointed to the old Court of Common Pleas. He took the oath of office January 29, 1846, and served while the court continued in existence. Judge Thorp was a native of Delaware county, N. Y., where he was born in March, 1801. He came to Napoli in 1820. He was a leading citizen of the town, holding various public positions, among them that of supervisor in 1845, which he filled to the satisfaction of his constituents and with honor to himself. He also held the office of county superintendent of the poor and was a member of Assembly in 1842; he was a Democrat of the Jeffersonian stripe. He died at his old home February 17, 1868.

The records show that several of the judges were admitted to practice in the Common Pleas, taking the oath of office as follows: Timothy H. Porter, July 6, 1819; Alson Leavenworth, June 20, 1833; Dan Allen, October 5, 1833; Israel Day, October 5, 1833; Andrew Mead, October 30, 1833; Ashbel H. Hurd, October 5, 1836; Isaac Hull, February 11, 1843; and Thomas J. Wheeler, February 7, 1844. Judges Porter, Mead, and Hurd are the only members of the court who engaged in practice. The admission of the others seems to have been only formal. The court minutes show that Judge Chamberlain was admitted as an attorney at the October term, 1833, but the oath book does not contain his name. He did not engage in practice.

The first court held in the county was the Court of Common Pleas and the record begins as follows:

"Cattaraugus Common Pleas, July term, 1817.

"At a Court of Common Pleas, held in and for the County of Cattaraugus, at the house of William Baker, in the village of Hamilton, in said county, on the first day of July, 1817. Present, Hon. T. H. Porter, first judge; James Brooks, Ashbel Freeman, judges."

The first order related to a seal. "It is ordered that the seal, the impression of which is on the margin hereof, be and it is hereby constituted the seal of the county of Cattaraugus." This seal consisted of the words "Cattaraugus County" around the margin of a circle with the word "Seal" in the center. The second order was as follows:

"Ordered that the rules of the Court of Common Pleas, in and for the County of Allegany, be adopted as the rules of this court until the said rules shall be revised by the committee heretofore appointed by the said court of Allegany and the Court of Common Pleas in and for the County of Steuben, and until others shall be adopted.

"It is further ordered by the court that Daniel Cruger, Zephaniah Z. Caswell, David Higgins, Jun., and Alvan Burr, who have heretofore been admitted to practice as attorneys and counsellors of the Court of Common Pleas in and for the County of Allegany, be admitted as attorneys and counsellors of this court; and also, that Asa Hazen, who, it appears, has been admitted to practice as an attorney of the Supreme Court of this State, be likewise admitted as an attorney and counsellor of this court.

"The several gentlemen above named having severally taken and subscribed the oaths required by law, it is ordered that they be accordingly admitted as attorneys and counsellors of this court."

July 2d court opened. The first case is that of David McCurdy vs. Israel Curtis. "Alvan Burr, attorney for defendant, having by virtue of a special warrant of attorney signed and filed a cognovit, confessing the debt in this cause to $160, on motion of Daniel Cruger for plaintiff ordered judgment for the sum." William Fowler, Luther C. Carner, Calvin T. Chamberlain, and Cyrus Niles, constables, attended. The next court was ordered held at the same place. A Court of General Sessions was held at the same time by the same judges. A grand jury attended, but had no business or at least reported no indictments.

The next term of the Court of Common Pleas and General Sessions was held at the house of William Baker, in the town of Olean, in November, 1817, by Judges Porter, Freeman, and William Price. The first civil case tried by a jury was Ebenezer Reed vs. Andrew B. Northrop, and the jurors were Seth Markham, John D. Ensign, Obadiah Vaughn, Nathan Cole, Parley Warner, John McFall, Solomon Rawson, William Rawson, Lynds Dodge, Harvey Parker, Luke Goodspeed, and Jedediah Strong. The plaintiff's witnesses were Zachariah Oosterhoudt, William Kennard, Silas Knight, and Lynds Dodge; the defendant's witnesses were William Annin and Luke Goodspeed. It will be observed that both parties called a juror as a witness. A verdict was rendered for the plaintiff for $91.59. An order was entered appointing Z. Z. Caswell, Alvan Burr, and Asa Hazen a committee to prepare a set of rules to be adopted by the court and present the same at the next term. At the Court of General Sessions a grand jury was sworn, consisting of Levi Gregory, foreman, Charles Price, Robert Bard, Earl Willson, Joel W. Cary, Lewis Wooster, Daniel Huntley, Russell Chapel, John Hager, Thomas Morris, Ralph Hill, Abram M. Farwell, and Samuel Barrows. "The grand jury retired under the care of a constable, returned into court, and having had no business before them were discharged by the court."

A term of the Court of Common Pleas and General Sessions was held in February, 1818, by Ashbel Freeman, Francis Green, and James Brooks, judges, and William Price, assistant justice. At this term William Woods and Henry Wells were admitted to practice as attorneys. A Court of General Sessions was held at the same time by the same judges; little business was done. "The grand jury retired under the care of a constable, returned into court, presented a bill of indictment against Fatty, an Indian, etc., and having no further business before them were discharged by the court." This was the first indictment in the county, but the court minutes do not state the offence. "Fatty" gave bail to appear at the following July term; Zephaniah Z. Caswell and Cornelius Brooks were his sureties. James Green and Benjamin Chamberlain also gave bail to appear as witnesses in the case.

The July term of the Court of Common Pleas and General Sessions, 1818, was held by Timothy H. Porter, Francis Green, and James Brooks, judges. The minutes contain the following list of "constables of Cattaraugus county": Nathaniel Levy, William Chamberlain, Benjamin Chamberlain, Richard Green, John Thacher, Peter Ten Broeck, Henry Saxton, and Isaac Carpenter. Nathaniel Levy, William Chamberlain, John Thacher, and Peter Ten Broeck were fined $10 each for default in attending court. This must have been a busy term of the Common Pleas, for the court minutes show that forty-five cases were disposed of. "Fatty, an Indian," was tried at this term of the General Sessions. This was the first criminal trial in the county, and the following jurors sat in the case: Ezra Mead, Joseph McCluer, Samuel Rowley, Elijah Rice, John Grover, Ira Norton, Timothy Butler, James Makepeace, Enoch Howlett, Thomas Morris, Lewis Wood, and David McCluer. H. Wells was attorney for the people; the name of the defendant's counsel is not given. James Green and Benjamin Chamberlain were witnesses for the people and Simeon Hicks and Jared Benedict for the defendant. "The jury having heard the proofs and allegations of the parties say they find the prisoner not guilty."

The November term, 1818, was held by Judges James Brooks, Ashbel Freeman, and Francis Green. At this term James Mullett, Jr., John A. Bryan, and Levi S. Littlejohn applied for admission as attorneys, and A. Hazen, Z. Z. Caswell, and A. Burr were appointed a committee for their examination. The grand jury had no business before them at this term.

The February term, 1819, was held by Judges Porter, Green, and Brooks; the July term was held by Judges Green, Freeman, and Brooks, and at this term Timothy H. Porter applied for admission to the bar. It appearing that he had already been admitted to practice in Tioga county, and that he had been examined by Mr. Cruger in Allegany county, he was admitted to practice here on taking the oath. It will be observed that he was already a judge of the court. Milton B. Canfield presented a license showing that he had been admitted to practice in the Common Pleas in the counties of Tioga, Seneca, and Tompkins; a committee, consisting of Messrs. Burr, Caswell, and Porter, was appointed to examine him, and he was duly admitted here. Timothy H. Porter having resigned as first judge an order was entered on the 7th of July that all writs be tested in the name of Ashbel Freeman, senior judge.

The November term of the Common Pleas, 1819, was opened with Judges Freeman and Brooks and the Sessions with the same judges with the addition of Robert P. McGlashan. The February term, 1820, was held with the following judges: James Brooks, James Adkins, Israel Curtis, and Dan Allen. At the November term, 1820, James Adkins was first judge and William Kimball, Royal Tefft, Ira Norton, and Dan Allen were judges. At this term the rules of the Court of Common Pleas of Steuben county regulating the practice on appeals from justices' judgments were adopted as the rules of this court.

The February term, 1821, was held by Judges Adkins, Tefft, and Norton; the July term by Judges Adkins, Green, and Leavenworth; the November term by the same judges together with Israel Curtis and Thomas Morris additional associate justices. At this term Lewis Peet was convicted of the crime of petit larceny and fined $10, which he paid. This was the first criminal conviction by jury in the county. Jerry Birch was convicted at the same term of "inveigling" and sentenced to five years at Auburn. This was the first imprisonment. At this term George A. S. Crooker presented certificates of "classical and juridical studies" for five years. He was admitted to examinations by a committee composed of M. B. Canfield, Timothy H. Porter, and J. L. Tillinghast, and on their favorable report was admitted to practice. Moses Sawyer was also admitted at the same term, coming from Washington county.

The February term, 1822, was held by Judges Green, Curtis, and Morris. The rules of practice of the Court of Common Pleas of Steuben county were adopted to take effect March 20, 1822. The July term was held by James Adkins, first lodge, with Leavenworth, Curtis, and Morris associates. Hon. William B. Rochester was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas at this term. An order was made extending the jail liberties to four hundred and thirty-eight acres. The November term was held by Judges Adkins, Leavenworth, and Morris. This order was entered: "Ordered that the rules respecting non-resident attorneys be so arranged that they may appoint any gentleman their agent who is not an attorney, and who resides within one mile of the court house."

The February term, 1823, was held by Judges Alson Leavenworth, Griswold E. Warner, Phineas Spencer, and Peter Ten Broeck. "Ordered, on motion of Asa Hazen, that Alson Leavenworth, Esq., be known as senior judge of this court, and that all writs hereafter returnable therein be tested in his name." Messrs. Porter, Hazen, and Henry Bryan were appointed a committee to draft rules of practice. At this term of the General Sessions, held in connection with the Common Pleas, Henry Bryan was appointed district attorney. The courts at this time were opened by proclamation.

The June term of the Common Pleas, 1823, was held by the same judges as the last with the addition of Benjamin Chamberlain. The October term was held by the same judges. By Chap. 101, Laws of 1823, the terms of the Courts of Common Pleas and General Sessions were changed to the third Tuesday of June, the second Tuesday of October, and the last Tuesday of January, and the courts might continue in session until the Saturday next succeeding, inclusive. By Chap. 122, Laws of 1823, Griswold E. Warner, one of the judges of the Common Pleas, was authorized and empowered to tax costs and sign records in cases where the first judge might theretofore alone act, and to make orders and tax costs in vacation.

The January term, 1824, was held by Judges Leavenworth, Chamberlain, and Ten Broeck; the June term was held by the same judges, together with Spencer and Morris. The jail liberties were extended to "about five hundred acres," according to a map on file. The October term, 1824, was held by Judges Leavenworth, Chamberlain, and Ten Broeck.

The January term, 1825, was held by Judges Leavenworth, Ten Broeck, and Warner; the June term by Leavenworth, Ten Broeck, and Spencer; and the October term by Leavenworth, Chamberlain, Ten Broeck, and Warner.

The January term, 1826, was held by Judges Warner, Spencer, and Ten Broeck. At this term John W. Howe and Chauncey J. Fox were admitted to the bar. John A. Bryan, Asa Hazen, and Z. Z. Caswell were the examining committee in each case. The June term, 1826, was held by Judges Warner, James Parmelee, and Alson Leavenworth; the October term by Leavenworth, first judge, and Ten Broeck, Parmelee, and Spencer, assistant judges.

January term, 1827, same as last. At this term the court adopted a new seal. At the General Sessions held at the same time George A. S. Crooker was appointed district attorney pro tem. June term, 1827, same as last. June 20, 1827, "ordered by the court that the clerk of this court be and he is hereby required to procure proper books for, and to make general indexes of, all the deeds and mortgages which have been heretofore recorded in this county, in pursuance of an act for making general indices passed April 28, 1826." Russell C. Bryan was admitted at this term. The October term, 1827, was held by Judges Leavenworth, Warner, Parmelee, and Ten Broeck. At the General Sessions C. J. Fox was appointed district attorney pro tem.

The January term, 1828, was held by Judges Warner, Spencer, and Parmelee. Albert G. Burke and Luther C. Peck were admitted to practice at this term. The June term was held by Judges Alson Leavenworth, Dan Allen, and Henry Day; the October term by Judges Parmelee, Allen, and Day.

The January term, 1829, was held by Judges Leavenworth, Allen, and Day; the June term by Judges Leavenworth, Parmelee, Israel Day, and Henry Day. Mark W. Fletcher was admitted to practice at this term on a certificate from Erie county. The court at this term made an order "that an attorney and counsellor of any court of record of other States shall, on the production of his license, be admitted to practice as an attorney and counsellor of this court on the principles of reciprocity." The October term was held by Judges Leavenworth, Allen, Parmelee, Israel Day, and Henry Day.

The January, June, and October terms, 1830, were held by the same judges, except that Henry Day was not present at the October term. At the January term Henry Bryan was appointed to prepare a set of court rules and Dudley Bryan was admitted to practice. At the October term the following order was entered: "Ordered by the Court of Common Pleas that the supervisors be and they are hereby directed to cause five solitary cells to be prepared in the jail of the county of Cattaraugus for the reception of convicts who may be sentenced to punishment therein."

The January term, 1831, was held by the same judges, and also the June term, except that Andrew Mead served in place of Judge Parmelee. The October term was held by Judges Leavenworth, Allen, Mead, and Israel Day. Charles E. Beardsley and Elijah Griswold were admitted to practice.

The January term, 1832, was held by Judges Leavenworth, Henry Day, Mead, and Allen. Samuel M. Russell and Lyman Scott, Jr., were admitted to practice February 1, 1832, after an examination by a committee composed of Messrs. Gibbs, C. J. Fox, and Porter. The June and October terms were held by the same judges except that Henry Day was not present.

The January term, 1833, was held by Judges Leavenworth, Israel Day, Henry Day, Mead, and Allen. Josiah Ward and James Burt were admitted as attorneys, having been previously admitted to the Supreme Court. Chester Howe was admitted to practice on motion of Albert G. Burke after an examination by Messrs. Porter, Bryan, and Burke. The June term was held by Israel Day, Dan Allen, and Thomas J. Wheeler. Cephas R. Leonard was admitted at this term from Erie county. At the October term Benjamin Chamberlain first assumed the office of first judge of the court. Andrew Mead, Israel Day, Thomas J. Wheeler, and Dan Allen were associate judges. Peter V. S. Wendover and Josiah S. Masters were admitted at this term. William Waith was also admitted from the English King's Bench on affidavits showing that he was entitled to practice in that court. Dan Allen, Benjamin Chamberlain, Israel Day, and John W. Staunton were also admitted at this term on motion of Eleazar Harmon, without examination.

The January, June, and October terms, 1834, were held by the same judges. Charles C. Severance was admitted at the January term and David McCluer at the October term.

The January, June, and October terms, 1835, were held by the same judges. Homer H. Stewart was admitted at the June term, also John E. Niles, who came from McKean county, Pa. Austin C. Chipman and Thomas J. Sutherland were admitted at the October term.

The January term, 1836, was held by the same judges, except Allen, who was not present. The June term was held by Judges Allen, Israel Day, Wheeler, Mead, and Richard Wright; the October term by Judges Chamberlain, Israel Day, Allen, Wheeler, and Wright. Joseph T. Lyman was admitted to practice on motion from the Supreme Court; Wales Emmons was admitted from Erie county; James J. Strang was admitted after examination.

The January term, 1837, was held by the same judges as the last term. At this term Orson Stiles, Joseph E. Weeden, and Alanson Coats were admitted from the Supreme Court. February 11, 1837, the following order was entered: "Ordered by the court that Josiah S. Masters be and he is hereby suspended from practicing as an attorney and counsellor of this court on account of gross intemperance." The June term was held by the same judges as the last. Samuel P. Johnson was admitted to practice from Pennsylvania; Cyrus G.

McKay was admitted on examination. The October term was held by the same judges. Seth Lockwood was admitted to practice upon examination.

The January term, 1838, was held by the same judges, except Wright, who was not present. William A. Stewart was admitted at this term after an examination. The June term was held by Judges Israel Day, Wheeler, Peter, Ten Broeck, and Isaac Hull. Charles H. S. Williams, Daniel Reed Wheeler, and Roderick White were admitted from the Supreme Court. Leverett Spring was admitted from Genesee county and Lester Cross after an examination by a committee. An order was entered at this term that thereafter the rule for the admission of attorneys and counselors in this court be the same as the rule for the admission of attorneys in the Supreme Court. The October term was held by Judges Chamberlain, Israel Day, and Ten Broeck. D. C. Bailey was admitted to practice.

No court was held in January, 1839. The June term, 1839, was held by Judges Israel Day, Wheeler, and Hull, and the October term by Judges Chamberlain, Day, Hull, Wheeler, and Ten Broeck.

The January term, 1840, was held by Judges Chamberlain, Ten Broeck, Frederick S. Martin, and Thomas J. Wheeler. Nelson P. Willson was admitted at this term on examination. The June term was held by the same judges as the last, except Judge Chamberlain, who was not present. Madison Bur-nell was admitted to practice at this term, on motion. The October term was held by Judges Chamberlain, Hull, Martin, and Wheeler. John W. Turner and Stephen T. Bentley were admitted to practice after examination.

The January term, 1841, was held by the same judges as the last; the June term by Judges Wheeler, Hull, and Ten Broeck. Elisha Ward and Orville C. Pratt were admitted on motion.

The October term, 1841, the January, June, and October terms, 1842, and the January term, 1843, were held by Judges Chamberlain, Martin, Wheeler, Ten Broeck, and Hull, except that Chamberlain was not present at the June term. William T. Mitchell and Peter Maſten were admitted at the January term, 1842. Dolphin Stevenson, Albert Sawin, and Charles S. Macomber were admitted at the June term, 1842. At the October term, 1842, A. B. Fenner was admitted from Chautauqua county. At the January term, 1843, Theodore Smith was admitted to practice after an examination by a committee composed of Anson Gibbs, Roderick White, and William P. Angel. Lewis D. Simonds was admitted on motion from the Supreme Court and Orange Rose after an examination. The June term, 1843, was held by Judges Martin, Wheeler, Ten Broeck, and Ashbel H. Hurd. Wolcott Hatch was admitted from Allegany county and James M. Gillett from Steuben county. Horatio N. Jacobs, Addison G. Rice, and Robert Owen, Jr., were admitted upon examination. The October term, 1843, was held by Judges Chamberlain, Wheeler, and Ten Broeck. Benjamin F. Green was admitted to practice from Chautauqua county.

The January term, 1844, was held by Judges Chamberlain, Wheeler, Ten Broeck, Martin, and Hurd. William L. Starke was admitted upon examination; also Alexander Storrs, who was examined by a committee composed of Messrs. Harmon, W. P. Angel, and Roderick White. February 7, 1844, on motion of F. S. Martin, and by the concurrence of the court, it was "ordered that Thomas J. Wheeler be and he is hereby admitted an attorney and counselor." The June term was held by Judges Chamberlain, Wheeler, Ten Broeck, and Hurd and the October term by Judges Wheeler, Martin, and Hurd. Allen C. Fuller was admitted to practice at this term after an examination.

The January term, 1845, was held by Judges Chamberlain, Wheeler, Rensselaer Lamb, and Ten Broeck. Gideon L. Walker was admitted from Allegany county. Nelson Cobb, who had been admitted to practice in Allegany county in June, 1844, was admitted to practice in this county at this term on motion of James Burt. Edwin O. Locke was admitted on examination by a committee composed of James Burt, W. P. Angel, and D. J. Pulling. G. W. Gillet was admitted, without examination, on motion of Benjamin Chamberlain. The June term was held by Judges Chamberlain, Wheeler, Lamb, Ten Broeck, and Hurd and the October term by Hurd, Wheeler, and Lamb. Azel B. Hamilton was admitted at this term; also Milton L. Rice after an examination by a committee composed of George A. S. Crooker, D. R. Wheeler, and Theodore Smith.

The January term, 1846, was held by Chamberlain, Hurd, Lamb, and Ten Broeck. Orlo J. Hamlin was admitted to practice from the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. The June term was held by Judges Chamberlain, Lewis P. Thorp, Lamb, Hurd, and Ten Broeck. At this term Alexander Sheldon and Charles P. Washburn were admitted after an examination by J. E. Weeden, D. R. Wheeler, and William H. Wood. The October term was held by Judges Chamberlain, Thorp, Lamb, and Hurd.

The January term, 1847, was held by the same judges, with the addition of Judge Ten Broeck. William H. Andrews was admitted at this term, also Benjamin Mosher after an examination by a committee composed of Messrs. Crooker, Gibbs, and Pliny L. Fox. The May term of this year was held by Judges Hurd, Thorp, and Lamb. This was the last term of the old Court of Common Pleas.

Courts of General Sessions of the Peace were held at the same time as the Courts of Common Pleas and by the same judges, which courts were usually attended by a grand jury and disposed of the ordinary criminal matters arising in the county.

The judges of the Court of Common Pleas were compensated for their services by fees, and were allowed $2 for each day of actual attendance upon the Court of Oyer and Terminer or the County Court. This per diem allowance was made a charge upon the county. Other fees were paid by the parties interested. The first judge received a fee of $1 for signing a license to practice as an attorney and counselor.

THE COUNTY COURT.

By section 14 of article 6 of the constitution of 1846 provision was made for the election in each of the counties of this State of one county judge "who shall hold his office for four years." He was required to hold the County Court and perform the duties of the office of surrogate. It was further provided that "the County Court shall have such jurisdiction in cases arising in justices' courts and in special cases as the Legislature may prescribe, but shall have no original jurisdiction except in such special cases." The county judge, with two justices of the peace, was authorized to hold Courts of Sessions, with such criminal jurisdiction as the Legislature shall prescribe. It was further provided that the county judge should receive an annual salary to be fixed by the Board of Supervisors, which should be neither increased or diminished during his continuance in office. And the Legislature was authorized to confer equity jurisdiction in special cases upon the county judge. The old County Courts or Courts of Common Pleas ceased to exist on the first Monday of July, 1847, and the new County Court, created by the constitution, then assumed its powers and jurisdiction.

By "An Act Relating to the Judiciary," passed May 12, 1847, which was enacted for the purpose of re-organizing the courts pursuant to the provisions of the new constitution, the County Court was given power "to hear, try, and determine, according to law, the following actions when all the defendants at the time of commencing the action reside in the county in which said court is held: Actions of debt, assumpsit, and covenant when the debt or damages claimed shall not exceed $2,000; actions for assault and battery, and false imprisonment, when the damages claimed do not exceed $500; actions of trespass, and trespass on the case for injuries to real or personal property, when the damages claimed shall not exceed $500; actions of replevin when the value of the property claimed does not exceed $1,000; and also to grant new trials in all such actions, suits, or proceedings."

The County Court was also clothed with equity jurisdiction in various cases, including foreclosure of mortgages, sales of infants' real estate, care and custody of lunatics and habitual drunkards, actions for partition, and the admeasurement of dower. The County Court on appeal from justices' courts possessed the same jurisdiction as had been previously exercised by the Court of Common Pleas.

Article 6 of the constitution was amended in 1869. The term of office of the county judge was extended to six years, and the general original jurisdiction of the court in all actions where the defendants reside in the county was limited to cases where the damages claimed do not exceed $1,000.

As already stated the principal part of the business in courts of record was done in the Court of Common Pleas while that court was in existence, and comparatively little business was transacted in the Supreme Court. The relative position of the County Court and the Supreme Court has been reversed since the re-organization of courts under the constitution of 1846, and a very large part of original business in courts of record is now done in the Supreme Court.

Few original actions are now brought in the County Court, although this court has jurisdiction of a large majority of cases brought in courts of record. The civil business of the court is confined principally to cases on appeal from justices' court; but a large share of the criminal business of the county is not transacted in the Court of Sessions, the Oyer and Terminer only giving its attention to trials in cases of homicide or a few of the other more important crimes. No grand jury now attends the Court of Sessions in this county. Indictments are found by the grand jury attending the Oyer and Terminer, and in nearly all cases are sent to the Court of Sessions for trial or other disposition.

Rensselaer Lamb was the first county judge under the new constitution, taking the oath of office June 26, 1847. He was elected the same year and served until December 31, 1850, when he was succeeded by Chester Howe, who had been elected the preceding November. Nelson Cobb was elected in 1855 and served until the fall of 1859, when he resigned and moved to Kansas. He was succeeded by William Woodbury, who was appointed November 30, 1859, to fill the vacancy, and who had been elected at the general election held the same month for a full term, to begin on the first of January following. David H. Bolles was elected in 1863, but resigned in January, 1866, when he was succeeded by Rensselaer Lamb, who was appointed to fill the vacancy. Judge Lamb was re-elected the same year for a full term. He was succeeded January 1, 1871, by Samuel S. Spring, who died before the end of his term, and was succeeded on August 18, 1875, by William H. Henderson. Allen D. Scott was elected in 1875 for a term of six years and was re-elected in 1881. He served to the end of his term and was succeeded on January 1, 1888, by Oliver S. Vreeland, who is the present county judge.

Until 1857 the county judge also performed the duties of the office of surrogate and received a salary of $1,000 as his compensation for services in both offices. In 1857 the Legislature passed an act creating the office of surrogate in this county, and the Board of Supervisors at its annual meeting in that year fixed the salary of the surrogate at $600 upon a stipulation filed by Judge Cobb that he would consent to receive $900 a year as his salary as county judge for the balance of his term.

The Board of Supervisors of Cattaraugus county in the year 1859 fixed the salary of the county judge at $650, and the salary remained at this sum until 1866, when it was increased to $800. May 17, 1872, a general act was passed by the Legislature of the State fixing the salaries of county judges, and the salary in this county was fixed at $1,500 and it has since remained at that sum.

SURROGATES' COURTS.

The development of Surrogates' Courts illustrates the suggestion already made, that our judicial system is a growth of the soil. The present Probate Court had numerous progenitors, and is the result of a combination of several of the early courts. Chief Justice Charles P. Daly, of the New York Common Pleas, in Brick's Estate, 15 Abbott's Practice Reports, 12, gives an interesting and exhaustive sketch of the courts. From this account it appears that "when the colony of New York, or, as it was then called, New Amsterdam, was settled by the Dutch all judicial power was vested in a council composed of the director-general, the vice-director, and the schout fiscal. Afterwards a court was established of which the vice-director was the presiding judge, having associated with him members of the council, and in which the governor or director-general himself occasionally presided. Before this tribunal all matters pertaining to succession of estates, whether real or personal, were disposed of according to the Roman Dutch law, the custom of Amsterdam, and the law of Aasdom." In 1653 jurisdiction of all such matters was transferred to the Court of Burgomasters and Schepens. "Before this court wills were admitted to probate, letters of administration granted, curators appointed to take charge of the estates of widows and orphans, executors and administrators were compelled to account, and distribution was decreed." To relieve this court a Court of Orphan Masters was established in 1665. "After the conquest of the province by the English in 1664 the Court of Burgomasters and Schepens was changed into the Mayor's Court, a name by which it was known for one hundred and forty-six years afterwards, until the present name was given it, the Court of Common Pleas." After a short time the Court of Orphan Masters was discontinued and its jurisdiction exercised by the Mayor's Court, with some modifications and restrictions. About this time a body of laws, known as "the Duke's Laws," was promulgated for the government of the province. "By the Duke's Laws a constable and two overseers were required to proceed to the house of the deceased person, forty-eight days after the death, and inquire respecting his estate, and whether he had left any will. They were required further to take an inventory of his effects, appraise the value, and make a return of their proceedings, under oath, to the next Court of Sessions."

In 1686 the letter of instructions transmitted to Governor Dongan directed him, among other things, to see that the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury should, with some exceptions, be established and maintained in the province. In 1689 the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Bishop of London was added. This related to the settlement of estates. The Mayor's Court and the Court of Sessions continued to exercise the same juris-fiction as before, but the governor or secretary of the province also took proof of the execution of wills and of the inventory and appraisement of estates, and in 1691 Lieutenant-Governor Ingoldsby directed that a clause be inserted in all letters testamentary or of administration that the granting of such letters, the hearing of accounts, the reckoning of administration, and the granting of the final discharge belonged to the governor and not to any inferior judge. If a will was proved before the secretary he annexed a certificate that, "being thereunto delegated," the will had been duly proved before him. This proceeding was authenticated under the prerogative seal. In this way a distinct department grew up in the secretary's office which took the name of the prerogative office and the records connected with it the name of the Registry of the Prerogative; and by 1691 the whole became distinguished by the judicial appellation of the Prerogative Court. The secretary of the province was an officer independent of the governor, holding his appointment from the Crown—the duties of which he discharged chiefly through a deputy. It seems to have been the practice of the governors of that period to appoint their deputies their delegates, and they took the proof of wills, which were afterwards approved and allowed in the name of the governor.

In 1702 Lord Cornbury appointed as his delegate a Dr. Budges, who was afterwards chief justice of the province. "This gentleman was a man of legal acquirements and had received in England the degree of Doctor of Laws; and he was the first in the province to make use of the title of 'surrogate,' adding it after his signature to all documents." The word "surrogate" means a substitute or deputy of the chancellor, bishop, ecclesiastical or admiralty judge, appointed by him. Dr. Budges was only using the technical name of his office. We have preserved the name while making of the officer an independent court with very extensive powers. "At first the local delegates appointed in the different counties bore only the name of delegates; but about 1746 they began to assume the title of surrogates, and were so designated thereafter in their commissions."

The whole business of the Prerogative Court for seventy years before the Revolution seems to have been managed by the secretary of the province and his deputy, with little interference on the part of the governor. After the organization of the State government the Legislature, in 1778, established a Court of Probate to be held by a single judge, and provided that the judge of the Court of Probate should be vested with the power and authority and have the like jurisdiction in testamentary matters which the governor of the colony of New York, while it was subject to the Crown of Great Britain, had and exercised as judge of the Prerogative Court, except the power of appointing surrogates. There were also surrogates in the different counties who took proof of wills when the decedent's effects were exclusively in one county. In other cases wills were proved before the Court of Probate; and all wills, by whatever officer proved, were recorded in this court and letters issued therefrom under the seal of the court attested by the signature of the clerk. "This court held stated sittings, at regular periods, in different parts of the State, until 1783, when it was fixed in the city of New York until 1787, after which it was permanently removed to Albany; and up to 1787 the surrogates of the different counties continued to exercise exactly the same powers which they exercised before the Revolution." In that year (1787) the system was changed and the governor was directed to commission a surrogate for every county in the State with largely increased powers. The Court of Probate was abolished in 1823 and its powers transferred to the Court of Chancery. The Surrogates' Courts were given additional powers, and by the revised statutes of 1830 a surrogate was to be appointed by the governor, with the consent of the Senate, for each county, who should hold courts which were "authorized to administer justice in all matters relating to deceased persons according to the provisions of the statutes of this State." Appeals from the Surrogates' Courts were taken to the Court of Chancery.

It is perhaps worthy of remark that neither surrogates nor Surrogates' Courts were mentioned in the first constitution of 1777 nor in the second constitution of 1821. In the constitution of 1777 the Court of Probate is recognized as an existing court; in the constitution of 1821 it is not mentioned. During all this period the surrogates were performing important judicial functions, and constituted, during the latter part of the time, a court of substantially exclusive jurisdiction. By the constitution of 1846 county judges were required to perform the duties of the office of surrogate; and this is still the rule, except that in counties having a population exceeding 40,000 the Legislature may provide for a separate officer to perform the duties of the office of surrogate.

Under the first constitution surrogates were appointed by the "Council of Appointment" and held office during the pleasure of the council. Under the second constitution they were appointed by the governor, with the consent of the Senate, for a term of four years. Under the third constitution—1846—county judges, who were also surrogates, were elected in each county for four years. By the amendment to the judiciary article, adopted in 1869, the term was extended to six years, which is the present term.

Formerly the surrogate was paid for his services by fees. The constitution of 1846 provided for an annual salary to the county judge, which should include his compensation as surrogate, and this salary could not be increased or diminished during his continuance in office. All judicial officers except justices of the peace were prohibited from taking fees. In 1847 the Legislature passed an act directing Boards of Supervisors to fix the salary of the county judge and surrogate. These officers were required to collect the same fees as had been charged before the act and pay them to the county treasurer. The Board of Supervisors fixed the salary of the county judge and surrogate of Cattaraugus county at $1,000; the salary remained at this sum until 1857. In that year the Legislature provided for a separate officer to perform the duties of the office of surrogate and directed the Board of Supervisors to fix the salary. At the annual meeting of the board in 1857 this question received considerable attention, and the salary was fixed at $600. As an inducement to procure the passage of the resolution fixing the salary at this sum Nelson Cobb, then county judge, filed with the board a stipulation in which he agreed to receive $900 as his salary as county judge for the balance of his term if the surrogate's salary was fixed at $600. In 1869 the salary of the surrogate was increased to $800 and in 1872 it was again increased to $1,500 and has since remained at that sum. Fees were abolished in 1867.

The first surrogate was Jeremy Wooster, who took the oath of office June 5, 1817. He was re-appointed in 1821, 1823, and 1827. Walter Wood seems to have been appointed surrogate June 1, 1820, but he did not qualify. Mr. Wooster held the office thirteen years, and was succeeded by Moses Beecher, who took the oath of office May 15, 1830. Mr. Beecher held the office eight years and was succeeded in 1838 by Robert H. Shankland, who served until June, 1847, when he was succeeded by Rensselaer Lamb, county judge, who took the oath of office as surrogate under the new constitution. Judge Lamb held the office until January 1, 1852, when he was succeeded by Chester Howe, who served one term of four years. Nelson Cobb was elected county judge and surrogate in 1855 and acted as surrogate until April 7, 1857, when he was succeeded by Allen D. Scott, who on that day took the oath of office as surrogate under an appointment made pursuant to a special law providing for a separate officer to perform the duties of surrogate. He was elected in November of the same year for a full term of four years, and re-elected in 1861. Arunah Ward was elected in 1865 and served one term. He was succeeded by William Manley, elected in 1869, who also served one term. In 1873 James D. McVey was elected for a full term of six years under the amended constitution; he served from January 1, 1874, until his death October 9, 1879. Hudson Ansley was appointed October 14, 1879, to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. McVey's death, and served until December 31st of that year. Alfred Spring was elected in November, 1879, and re-elected in 1885, serving twelve years. He was succeeded by Carey D. Davie, the present incumbent, who was elected in 1891.

No business seems to have been done in the Surrogate's Court until 1820. March 27th of that year letters of administration were issued to David Crocker upon the estate of Stephen N. Webb, late of Olean, deceased. January 31, 1821, the will of David Brand, of Perrysburg, was admitted to probate. The first contest was over the will of Ashbel Freeman, which occurred in 1823, but the will was admitted to probate. The first letters of guardianship were issued March 19, 1824, to David Oyer as guardian of Michael Hufstader.

Jeremy Wooster had the honor to be the first surrogate of this county. He was a native of Connecticut and was born February 21, 1785. He moved to Burlington, Vt., where he engaged in mercantile business. In 1813 he came to Great Valley, leaving his family in Connecticut. In 1815 he brought his family to the same town, where he resided until his death. He at first worked in Green's saw-mill and later built a mill of his own, bringing the irons from Connecticut through the wilderness in wagons; it is said that this trip occupied seven weeks. He lived with his family in a shanty, with bark roof and no floor, and had boarding with them sixteen men, who worked in the mill. He and his brother Henry were prominent in Great Valley in the early days, engaging in various important business enterprises. He was appointed surrogate in 1817 and was re-appointed in 1821, holding the office in all thirteen years. Mr. Wooster was a soldier in the War of 1812. A daughter of his is the wife of Henry Didcock, of Great Valley. Mr. Wooster died August 7, 1868.

Moses Beecher, the second surrogate of the county, was a native of New Haven, Conn., where he was born May 5, 1791. In 1814 he removed to Batavia, N. Y., where for a few years he engaged in mercantile business. Afterwards he was employed by David B. Evans as accountant and draughtsman in the office of the old Holland Land Company. On the establishment of a branch office at Ellicottville he was transferred, and with his family and household goods reached his new home in the early part of July, 1827, traveling the entire distance in wagons, the greater part of the journey being through a comparative wilderness. Staley N. Clarke was the company's agent at Ellicottville, and between him and Mr. Beecher there always existed the closest friendship. After the sale of the remnants of the land of the Holland purchase, principally in Cattaraugus and Allegany counties, to a New York syndicate Asher Tyler was appointed agent, and from Mr. Beecher's intimate knowledge of the business in general his services were secured by the new company. This relation continued until further transfers of title were made, mostly to Benjamin Chamberlain, Truman R. Colman, and Theodore Smith. Mr. Beecher then engaged in a manufacturing business, which he carried on until within a short period before his death, which occurred at Dunkirk, N. Y., February 14, 1867. In the spring of 1830 he was appointed surrogate of this county, which office he held until February 9, 1838, when he was succeeded by Robert H. Shankland. He was also appointed loan commissioner in 1840, 1856, and 1857. Mr. Beecher was a man of rare culture, moral worth, and strict integrity. He possessed cultivated literary tastes and not a little literary ability; he was especially fond of music and poetry. He never sought public office, but in politics was an uncompromising Whig and Republican. He took high rank as a useful and influential citizen, and he was withal a most genial friend, a pleasant companion, and a kind neighbor, and was ever ready to promote the welfare of all among whom he lived.

Robert H. Shankland (see also page 91) was born in Cooperstown, this State, October 1, 1813. "And there, amid the beautiful scenery and in a region rendered classic by the pen of J. Fenimore Cooper, his boyhood days were spent." He was the son of Thomas and Rachel Shankland, and was one of a family of ten children. His grandfather, Robert Shankland, was recorded as one of the hardy and courageous early settlers of Cherry Valley and was active in the stirring and exciting scenes of the Revolution. Death deprived the subject of this sketch of his father and mother at an early period of his boyhood, and he was compelled to feel the responsibilities of life and seek a livelihood for himself. After securing a somewhat meager common school education he was compelled to relinquish his studies, and he began work in a tannery. Soon afterward he apprenticed himself as a printer in the office of the Freeman's Journal in Cooperstown, then edited by his brother-in-law, Col. John H. Prentiss. Two years later he went to New York city, where he was employed in the dry goods store of his elder brother for a time; but this not being to his taste he shipped as a sailor to the East Indies. After being out two weeks the vessel was driven back in distress, an experience which ended his career as a seaman. He next entered the book printing establishment of J. & J. Harper, New York, (since and long known as Harper Brothers,) and there finished his apprenticeship in the printing trade. Subsequently he was employed as a journeyman printer in the office of the Courier and Enquirer, of which James Gordon Bennett was city editor and James Watson Webb was managing editor; also in the Methodist Book Concern and in West's office in Chatham street, working side by side with Horace Greeley, and there forming an intimacy and friendship with the afterwards distinguished editor which lasted until death. One of the last letters written by Mr. Greeley after his nomination to the presidency in 1872 was to his old boyhood friend, the subject of this sketch. Mr. Shankland left New York city and assumed the foremanship of the Journal office at Cooperstown, where he remained for a couple of years until 1835, when he came to this county, locating at Ellicottville. His newspaper career in Cattaraugus county is narrated in the chapter on the Press. February 9, 1838, Mr. Shankland took the oath of office as surrogate and held the position until June, 1847, when, under the new constitution, the duties of the office were transferred to the county judge, and he was succeeded by Rensselaer Lamb. In 1844 he was a presidential elector, being the youngest member of the electoral college. He also held the position of State agent for Indians and in 1848 was appointed by President Polk the agent of the United States for the New York Indians. For about a year, from 1854 to 1855, he was superintendent of the Genesee Valley canal reservoir at Cuba, N. Y. In 1869 and 1870 he represented the town of Ellicottville on the Board of Supervisors and from 1870 to 1874 served as one of the State commissioners of public accounts; he was frequently chosen to act as a representative of his party in National and State conventions. Mr. Shankland died November 1, 1889. For more than half a century he occupied a prominent place in this county and exercised a potent influence in shaping its affairs. In politics he was an uncompromising Democrat, but was in no sense a hide-bound partisan who saw only the good in his own party and evil in opposing organizations. His independent nature often led him to criticise the management of his own party, and to commend the character and qualifications of those who differed from him on important principles. He detested every species of bigotry and hypocrisy, evincing a keen scent in its detection, and was straightforward and resolute in denouncing and exposing the shams of a social, political, or general nature that were proper for public attention. He was faithful to the policy and fortunes of his party when it numbered comparatively few adherents in this county, and by his acquaintance with such men as William L. Marcy, Silas Wright, Edwin Croswell, Horatio Seymour, Sanford E. Church, Samuel J. Tilden, and others he was enabled to give expression and vigor to the organization at home. He was entitled to great credit from the members of his party for his unselfish efforts to keep up its organization in a strong Republican county, and to hold its forces together for the political battles which were so often fought. In his private life he was the indulgent, kind, and thoughtful father, the true and generous friend, the sympathetic and accommodating neighbor, and the honorable citizen.

The surrogates subsequent to Mr. Shankland were all practicing lawyers, and sketches of them will be found under the head of "The Bar."

THE SUPREME COURT.

The first Circuit Court in the county was held by Hon. William B. Rochester, Circuit judge of the Eighth District, commencing on the 20th of August, 1823. The only civil business was the trial of the case of William D. McNair against Jacob Downing, late sheriff of the county of Cattaraugus. The case was tried before a jury composed of Jonathan Carpenter, James Saunders, Richard Green, Lucius Tyler, Gaius Wheaton, Roswell Warner, Nathan Saunders, Ariel Wellman, Lyman Bumpers, Isaac Carpenter, Gurden Cheesebrough, and Samuel G. Sutton. "Plff offered in evidence a record which was read, and a ca. sa. which for defect was refused by the court, and the plaintiff suffered a non-suit."

The first Court of Oyer and Terminer was held at the same time by the same judges, together with Alson Leavenworth and Benjamin Chamberlain, judges of the Court of Common Pleas. A grand jury was called, sworn, and charged. "Ordered that Henry Bryan be appointed district attorney." Simeon Hicks was indicted for forgery, and was tried and acquitted. This was the first criminal trial. An order was entered making the seal of the Court of Common Pleas the seal of the Court of Oyer and Terminer. The court adjourned August 29th. The next Circuit was appointed for the first Friday in February, 1824. The record says: "Friday, February 6, 1824, at 4 o'clock P. M., no Circuit judge or justice of the Supreme Court having arrived, the clerk opened and adjourned the court until tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock, agreeable to the 8th section of the act in such cases made and provided." "Saturday, 7th February, 1824, there not having any one of the Circuit judges or any of the justices of the Supreme Court arrived, at any time before the hour of 8 o'clock P. M., the term accordingly goes over. H. Saxton, dep. clerk." The Court of Oyer and Terminer was adjourned for the same reason.

A Circuit was held in August, 1824, at which Judge Rochester presided; also a Court of Oyer and Terminer, which was held by Judge Rochester, Circuit judge, and Judges Leavenworth, Phineas Spencer, and Benjamin Chamberlain, of the Court of Common Pleas. Judge Rochester also held a Circuit in May, 1825. He came here for the September term, 1825, but the court was "called and immediately adjourned without day." The May Oyer and Terminer, 1825, was held by the same judge, with Judges Peter Ten Broeck, Spencer, and Chamberlain, of the Common Pleas. The May Circuit, 1826, was held by Judge John Birdsall, of the Eighth Circuit. No business was done at this term. A Court of Oyer and Terminer was also held at the same time at which John Pettit was tried for murder. Nine witnesses were sworn for the people and none for the defendant, but he was acquitted. This was the first murder trial.

Judge Birdsall held courts in this county in May and October, 1827 and 1828. At the May term, 1829, no judge appeared, but a term called the May term was held in July of the same year. The October term, 1829, was held by Hon. Addison Gardiner. All of the Circuit Courts held in the county from 1830 to 1834 inclusive were held by Judge Gardiner, who also held the March term, 1835. The September term of that year was held by Judge Charles H. Ruggles; the March term, 1836, by Judge Gardiner; and the June term of that year and all the Circuits from 1837 to 1843 and the June Circuit in 1844 were held by Judge Robert Monell. The October term, 1844, was held by Judge Bowen Whiting, of the Seventh Circuit; the October term, 1845, by Philo Gridley; the June and October terms, 1846, and the January term, 1847, by Hiram Gray. Hon. Robert P. Marvin held an equity term in September, 1847, and also held the January and September terms of the Circuit in 1848. An equity term was held in April, 1848, by James G. Hoyt. The January term, 1849, was held by Judge Marvin and the July term by Henry Wells. After this three regular terms were held each year, as follows:

1850, January, Hoyt; June, Seth E. Sill; September, James Mullett. 1851, January, Marvin; May, Sill; September, Hoyt. 1852, January and June, Moses Taggart; September, Mullett. 1853, January, Marvin; June, Levi F. Bowen; September, Marvin. 1854, January, Marvin; June, Bowen; October, Benjamin F. Green. 1855, January, Green; June and October, Bowen. 1856, January, Marvin; April, Mullett; August, Green. 1857, April, Thomas A. Johnson; August, Noah Davis. 1858, January, Marvin; June, Martin Grover; October, Green. 1859, January, June, and October, Marvin. 1860, January, Grover; June, Davis; October, Marvin. 1861, January and June, Grover; October, Marvin. 1862, January and June, Grover; October, Hoyt. 1863, January and June, Grover; October, Davis. 1864, January, Grover; June, Marvin; October, Grover. 1865, January, Grover; June, Marvin; October, Charles Daniels. 1866, January, Grover; June, Marvin; October, Grover. 1867, June, Marvin; October, Daniels. 1868, January and June, George

Barker; October, Daniels. 1860, January, Barker; June, Marvin; October, Barker. 1870, January, Barker; June, Marvin; October, Daniels. 1871, January, Barker; June, Daniels; October, Barker. 1872, February and May, Barker; October, Daniels. 1873, February, George D. Lamont; May, Barker; October, Daniels; November, special term, Lamont. 1874, February, Lamont; May and September, Barker; October, special term, Lamont. 1875, February, Daniels; May and September, Barker. 1876, February and May, Barker; September, Daniels. 1877, February, Albert Haight; May, Barker; September, Daniels. 1878, February Haight; May and September, Daniels. 1879, February, Haight; May, Barker; September, Daniels. 1880, February, Haight; May, Barker; September, Daniels. 1881, February, Haight; May, Barker; September Daniels. 1882, February, Haight; May, Barker; September, Daniels. 1883, February, Haight; May, Loran L. Lewis; September, Daniels. 1884, February, Haight; May, Lewis; September, Thomas Corlett. 1885, February, Henry A. Childs; May, Lewis; June, special term, Childs; September, Daniels. 1886, February, Childs; May, Corlett; June, special term, Lewis; September, Haight. 1887, February, Childs; May, Lewis; June, special term, Barker; September, Corlett. 1888, February, Childs; May Circuit and June, special term, Lewis; September, Daniels. 1889, February, Barker; May, Lewis; June, special term, Corlett; September, Childs. 1890, February, Childs; May, John S. Lambert; June, special term, Lewis; September and November, adjourned term, Lambert. 1891, February, Childs; May, Lewis and Hamilton Ward; June, special term, Lambert; September, Daniels. 1892, February, Childs; May, Ward; June, special term, and September Circuit, Lambert. 1893, February, Childs; May, Ward.

Prior to 1847 Courts of Oyer and Terminer were held by a justice of the Supreme Court or a Circuit judge, together with at least two of the judges of the County Court. The records in this county show that this court was usually held by the Circuit judge, together with the entire bench of the Court of Sessions, making six judges in all. This was a very formidable criminal court.

Under the judiciary act of 1847 the Court of Oyer and Terminer was composed of a justice of the Supreme Court, presiding, and the county judge and justices of Sessions, and at least two of the other officers besides the presiding justice were necessary to constitute the court; and the court was required to be held at the same time and place as the Circuit Court. The Court of Criminal Procedure, adopted in 1881, continued the Court of Oyer and Terminer with the same organization, but by an amendment adopted in 1882 it was provided that a Court of Oyer and Terminer should be held by a justice of the Supreme Court without an associate, and this court is now held by one judge.

MASTERS AND EXAMINERS IN CHANCERY.

By the second constitution—of 1821—the governor was directed to appoint, with the consent of the Senate, masters and examiners in chancery in each county of the State who shall hold their office for three years unless sooner removed. They possessed the powers prescribed by the Court of Chancery, and were answerable to that court for the correct discharge of their duties.

Anson Gibbs, of Ellicottville, was appointed to the office in 1836, reappointed in 1839, and again appointed in 1846. David McCluer, of Franklinville, was appointed examiner in 1837; Andrew Mead, of Olean, was appointed master and examiner in 1840; William P. Angel, of Ellicottville, and James Burt, of Franklinville, in 1843. Peter Masten, of Randolph, was appointed examiner the same year. In 1844 Daniel Reed Wheeler and Lewis D. Simonds, both of Ellicottville, were appointed masters and examiners. Mr.

Angel was appointed again in 1845. The offices were abolished by the constitution of 1846.

SUPREME COURT COMMISSIONERS.

In the early years of our judicial history the number of Supreme Court judges was very small; none resided in this county, and their visits here to hold court were not very frequent. It was sometimes very inconvenient to reach them to obtain orders which were or might be granted out of court. County judges did not then possess the important "chambers" jurisdiction which has since been conferred upon them. As a means of relief under these conditions the office of Supreme Court commissioner was created. These officers were appointed for various counties and were required to reside in the counties for which they were appointed. They were also required to be of the degree of counselor of the Supreme Court. They were "authorized and required to perform all the duties and execute every act, power, and trust which a justice of the Supreme Court may perform and execute out of court, according to the rules and practices of such court, and pursuant to the provisions of any statute, in all civil cases, except as otherwise provided by law." They were appointed by the governor with the consent of the Senate, and held their office two years. Chap. 246 of the Laws of 1824 authorized the appointment of a commissioner in Cattaraugus county, but none seems to have been appointed until 1828, when John A. Bryan received the appointment. Albert G. Burke, of Persia, was appointed in 1832 and re-appointed in 1834. In 1836 James Burt, of Franklinville, was appointed. In 1836 a law was passed providing for a Supreme Court commissioner to reside in Persia. Anson Gibbs, of Ellicottville, was appointed in 1839 and re-appointed in 1842. Chap. 162 of the Laws of 1839 provided for an additional commissioner "who shall reside in the central or western part of the county." This act also gave the commissioner the same powers as were possessed by the first judge of the County Court "out of court." In 1840 Chester Howe, of Persia, and Joseph E. Weeden, of Randolph, were appointed. Mr. Howe was re-appointed in 1842. Daniel Reed Wheeler, of Ellicottville, was appointed in 1844. The office was abolished by the constitution of 1846.

DISTRICT ATTORNEYS.

By the act of February 12, 1796, the State was divided into seven districts, each district embracing several counties, and the governor was directed to appoint for each district an assistant attorney-general of the degree of counsel of the Supreme Court, and who was required "to manage and conduct all suits and prosecutions for crime and misdemeanors" within his district, except that the attorney-general was required to personally take charge of criminal matters in the county of New York, and might do so in any county by direction of the governor. In 1801 the districts were re-organized and the officer appointed to take charge of criminal matters on behalf of the people was then for the first time called a district attorney. Subsequent legislation made each county a separate district, the appellation of the officer remaining the same. District attorneys, prior to the constitution of 1846, were appointed by the judges of the County Courts, and were, by statute, to hold office for three years. In practice in the earlier years of our history they were designated from time to time by the Court of Sessions; the records showing appointments at irregular intervals. By the constitution of 1846 the office was made elective and the term was fixed at three years. Originally the district attorney was paid by fees, but in 1852 an act was passed authorizing the Boards of Supervisors to fix a salary for this officer. In this county the salary was fixed at $500 a year; in 1868 it was raised to $800; in 1872 to $1,000; in 1884 to $1,200; and in 1892 to $1,500.

The first Court of Common Pleas and General Sessions was held in July, 1817. There was a grand jury, but they did no business, and the records contain no reference to a district attorney. Another term was held in November of the same year with a like result. In the minutes of the February term, 1818, Daniel Cruger is mentioned as district attorney. He lived in Allegany county, but was the first lawyer who took the oath of office in this county. At the July term, 1818, Henry Wells is named as "attorney for the people." During the next two years the court minutes are silent on this subject, but from the records of the Board of Supervisors it appears that in 1819 John A. Bryan and Timothy H. Porter both received pay for services as district attorney, and in 1820 Mr. Bryan, Milton B. Canfield, and Henry Wells were paid for like services. In 1821 Samuel S. Haight, Mr. Wells, and Mr. Porter were allowed pay for services as district attorney. At the November term, 1821, Mr. Haight was appointed district attorney by the court, and again in February, 1822. At the February term, 1823, Henry Bryan was appointed and again at the June term in the same year, and also by the Oyer and Terminer in August. At the October Court of Sessions, 1823, John A. Bryan was appointed; Timothy H. Porter was appointed at the February and June terms, 1824. There is no record of any appointment in 1825 or 1826, but Mr. Porter evidently served through those years, as appears from the records of the supervisors. At the January term, 1827, George A. S. Crooker was appointed district attorney pro tem. and served through the term. In June, 1827, John A. Bryan was again appointed. In October, 1827, C. J. Fox was appointed district attorney pro tem. From that time appointments were made more regularly. Anson Gibbs was appointed in 1829; James Burt in 1834 and again in 1838; Daniel Reed Wheeler in 1841; William Pitt Angel in 1844 and again in 1847; he took the oath of office again January 6, 1848. William H. Wood was elected in 1850; Alexander Sheldon in 1853; William P. Angel in 1856. William A. Meloy acted as district attorney at the October Oyer and Terminer, 1858. Samuel S. Spring was elected in 1859 and again in 1862; Merrill T. Jenkins in 1865 and again in 1868; William G. Laidlaw in 1871 and again in 1874; Frank W. Stevens in 1877 and again in 1880; George M. Rider in 1883 and again in 1886; James H. Waring in 1889 and again in 1892. The district attorney occupies a position of great dignity, importance, and responsibility, and it is a source of gratification to the people of the county that the incumbents of this office have uniformly been men of the first rank in the legal profession, and that, from the beginning of our judicial history, the character and reputation of the office have been maintained at a high standard.

JUSTICES OF SESSIONS.

The constitution of 1846 provides that the county judge, with two justices of the peace to be designated according to law, may hold Courts of Sessions, with such criminal jurisdiction as the Legislature may prescribe. Justices of the peace so designated are termed "justices of sessions," and are a constituent and indispensable part of the Court of Sessions of the county; and until 1882 they were also members of the Court of Oyer and Terminer. They occupy the same relation to the court that the associate judges occupied in the old Court of General Sessions, except the power to hold a court without the county judge. They have equal power with the presiding judge when he is present, and may control, and sometimes have controlled, the court. A history of the bench of the county would be incomplete without a record of these members of our criminal courts. The following is a list of the justices of sessions since the office was created in 1846:

1847, Selleck St. John, G. W. Gillett; 1848, same; 1849, Selleck St. John, John Palmer; 1850, Edwin O. Locke, Cyrus G. McKay; 1851, Clydes P. Cram, Seth Lockwood; 1852, John Palmer, Arnold Holden; 1853, Heman G. Button, Jerome B. Jewell; 1854, Chase Fuller, Anson G. Seager; 1855, Hiram Johnson, Charles I. Lowden; 1856, Hiram Johnson, Cyrus G. McKay; 1857, Anson G. Seager, Corydon Morzan; 1858, Frederick Carpenter, E. C. Price; 1859, Frederick Carpenter, Martin L. Stevenson; 1860, Warren Onan, Hiram Thornton; 1861, M. J. Titus, Israel H. Alden; 1862, E. C. Price, M. J. Titus; 1863, Erastus Dickinson, Joseph Peaslee; 1864, Erastus Dickinson, David Lang; 1865, Erastus Dickinson, Richard L. Stone; 1866, Stephen A. Harrington, Seth Lockwood; 1867, same; 1868, J. W. Damon, Chase Fuller; 1869, Stephen A. Harrington, Buel G. Smith; 1870, Fuller Bucklin, Asher Bliss; 1871, Daniel Brown, Timothy Walsh; 1872, Nathan A. Dye, H. N. Hunt; 1873, Harris Aldrich, A. O. Stone; 1874, Leonard O. Hall, Harris Aldrich; 1875, William Stevens, Leonard O. Hall; 1876, Mortimer N. Pratt, William Stevens; 1877, Isaiah W. Darling, George W. Press; 1878, Phipps Lake, Buel G. Smith; 1879, Buel G. Smith, Isaiah W. Darling; 1880, Phipps Lake, Charles T. Mason; 1881, Milo Berry, David Metcalf; 1882, Phipps Lake, Milo Berry; 1883, Henry J. Trumbull, D. M. Metcalf; 1884, William P. Guild, John Hackett; 1885, William P. Guild, John Burlingame; 1886, William C. Smith, John Hackett; 1887, John C. Green, Edwin Bebee; 1888, William P. Guild, Michael O'Brien; 1889, Ransom L. Reeves, Michael O'Brien; 1890, Ralph Dewey, James O. Spencer; 1891, John C. Green, Charles Howland; 1892, William Cooper, Henry McKinley; 1893, William P. Guild, Charles O'Brien.

THE BAR.

An eminent ex-justice of the Supreme Court of this State who recently retired from the bench said in a note to the writer upon the subject of this chapter: "While I was on the bench it was always a pleasure to attend the courts in Cattaraugus county, where the cases were well prepared and well presented to the court and jury." An examination of the history of the legal profession of the county shows that from the earliest period the bar has held high rank and has contained a large number of able lawyers. Many men would have been ornaments to any bar, and they maintained a high standard of professional and general scholarship. They were devoted to the profession, and strove to make it popular and useful. It has been said that we are afflicted by a certain glamour in viewing the members of the early bar. There is some truth in this suggestion, but it should be remembered that they were men who were educated under a system which required careful preparation. The course of legal study was then seven years. This time necessarily tended to make them proficient legal scholars. This, added to the classical education which many received, made the lawyer's a "learned profession" in its truest sense. The intricacies of the common-law practice also cultivated legal acumen and made them careful practitioners. Yet it must be said that the legal business of our earlier days was comparatively simple. An examination of the court records shows that little business was done involving large sums of money or intricate questions of law such as now frequently engage the attention of our lawyers. This was incident to pioneer conditions.

The code of procedure adopted in 1848 seems to have been a serious stumbling-block to the lawyers imbued with the spirit of common-law practice. Many of them gradually retired from active practice or removed from the State. Joseph E. Weeden, of Randolph, is the only lawyer now living who was actively engaged in practice under the common-law system. The lawyers of this generation have been nurtured under the code system, or what is called the "new procedure," without the art of artfulness of the common-law mysteries of practice. But in the general knowledge of the law, the needs of the times, and the ability to apply the jurisprudence of the period to the questions which then engaged judicial attention the lawyers of the last generation were undoubtedly the equals of the modern lawyers.

An effort has been made to give a sketch of every lawyer who has ever been in practice in the county, or who was a student and was admitted to the bar here. Prior to the constitution of 1846 lawyers were required to be admitted to practice in every court, and they obtained a new license from every Court of Common Pleas in which they had occasion to practice. They were also required to take the oath of office and sign a roll in the office of the county clerk when admitted to the Common Pleas. This roll has enabled the writer to ascertain with substantial accuracy who were in practice here during the first thirty years of our history. This record does not show who were resident lawyers. Every lawyer who wished to do any business in the court signed the attorney's roll. Further examination, not always satisfactory, was necessary to determine who actually resided in the county. The names of all have been given, although some are known to have been non-residents, because it was thought it would be interesting to know who had become actual members of our bar and entitled to practice here. Some of these men who did not live here achieved marked distinction and adorned in a conspicuous manner the bar and the bench of the State. By formal admission, and frequently after an examination, they became members of our bar, and they are entitled to at least a brief place in this chapter.

More than three hundred lawyers have at some time been members of our bar. Some practiced only a few months or years. Some have been actively engaged in professional labors nearly half a century. Some began practice here and after a short experience left the county and won a name and fame in other fields. The gathering of the materials for biographical sketches has involved great labor, but the result has been an "embarrassment of riches." There is material enough on hand for a volume on the bench and bar of our county, but it must be compressed into one chapter. The necessity of giving at least an outline of the facts in each career has compelled the elimination of many incidents and anecdotes that would have been interesting as illustrating the characteristics of men who were prominent and influential in shaping the history and polity of our county. An attempt has been made to give an outline of their careers according to the most reliable information which could reasonably be obtained. To this end the writer has gleaned from a variety of sources: old letters, newspapers, obituary notices, scrap books, and every available piece of history that has been within reach has been laid under tribute. Besides this the writer has frequently consulted the older members of the bar and many other people in the county and elsewhere who are familiar with our early history. The bar generally, as well as the people, have manifested great interest in this chapter, and have kindly furnished such information as they possessed which would assist in preparing an accurate narrative. The writer regrets the meagerness of several sketches, and can only say that he has used his best efforts to obtain more complete information from the subjects of such sketches or their friends. Where his personal application for information has met with no response he has sometimes been compelled to resort to hearsay or tradition, but there is some authority for every fact stated. As nearly as practicable the sketches have been arranged in the order of admission to the bar.

Asa Hazen was admitted to the Common Pleas at its first term in July, 1817, and was the first resident lawyer of the county. He was a native of Vermont, where he was born in 1793. He is said to have received a university education. He began practice in Olean, where he remained several years, forming a partnership with Timothy H. Porter, who had been the first presiding judge of the Court of Common Pleas. After the courts were established in Ellicottville he removed to that village and opened a law office in Mr. Huntley's tavern. His partnership with Judge Porter was continued several years, Porter remaining in Olean; and the early court records show that they did a large share of the business for the first few years of our history. James G. Johnson, in his "Pioneer History," says of Mr. Hazen that he was "well educated in his profession and an honorable, high-minded gentleman; he was not considered a good advocate, as his sedentary habits and love of quiet and ease were greater than the requirements of business could overcome. He retired early from practice." Inquiry among the older residents of Ellicottville shows that Mr. Hazen was highly esteemed in that community. He was a fine Greek and Latin scholar, and retained his interest in classical studies until late in life. He exerted a great influence over the younger men of the last generation, and his acquaintances universally testify to his kindness, intelligence, and high character. He was a bachelor, and during almost his entire residence in Ellicottville boarded with members of the Huntley family. He died May 13, 1866, and was buried in the old cemetery at Ellicottville. An appreciative sketch of his career was written by the late Addison G. Rice, who was then a prominent lawyer in Ellicottville, and published in the Cattaraugus Whig. Mr. Hazen left no relatives in this county and the writer has not been able to learn of any elsewhere. The evanescent character of human fame is illustrated in the case of Mr. Hazen, whose tombstone the writer, in the spring of 1893, found fallen down upon the grave and nearly overgrown with moss and weeds. It may well be a source of pride to the bar of Cattaraugus county that our first lawyer brought to the discharge of his professional duties not only a thorough legal training, but also the broadest general culture that the schools of his time could afford.

Daniel Cruger was the first lawyer to sign the roll as an attorney of the old Court of Common Pleas. He was a practicing lawyer in Allegany county, and continued to practice in our courts several years after the organization of the county. He was member of Assembly from Allegany and Steuben counties in 1814, 1815, and 1816, and was district attorney of the old Seventh District under the act of 1801, which included Allegany and Cattaraugus counties. He was district attorney of Steuben county in 1818 and was a member of the Fifteenth Congress in 1817 to 1819. He acted as district attorney in this county at the Court of General Sessions held in February, 1818.

Alvan Burr also signed the roll of attorneys in our Common Pleas at the opening of the first term, July 1, 1817. He was a resident of Allegany county, and was treasurer of that county in 1826 and member of Assembly in 1836.

Zephaniah Z. Caswell also attended the first term of the Common Pleas. He was a resident of Allegany county, where he held the office of surrogate in 1815 and was again appointed to the same office in 1823.

David Higgins, Jr., was also one of the five lawyers who attended the first term of the Common Pleas. He seems to have been a resident of Allegany county, but the writer has not been able to obtain any facts concerning his career.

Henry Wells was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas in 1818. He seems to have been a resident of Tioga county. He practiced considerably in our courts and acted as district attorney at the July term, 1818, and appears to have been paid for like services in 1820.

William Woods was also admitted in 1818 from Steuben county, where he seems to have been a prominent politician, holding several important offices.

James Mullett, Jr., was also admitted to the Common Pleas in 1818. He lived in Chautauqua county, and was district attorney of that county at one time and also a member of Assembly.

Levi S. Littlejohn was also admitted the same year. His residence has not been ascertained.

John A. Bryan was admitted to the Common Pleas on November 4, 1818. He was in Olean a short time, and went to Ellicottville about 1820 and was the first resident lawyer in that town. Soon after settling in Ellicottville he married Eliza Dixon, sister of the wife of Baker Leonard, who built the first house in Ellicottville. The marriage took place at Mr. Leonard's house, and was the first ceremony of that kind in the town. It is said to have been the occasion of great rejoicing and merriment. Mr. Bryan erected a law office in Ellicottville, and also the dwelling house lately occupied by Robert H. Shankland. He was a brilliant lawyer and one of the foremost men in the county; he acted as district attorney at different terms of the Court of General Sessions in 1819, 1820, and 1823; he seems to have practiced in Olean in 1823 and 1824. He was appointed district attorney at the June term, 1827, and served two years. He practiced law in this county until about 1830, when he removed to Columbus, Ohio, and established a newspaper. He became a prominent politician and held several important State and National offices. He was first assistant postmaster-general in 1842, and on August 15, 1844, he was commissioned chargé d'affaires of the United States to Peru and served about one year. He also served as auditor of the State of Ohio from 1833 to 1839 inclusive.

Timothy H. Porter, admitted to practice in the Common Pleas in 1819, was the first presiding judge of the court, but resigned after a short service and resumed the practice of the law. For many years he was one of the most prominent citizens in the county, occupying various positions of trust. Previous to his coming to this county he had been admitted to practice in Tioga county, and he seems to have resided for a time in Allegany or Steuben county, for he represented those counties, then constituting one district, in the Assembly in 1816 and 1817. He acted as district attorney in this county at some of the terms of court held in 1819 and 1820, and in 1824 was regularly appointed to that office. The same year he was a presidential elector, but did not attend the meeting of the electoral college. He was elected to the Nineteenth Congress, 1825-27, and was also a State senator from the old Eighth District in 1823 and again in 1828, 1829, 1830, and 1831. He was also member of Assembly from this county in 1838 and in 1840. For several years after he resigned from the bench he practiced law in partnership with Asa Hazen. James G. Johnson, in his "Pioneer History," says of him: "Judge Porter was a man whose traits of character and memory are worthy of a better tribute than I am able to give them in these brief sketches. In person he was large and fine looking, with a dignified manner and thoughtful look, cautious in all his actions, a good counselor, candid, thoroughly honest in all his business transactions, of strict integrity in all his varied relations, and never forfeiting or losing the confidence of a single one of the many friends gained by him in public or private life. He gradually withdrew from the practice of law and finally settled on his farm the next north of Judge Brooks's in Olean, where he died about the year 1840, leaving a multitude of friends and no enemies."

Milton B. Canfield was admitted in 1819 and began practice in Olean. Soon afterwards he removed to Ellicottville, where he continued in practice for a time. The writer has not been able to ascertain where he went.

John L. Tillinghast was admitted in 1820. He was from Tioga county, where he was district attorney in 1818. He was also twice appointed librarian of the State library, the last time in 1844.

Samuel S. Haight, who was also admitted in our Common Pleas in 1820, was from Allegany county, and it does not appear that he ever resided in this county. He was district attorney of Allegany county in 1820 and the records of our Board of Supervisors show that he received compensation for like services in this county in 1821; and at the November term, 1821, he was appointed district attorney by the court and again in February, 1822.

Henry Bryan was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1821, and for several years was one of the leading lawyers of Olean. Mr. Johnson says of him that "he was full of sport when it could be enjoyed at the expense of others, and never lost an opportunity to gratify this desire, but if he became the subject he could never see the point, and got factious and passionate over it. He was a bachelor and roomed in his office." The court records show that he was a prominent lawyer and did a large amount of business in the early days. At the February and June terms of the General Sessions, 1823, he was appointed district attorney, and also by the Oyer and Terminer in August of the same year. He and his brother, Dudley Bryan, were in partnership in Olean sometime about 1833. It is said that at one time Mr. Bryan owned the Martin farm and mills in Olean. About 1848 he went to Racine, Wis., and soon afterwards removed to California.

George Miles was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1821 from Allegany county, where he seems to have been in practice.

George H. Green was admitted at the February term, 1821, on a license as an attorney of the Supreme Court.

Moses Sawyer was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1821, coming from Washington county, and was at one time located at Ellicottville. After practicing there for a short time he is said to have gone west and engaged in practice and won considerable distinction.

George A. S. Crooker was also admitted to the Common Pleas at the November term, 1821, and the court records show that he presented certificates of "classical and juridical studies for five years." He was the son of Sampson Crooker, an old sea captain who came to Conewango from Cairo, Greene county, in 1818. He set out the first orchard in town and gave the ground for the first cemetery on the rise of ground just east of Rutledge. It is said that his wife was a true pioneer, and once killed a wild cat with the fire-tongs at her hen-roost in 1819. She also made a trip from her home to Catskill alone with a horse and wagon, taking with her a live bear, which she sold to help pay the expenses of the trip. Soon after this the subject of this sketch settled in the town on lot 54. He was already a rising lawyer, having for some years studied in Catskill and afterwards in Moscow. "He is not only entitled to a place in the history of the county as one of her most distinguished and talented men, but Conewango as a town feels a pride in his citizenship and in the eminent service which he rendered her people. He stood high as a legal counselor, and as an advocate had few peers. He possessed a liberal heart and the most kindly feelings, and no sacrifice was too great to be made on behalf of his friends." He represented his town on the Board of Supervisors twenty-nine terms, serving the longest in that body of any man in the history of the county except N. M. Allen, and he was chairman of the board twenty-six terms. He represented his district in the New York Assembly in 1832, 1839, and 1840, and was a delegate to the constitutional convention of 1846. He was also appointed State agent for the Onondaga Indians in 1861 and again in 1865. He also served as district attorney at the June term of the General Sessions in 1827. He had an extensive law practice for several years. He was an active politician, and in 1850 he was the candidate of his party for member of Congress, but was defeated by Reuben E. Fenton. He is described as a man of more than ordinary ability, of good address, commanding presence, and rare social qualities. He removed with his family to Illinois, where he died at St. Charles in 1874, in the seventy-fifth year of his age. At his request his remains were brought back to Conewango and interred in the cemetery, the ground for which was given by his father.

Fletcher McKnight was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1822, but it does not appear that he was ever a resident of the county.

William A. Rochester also took the oath of office as an attorney of the Court of Common Pleas at the February term, 1822. Judge Rochester held the first Circuit in the county in August, 1823, but was not engaged in practice here.

Thomas S. Sherwood was admitted to the Court of Common Pleas in the year 1825.

Chancey J. Fox.—"Few men in the county of Cattaraugus were more intimately connected with its history or have borne a more conspicuous part in its public events since its organization than Chauncey J. Fox. A history of the early settlers of the county who were identified with its fortunes would be incomplete without mention of Mr. Fox; and in looking for examples of successful effort to overcome the adverse influences of poverty in the road to honorable distinction no better illustration can be found in the history of our county." Mr. Fox was born in Tolland, Conn., August 21, 1797. His parents descended from families above the middle class and were considered wealthy until the death of his father—a manufacturer,—when Chauncey was a small lad, left Mrs. Fox with limited means and her children could have no advantages of education beyond a meager training in the common schools. In August, 1818, Mr. Fox left his home with a view of establishing himself in business or seeking some occupation that would furnish him a living. Accompanied by a younger brother, Pliny L. Fox, he came to Olean in this county. "Finding no employment they purchased a skiff, procured a supply of bread and cheese, and started on a voyage down the river with the vague intention of going to Cincinnati, but with no distinct idea of the difficulties they would have to encounter. They passed a day and a night and a part of the next day on the river without seeing anyone. Towards night of the second day they saw a man crossing the river. They landed and followed him to his house. He advised them to abandon their voyage and offered them employment, which they accepted. This man, their employer, proved to be Philip Tome, whose early history was so well known in this region." The brothers immediately went to work for Mr. Tome. Soon after, the younger brother, Pliny, was taken sick and the expenses of this sickness exhausted all the means of both of the brothers so that they were obliged to sell their clothes to discharge the liabilities incurred; and so severe did the burden prove that Chauncey exchanged the last suit he had for an old suit of regimentals that had seen the wars, for the sake of the difference he received. Dr. Alson Leavenworth, then of Ellicottville, was the nearest physician and his services were obtained on this occasion. The subject of this sketch soon afterwards came to Great Valley and for several years was engaged in lumbering in the employ of Francis Green and Judge Chamberlain. "Finding the labor too severe for his constitution, and feeling that the instincts of his mind and genius were not directed in the proper channel, he turned his attention to the study of law. He commenced reading in the office of John A. Bryan, then the leading lawyer of the county, and in 1826 he was admitted to the Court of Common Pleas and was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court in January, 1833. He continued to practice his profession at Ellicottville until after the adoption of the code of procedure in 1848, when he retired to his farm in the neighborhood of Ellicottville.

Mr. Fox was a successful lawyer. It is said that his strength was mainly as an advocate, and that he possessed great power over a jury and control over the minds of men. His manner in speaking was earnest and energetic. Mr. Fox was also prominently connected with the political history of the county and State. He became a prominent Whig, and by the partiality of the people of his county was enabled to win distinction in public affairs. He was a member of Assembly in 1833 and 1834 and a member of the State Senate, being elected first to fill a vacancy. He also served in this body in 1836, 1837, 1838, and 1839. At this time State senators were members of the old court called the "Court for the Correction of Errors," or, more familiarly, the "Court of Errors." Many important decisions were rendered by this court, establishing great principles of our law, and which are found reported in Wendall's Reports. Mr. Fox was an active member of the Legislature and in 1833, while in the Assembly, he advocated and secured the passage of a law taxing the debts of non-residents, and while in the Senate in 1838 brought forward and sustained almost alone an act taxing the lands of non-residents for the support of roads and bridges. These two measures were of great importance to the interests of the county and for many years had great influence upon its prosperity. Mr. Fox was also active in behalf of the building of the New York & Erie railroad. "As chairman of the great Railroad Committee of the Senate he rendered invaluable aid in securing the advancement of that great work, and to no one man in the Legislature during the progress of important bills in aid of the road through that body are the people more indebted for its final success than to Mr. Fox." He had an important part in perfecting the legislation that created the Genesee Valley canal in 1836, and was unable to leave his post at Albany to visit his home during the entire session.* In February, 1827, Mr. Fox married Hannah, daughter of Grove Hurlbut, who erected the first building in Ellicottville. Mr. Fox died at his home in Ellicottville, February 11, 1883. Aside from his prominence in political and legal circles the domestic side of Mr. Fox's nature must also be considered. Home was to him the dearest place on earth, and it is difficult to decide which should have precedence—the tender loyalty given to his devoted wife, the familiar affection that inspired deep and abiding veneration in his children, or the genial hospitality that made his house a charming resort for numerous and admiring friends. His house was a place where the virtues of an ideal New England home were fostered in an atmosphere of joy, and which have left most pleasant memories which will last while one of that family circle remains on earth. "As a citizen Mr. Fox was universally respected. He was a man of the strictest integrity and possessed the confidence of all who knew him." Mrs. Fox is still living in Ellicottville. The surviving children of the family are Caroline (Mrs. G. W. Blackmon), of Paynesville, Ohio; Chauncey J. Fox, of Ellicottville; Mary (Mrs. H. Adams), of Perry, N. Y.; and Harriet (Mrs. A. H. Howe), of Buffalo.

John W. Howe was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1826, but there is no further record of him in this county.

Anson Gibbs was the son of a physician, and was born in the town of Pownal, Bennington county, Vt., on the 15th of September, 1790. He was of Revolutionary stock, his ancestors having settled at Litchfield, Conn., at a very early date. He came into New York State when he was a mere boy, living for a time in Troy and in Schoharie; thence he went to Ovid, Seneca county. He served as a soldier on the Niagara frontier through the War of 1812, and after the war was over returned to Ovid, where he studied law and was admitted to the bar in the same class with William H. Seward, and Mr. Gibbs and Governor Seward were always very warm friends. His license to practice as an attorney in the Supreme Court was signed by Judge Ambrose Spencer and is dated November 1, 1822. On the 12th of August, 1825, he was licensed by John Savage as a counselor in the Supreme Court, and on May 20, 1834, was licensed by Chancellor Reuben H. Walworth as a solicitor in the Court of Chancery. On the 26th of March, 1820, he was married to Nancy L. Reynolds, of Ovid. In the spring of 1826 they removed to Ellicottville, where he remained until his death. For the first twenty-five years of his practice he did an extensive business, but gradually retired after the adoption of the new code of procedure in 1848. Mr. Gibbs took a prominent part in the public affairs of the county. He was appointed district attorney in 1829 and served five years. He was also appointed master and examiner in chancery in 1836, was re-appointed in 1839, and again appointed in 1846. In 1839 he was appointed a Supreme Court commissioner and re-appointed in 1842. He had the reputation of being a strong criminal lawyer, and his services were often sought by defendants in criminal cases. He was an old line Whig in politics, but was extremely conservative, and opposed any agitation of the slavery question. As issues changed and events shaped themselves he naturally grew into a Republican when the party was formed. He believed not only that to vote was a sacred right, but a sacred duty, and never missed an election, and it was his boast that he never split his ticket. The late Eleazar Harmon was a student in his office, and after he was admitted to the bar they were for a time partners. His practice extended beyond the limits of his own county and he was often away from home at long distances attending to his professional business, and was well acquainted with the prominent men of that time. He died January 15, 1878, and at the time of his death was the oldest lawyer in the county. "He was a man of ability and of unusual intelligence, and possessed a deep fund of humor. He lived to see the larger portion of his early friends and associates pass away. His health had always been good, and his mental strength and vigor to the last he retained in a remarkable degree. He was a man of fine address and a courteous gentleman of the old school." Many anecdotes have been told of Mr. Gibbs exhibiting his humor and his peculiarities, many of which are undoubtedly exaggerated. His overflowing humor manifested itself on many occasions. It is related that on one occasion a young man who had been admitted to the bar in Canandaigua was recommended by his friends to come to Ellicottville and open an office, and he was given a letter of introduction to Mr. Gibbs. He found Mr. Gibbs, not in his office, but in his back yard splitting wood. He introduced himself and after some conversation Mr. Gibbs shouldered his axe and started for the woods. The young man inquired where he was going. Mr. Gibbs said he was going to cut some wood for his family, and the young man thought if that was the extent of legal practice in Ellicottville he had better locate elsewhere. It was doubtless a ruse on the part of Mr. Gibbs to discourage the young man from locating there. Many stories are told showing his ready wit, but space does not permit their publication here.

Marinus Willett was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1827, and seems to have been engaged in practice in New York.

Joseph Wait was admitted to the bar the same year from the county of Chautauqua.

John Cooke was also admitted in 1827 from Allegany county. They were not residents of this county and only practiced here occasionally.

Russell C. Bryan was admitted to the Common Pleas at the June term, 1827. He seems to have been a relative of the other Bryans, but it is not known where he engaged in practice.

Luther C. Peck was admitted to our Common Pleas in 1828. He was a prominent lawyer of Pike, N. Y., and did an extensive business throughout western New York. He never resided in this county.

Albert G. Burke was admitted in January, 1828, and practiced several years at Gowanda. He was the first attorney in that village. He is said to have been one of the most brilliant lawyers of the period and a man of more than ordinary ability. In 1832 he was appointed a Supreme Court commissioner, and re-appointed in 1834 under a statute which required a commissioner to be appointed to reside in the northern or western part of the county. He also represented his district in the Assembly in 1835. "His health failing him he retired from active life and died of consumption in 1836." In February, 1832, he formed a law partnership with Chauncey J. Fox, Mr. Fox living in Ellicottville and Mr. Burke in Gowanda.

Elisha Mack was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1828, but no information has been obtained concerning his residence or practice.

Ralph R. Phelps was also admitted in 1828 and located in Franklinville, and after practicing there several years moved to Ellicottville, where he died. It is said that he kept "bachelor's hall" while in Franklinville, living in his office, and it is one of the historical episodes of the time that one night some of the men picked up his office bodily and carried it onto the village green and left it there.

William Lowe was also admitted to our Common Pleas in 1828. According to "Williams's Register" he was in Olean four years, from 1830 to 1833. Nothing further is known of him. The New York State Register of 1843 says he was admitted in 1805.

Samuel A. Brown was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1829. He was a resident of Jamestown, but occasionally practiced in our courts.

Joseph Wilson was also admitted the same year. He lived in Allegany county.

Mark W. Fletcher was also admitted in 1829. He seems to have begun practice at Ellicottville, and to have removed from there to Gowanda or Perrysburg. He represented the town of Perrysburg on the Board of Supervisors in 1833-34. We have not been able to trace his career since that time.

Isaac T. Gifford was also admitted at this term, but he was not a resident of this county.

Richard P. Marvin was also admitted in 1829; he was a prominent lawyer in Jamestown and was afterwards a justice of the Supreme Court.

Dudley C. Bryan was admitted in 1830. It seems that he was already a resident of Sandusky, where he had located about 1826 or 1827, coming from New Hampshire. Mr. Bryan married a sister of Lyman Scott, Jr., who also at one time practiced law in Sandusky. Mr. Bryan afterwards went to Olean and was in partnership with his brother, Henry Bryan. About 1840 he went to California and joined the gold hunters of that region. While in Olean he was proprietor of the Olean Advocate, which he changed to the Olean Times.

H. M. S. Kinnicutt was admitted in 1830. We have not been able to learn where he lived.

George P. Barker became an attorney of our Court of Common Pleas in 1831. Mr. Barker was a prominent lawyer in Erie county, and had the reputation of being one of the most eloquent advocates in western New York. He was member of Assembly in 1836, was elected attorney-general of the State in 1842, and was district attorney of Erie county in 1846.

Charles E. Beardsley, who was admitted to practice in our Common Pleas in 1831, was a son of Bartholomew C. Beardsley, and was born in Fredericton, province of New Brunswick, January 31, 1806. He was graduated at Union College, New York, and was married at Buffalo, N. Y., April 8, 1829, to Louise Chapin Terry, of that city. He studied law in Buffalo and after his admission to the bar practiced a short time in this State. He then went to Woodstock, New Brunswick, where he practiced his profession a number of years. He afterwards settled in Michigan and was there elected to the bench. He subsequently entered the ministry, and in 1855 came to Olean, where he was rector of St. Stephen's Episcopal church several years. He died in Moravia, Cayuga county, January 11, 1863. It is said that he practiced law a short time at Ellicottville before going to New Brunswick.

Elijah Griswold was also admitted at the same term, October, 1831, but the records do not show where he lived.

Francis Storm was admitted to practice in 1831, and located in Franklinville, where he remained two or three years, and went away. He seems to have come from Monroe county and was a member of Assembly from that county in 1828. Nothing has been learned of his history after leaving Franklinville.

Eleazar Harmon.*—Any history of the bar of Cattaraugus county would be incomplete without the mention of the name of Eleazar Harmon, who for many years was recognized as its most prominent member. Mr. Harmon was born in Onondaga county, N. Y., on the 28th of February, 1808. His educational advantages were very meager, but such as the schools of his neighborhood then afforded he eagerly availed himself of, and soon, at an early age, turned his attention to the study of the law, commencing his preparatory course at Aurora, N. Y. Removing to Ellicottville in 1832 he entered the law office of Anson Gibbs, and was soon afterwards admitted to the bar as an attorney and counselor of the Supreme Court. Very soon after his admission to the bar Mr. Harmon was known throughout the county as an able practitioner. He was employed and thereafter continued to be engaged on one side or the other of nearly every important case that was brought before the courts. The county was then comparatively new. Ellicottville was the county seat, and on that account, as well as on account of the location there of the offices of the Holland Land Company and its successors, it was considered one of the most thriving towns of the county. Important litigations frequently grew out of the real estate transactions of the land companies as well as out of the extensive lumber business along the Allegheny river and its tributaries. Whatever controversies there were the services of Mr. Harmon as a lawyer were almost invariably employed in their adjustment. The most important question that arose in the county in many years related to the title of the Holland Land Company. Every landowner was interested in it and the excitement in regard to it became so intense as to threaten the public peace. Mr. Harmon was engaged as attorney of the land companies, and by his great influence with all parties induced them finally to abide peaceably by the decision of the court in a case pending therein, wherein the question of title was the only issue. The case was brought to trial after the most elaborate preparation on behalf of the companies. Full documentary and other evidence, procured at great trouble and expense, clearly established the title, and no doubt was thereafter entertained in regard to it. Few lawyers in western New York equalled Mr. Harmon in the knowledge of the law; fewer still in the ability to present a case in the most forcible manner before a court or jury. He was of a nervous temperament and threw his whole soul into his case. Possessed of a logical mind he drew his conclusions with unerring judgment. He never went into court unprepared, and hence in all the cases in which he was engaged he showed a remarkable familiarity with the legal questions that arose in the progress of a trial, and which the ordinary practitioner finds it difficult to meet. In the preparation of his cases his power of concentration was intense. No point escaped him and he was always fully equipped. He could not be surprised by the citation of an authority nor deceived by mistaken analogy. His manner was candid and courteous; apt at repartee, though rarely indulging in wit for effect, yet ready in parrying an attack. As an advocate Mr. Harmon was earnest, logical, effective, and very successful. He was not a fluent speaker, but if eloquence consists of the faculty of convincing a jury he was an eloquent one. By his sincerity of manner, his remarkable power of analysis, his judgment of the bearing of evidence and power of marshaling it he frequently put aside the most glowing efforts of an adversary and rescued his case when defeat seemed inevitable.

Mr. Harmon will long be remembered, not only as standing at the head of the Cattaraugus county bar of his time, but as ranking high on the list of eminent contemporaries in the profession in western New York. He retired from active practice in 1851 on account of failing health, and thereafter devoted himself mainly to business enterprises in various ways until the time of his death, which occurred November 22, 1882. From the date of his retirement from the bar he passed his days amidst the refinements and quiet pleasures of his beautiful home in Ellicottville, where he had lived for half a century. His home was a perfect type of domestic happiness and contentment, and his latter years were spent in the serene enjoyment of the society of his family and friends. Mr. Harmon was thrice married; first to Harriet Goodspeed, who died in 1839, leaving two sons, Luke Goodspeed and Clarence Gillette, both living. Second he married his first wife's sister, Caroline Goodspeed, who died in 1842, leaving a daughter, Harriet Caroline, who died in Florida in 1872. Third, in 1874, he married Maria Thalheimer, who survives him. They had two children, Jennie Carver (who died in infancy) and Eleazar, now a resident of Baltimore, Md.

Lyman Scott, Jr., was admitted to practice in our Common Pleas in 1832. It is said that he came from New Hampshire and located in the town of Freedom, at Sandusky; that he practiced there several years and finally went west in about 1836. He was an uncle of Capt. Harrison Cheney, of Freedom, Captain Cheney's mother being a sister of Mr. Scott. Mr. Scott was town clerk of the town of Freedom three years, from 1832 to 1834, and also held the office of justice of the peace several years.

Samuel M. Russell became an attorney of the Court of Common Pleas in 1832. Mr. Russell practiced in Allegany county and is still living at Cuba. He was for many years a member of the law firm of Champlain, Armstrong & Russell.

Chauncey Tucker was admitted to practice in the Court of Common Pleas in 1832. He resided at Fredonia, where he was a prominent lawyer many years.

Josiah Ward was admitted to practice in 1833. He seems to have come from Chautauqua county and to have practiced for a time at Franklinville. No very definite information concerning his history has been obtained.

Oliver W. Harriman

James Burt was a native of the Mokawk valley, and his ancestors came from Holland at an early day. He came to Franklinville in the autumn of 1831 and was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas in 1833. He was appointed district attorney in 1834, and in 1836 was appointed a Supreme Court commissioner, and was a member of Assembly in 1844. He left Franklinville after a few years' practice and spent two years in Cincinnati, Ohio. About 1846 or 1847 he reached Dubuque, Iowa, where he engaged in practice and was soon recognized as the leading lawyer of northern Iowa. His professional engagements extended over all portions of the State. He was elected to the bench of the district court, which position he held until his death August 7, 1886, in his seventy-eighth year. While in this county he had the reputation of being an able lawyer and a man of rare attainments. He was a fine scholar, and kept up his classical reading until the end of life. For twenty years prior to his death he was an active member of the Congregational church. He married Phœbe Lawton.

Wells Brooks was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1833, and was one of the prominent lawyers of Springville, N. Y.

Chester Howe, "one of a family of ten children, was born in Wells, Rutland county, Vt., March 22, 1812. His father, Jaazaniah Howe, served his country in the Revolutionary army, entering as a common soldier in 1779, being then seventeen years old, and served through the remainder of the war, suffering with his fellow soldiers untold hardships from hunger, cold, and exposure of various kinds, having nothing to eat at times for days but soup made of dry bones pounded up and boiled. He died in 1838, aged seventy-six years. His son Chester had a sickness in his twelfth year which left him with an enfeebled constitution and curvature of the spine, from which he never recovered. But this delicate and feeble child, with very limited advantages for an education, was enabled by his own exertion and inborn worth to step forth in his early manhood and take a place in the front rank. He possessed wisdom, a good degree of learning, and an indomitable love of right, which governed all his actions and recommended him to his fellows, and were his stepping-stones to advancement and success." Moving to Lodi, now Gowanda, in 1828, he attended the common schools and was a student two terms at the Fredonia Academy. In 1829 he entered as a student the law office of Albert G. Burke. He was admitted as an attorney and counselor January 31, 1833, and in June of that year went into the office of Chauncey J. Fox, of Ellicottville. September 23, 1835, he was married to Harriet D. Fox, a sister of Chauncey J. Fox, and returned to open his law office in Lodi. In April, 1839, his wife died. The first of July, 1840, he was married to Matilda E. Torrance, of the town of Persia. He was partner in the practice of law with the late C. C. Torrance from 1846 to 1852. February 1, 1840, Mr. Howe was appointed Supreme Court commissioner and again appointed to the same office February 9, 1842. In the fall of 1840 he was elected to the Assembly. June 30, 1847, he was appointed attorney for the Seneca Nation of Indians<sup>9</sup> on the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, a position which he held until his election as judge of Cattaraugus county. In this same year the Legislature passed an act providing for the education of the children of the Indians on these reservations, naming Chester Howe as receiver of all appropriations, to be applied by him to the maintenance of Indian schools. Under this act Mr. Howe established schools upon both reservations. These schools were successful and have ever since been continued. Mr. Howe drew for the Indian Nation a new constitution providing for a president and twelve councilors to be elected annually in place of the government by chiefs. This constitution was adopted December 4, 1848. Mr. Howe was also the attorney and agent for the New York & Erie Railroad Company for the purchase of the right of way for their railroad through Allegany county and through all of Cattaraugus county east of the Allegany reservation. He was of great assistance to the road and to the Indians in respect to the right of way for the road through the reservation. Mr. Howe continued until his death the trusted counselor and adviser of this people in all important matters. He was elected county judge and surrogate of Cattaraugus county in the fall of 1851 and assumed the duties of his office January 1, 1852. His knowledge of law together with his keen sense of justice and humanity rendered him eminently suited to the office. His term of office expired January, 1856. During the two remaining years of his life he suffered much from disease. Still he continued to labor on cases which were constantly referred to him. He died at the Elmira Water Cure on March 16, 1858. Judge Howe was one of the prominent men of the county for twenty-five years, taking an active part in public enterprises, and using his talents and his energies to build up the communities in which he lived. "His kindly manners, his instructive conversation, his quaint wit, his retiring modesty, his appreciation of right and wrong, and those high and ennobling qualities that go to make up the character of a good man" endeared Judge Howe to a wide circle of acquaintances. His widow, Mrs. Matilda E. Howe, is now living in Randolph.

Cephas R. Leland came from Erie county and was admitted to our Common Pleas in 1833, and located in Perrysburg for the practice of law. He remained there a short time and then moved away. He practiced a while at La Grange or Irving, N. Y., and was an Indian agent there for several years, and finally removed to Milwaukee, where he died. C. T. Leland, auditor of the Lake Shore Railroad Company at Cleveland, Ohio, is a son of Mr. Leland. He was an uncle of William O. Leland, a prominent citizen of Hinsdale.

Peter V. S. Wendover was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1833. It is not known where he lived, but he appears never to have resided in this county.

Pliny L. Fox was admitted in 1833. He was a younger brother of Chauncey J. Fox, and came to this county in 1818. He worked three or four years clearing land and farming near Ellicottville and then taught school at Yorkshire, and in 1827 was the first justice of the peace elected in Ellicottville under the constitutional amendment which made the office elective. In 1828 he commenced the study of law in the office of his brother at Ellicottville, and was soon after admitted to the bar, after which he practiced in the courts of Cattaraugus county several years. He practiced law in Ellicottville, Ashford, New Albion, and Little Valley. It is said that while engaged in practice in this county Mr. Fox, in connection with Jesse Mason, devised a scheme for building a city at the little hamlet of Plato in the north part of Ellicottville. They laid out some land and mapped it into city lots, and, it seems, sold some of them. But, as might have been expected, the scheme was a failure and its projectors had some trouble over it. About 1842 Mr. Fox moved to Illinois. When the war broke out he took an active interest in recruiting men for the Union army, and went to the war as a captain in an Illinois regiment. He rose to the rank of major and at the close of the war returned to Illinois. He died in 1885.

Josiah S. Masters was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas in 1833, coming to Machias from Troy, N. Y. He is said to have been a college graduate and had the reputation of being a man of ability, but somewhat intemperate. He remained in Machias a few years and then went west.

William Waith, son of John Waith (or Wayth, as the name was formerly spelled), was born at Bycross in the parish of Preston-on-Wye, Herefordshire, England, April 17, 1796. He was left an orphan at an early age, and was reared on a great farm by Mr. Eliot, a benevolent gentleman and lord of the manor. On the death of his benefactor he went up to London to seek his fortune, and after engaging with scant success first in different forms of hired service and afterwards as a small tradesman he obtained some employment as clerk to a law firm in Tokenhouse Yard, near the Bank of England. Later he became an attorney in the Mayor's Court. In 1832 an increasingly troublesome asthma decided Mr. Waith to try a change of country; he came to America and was led by a train of events to Cattaraugus county, where he first found a home. He settled in Sugartown, to the south of Ellicottville, and tried farming, but never succeeded well in it. He obtained employment as a writer in the office of Staley N. Clarke, the Holland Land Company's agent in Ellicottville. In 1833 he was appointed by Mr. Clarke to serve notices "to quit" on a class of settlers who had had no title to the lands on which they were living. In the same year he was admitted to practice in the Court of Common Pleas of this county, but he did not practice long. Upon quitting the legal profession Mr. Waith turned his attention to the work of the Christian ministry, and was ordained by the Presbytery of Buffalo in 1837. He preached in Burton (now Allegany), Napoli, and Portville in Cattaraugus county and Ellington, Silver Creek, and Ripley in Chautauqua county. He died at Ripley on June 4, 1860, and was buried at Silver Creek.

Robert S. Wilson took the oath of office as attorney in the Common Pleas on January 28, 1834.

Charles C. Severance was also admitted to practice in 1834. He became a prominent lawyer in Springville and had considerable practice in this county.

David McCluer was the son of Joseph McCluer, one of the pioneers of Franklinville. Joseph McCluer was paymaster in the army during the War of 1812 and was on duty at Buffalo when it was taken by the English and burned in 1813. David was born February 12, 1805, and died August 20, 1880. "He was a man of good native abilities, but not industrious or studious, and gained no position in the courts of record. He did, however, a large business for a time in the lower courts." He was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1834.

George W. Cutter was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1835. During this same year he established a newspaper at Olean called the Alleghany Mercury and conducted it one year, when it was changed to the Olean Advocate under the control of Rufus W. Griswold. He does not seem to have been engaged in the practice of law.

Thomas J. Williams was also admitted to the Common Pleas in 1835. Homer H. Stewart was also admitted during this year. Thomas J. Sutherland was also admitted during this same year; Austin C. Chipman also became a member of the court in 1835. Nothing is known of either of these men.

John E. Niles was also admitted in 1835, coming from Pennsylvania. Nothing further is known of him.

L. H. Hewett was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas in 1836. He practiced for a time at Gowanda.

David R. Bacon was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1836, coming from New York city. He was then a young man located in Olean, where he practiced a short time and went away. His subsequent history can not be traced.

E. F. Warren took the oath of office as attorney of the Common Pleas the same year. He lived in Chautauqua county and was a prominent lawyer.

Marvin Trall was also admitted in 1836 and was for a short time in partnership with Joseph E. Weeden at Randolph.

Hiram Greenfield was a school teacher in his early days; he afterwards studied law and was admitted to practice in 1836. He located in Ellicottville and was there a short time, when he moved away.

Ashbel H. Hurd was born in Augusta, Oneida county, in November, 1814. He began business life as a teacher of the common schools, alternately teaching in winters, and using his means thus obtained to defray the expenses at the academy and in reading law. He came to Gowanda (then Lodi) and entered the law office of Albert G. Burke when about eighteen years of age and was admitted to the bar in 1836, after a seven years' course of study. Soon after his admission he opened a law office in Gowanda, where he had a successful legal career until his death March 31, 1851. In 1838 Mr. Hurd was married to Rebecca E. Stillson. After Mr. Hurd's death she married Halsey Stearns and is now living in Gowanda. Mr. Hurd was appointed an associate judge of the old Court of Common Pleas in 1843 and served until the court was abolished by the constitution of 1846. Judge Hurd is described as a large, powerful man, six feet or more in height, of a cheerful disposition, and genial, pleasant manners. He was reputed to be a very able lawyer and gave promise of a successful career. He died at the age of thirty-seven.

Wales Emmons was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas at the October term, 1836. He came from Erie county, where he was a practicing lawyer.

Joseph T. Lyman was admitted at the same term. He had been previously admitted to practice in the Supreme Court. He lived in Hinsdale, where he established a newspaper in 1836 called the Hinsdale Democrat, which was published about two years.

James J. Strang, who was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas in 1836, had a remarkable career. He practiced law a while, and also published for a year or more the Randolph Herald, beginning about 1843. He afterwards became a Mormon prophet and the successor of Joseph Smith. The editor of this chapter is indebted to Dr. Frederick Larkin, of Randolph, for the facts concerning the career of this remarkable man. The impression or impulse which prompted Mr. Strang to embrace Mormonism was the result of a chance remark by Dr. Larkin himself. Shortly after the death of Joseph Smith, and after Mr. Strang had received his "call" to become a Mormon, the State of Wisconsin was opened for settlement. Thither he went and selected a location which exactly fulfilled a prophecy made years before by the great founder of his holy religion. This Mormon community met with so much opposition in Wisconsin that the prophet received a direct revelation that they plant their standard upon the Beaver Islands in Lake Michigan. The settlement was immediately commenced, the success of which vindicated the truth of the revelation of the prophet. So great was the number of accessions that they were forced to live in tents. In about two years the prophet could boast of more than 1,000 followers. Then he began to dabble in politics, was appointed postmaster at Beaver Island, and was elected a member of the Legislature of Michigan. He was claimed to be the most powerful speaker and debater that ever occupied that position in the State. After the close of the session of the Legislature Mr. Strang visited Randolph and delivered several lectures upon the Mormon faith. After a short visit he returned to Beaver Islands, where the Mormons were congregated. Some of his people became dissatisfied with him as a prophet and lost confidence in him, and one evening as he was walking he was assassinated by one of his enemies. He lived only a few days after receiving the fatal wound. Mr. Strang is described as a well-formed man, remarkably healthy and strictly temperate; his head exceeded in several directions that of Daniel Webster. He possessed a wonderful memory, and as an orator he had few equals. He had a great command of language and could apply it in a wonderful manner. As a lawyer he lost the confidence of people who knew him and had little practice.

Orson Stiles was admitted in 1837. He seems to have been for a short time in Ellicottville, but was later located in Fredonia and became one of the prominent lawyers of Chautauqua county.

Alanson Coats read law with Joseph E. Weeden, of Randolph, and was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1837, but did not practice in this county.

Samuel P. Johnson was admitted in 1837 from Pennsylvania, but did not engage in regular practice here.

Cyrus G. McKay was admitted at the June term of the Common Pleas in 1837 upon an examination, but did not engage in practice in courts of record. He was for many years a prominent citizen of the town of Allegany and died May 3, 1893.

Morris Fosdick took the oath of office as an attorney of the Common Pleas on June 23, 1837, but did not engage in practice in courts of record.

J. C. Morse is said to have practiced law for a short time about 1837 at Perrysburg, at what was then known as "Cooper's Corners."

Joseph E. Weeden was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court on May 30, 1836, and his license was signed by Chief Justice John Savage. He is therefore by many years the oldest lawyer in the county, and he has been in active practice nearly all the time since his admission. The period of his professional life covers more than half our national existence, and during that time he has witnessed many and remarkable changes in the development and progress of our country. When he was admitted to the bar the population of the entire Union did not exceed the present population of New York and Pennsylvania. While he was preparing for his profession Andrew Jackson was president, and during his professional life sixteen presidents have occupied for a brief season the seat of power and have gone their way again to private life. He has seen the Nation pass through two great wars: one the war with Mexico, resulting in a large acquisition of territory, and the other the war of the Rebellion, the most gigantic struggle in all history. He has seen the Nation spreading itself across the continent until the great western wilderness has been made to blossom like the rose. In his own commonwealth he has watched with pride the stately march of the Empire State in her development and progress. He has seen our judicial system radically changed, the courts of his youth abolished, and new ones created. He has seen the practice changed from the old common-law system to the codes; he has marked the great constitutional and statutory changes that have accelerated the centralizing tendencies of modern times. He has observed and experienced the beneficial results of the development of our fair county from the period of the stage coach and the rudeness of pioneer life to the prosperous conditions of the present day.

J. E. Weedon

Mr. Weeden was born in Norwich, Conn., July 27, 1809, and is the eldest child of Caleb and Civil (Lathrop*) Weeden. Caleb Weeden was a farmer. He removed to Chelsea, Orange county, Vt., in 1810. After a residence there of four years he migrated westward as far as the town of Pike, Wyoming county, was one of the pioneers, and settled in the forest nearly a mile from the nearest human habitation. The entire town was a primeval forest, without roads other than paths made by clearing away underbrush and winding among the trees. "There existed no improvements whatever, so that he had to cut away trees to make a clearing to erect his humble log cabin, around which he proceeded to clear a small farm. On the same day that they removed to their new habitation in the wilderness their second daughter and third child was born. Their son Joseph, of whom we write, was prostrated by a severe and prolonged sickness, which at the time it was thought by the physician and friends of the family would terminate fatally. He recovered his health, but never enjoyed a robust constitution. The facilities for an education were meager, but the settlers evinced a desire to do all they could for the establishment and maintenance of regular schools. Availing themselves of a log cabin of small size they converted it into a school house and placed in it a young lady teacher. It was under such circumstances that young Weeden began his common school education, he and his sisters going a mile through the woods during the summer. His father had been a teacher and both his parents were educated in the common schools of Connecticut, and they imparted to their children while at home much valuable instruction and endeavored to inspire them with a love of learning." About a year after their settlement in Pike Mrs. Weeden died and the family were deprived of the benefit of a mother's care, and the father being in moderate financial circumstances was obliged to manage matters alone as best he could, and in consequence the children made little educational advancement for several years, there being no school within convenient distance. "At the age of eighteen young Weeden was allowed a term at a select school taught by Rev. Anson Tuthill, a well-qualified and competent teacher. Prior to that time he had assisted his father on the farm as much as his impaired health would permit, with intervals of attendance at the common schools. From this time until he attained his majority his time was divided between the farm, attending

* The maternal ancestors of Mr. Weeden, the Lathrops of Norwich, Conn., are descendants of Rev. John Lathrop, of England, who preached to the first Independent or Congregational church organized in London. Mr. Lathrop was imprisoned two years on account of his religious belief and released on condition of his leaving the country. He emigrated to America in 1634 and was the first minister of Scituate and Barnstable, Mass. His son Samuel went to New London, Conn., in 1648, and subsequently to Norwich, where he died. Col. Simon Lathrop, a descendant, commanded one of the Connecticut regiments in the successful expeditions against Annapolis and Louisburg. He died January 25, 1775. He was an upright man and an estimable citizen. His sons Simon and Elijah were prominent in the town and owned considerable real estate. Israel and Joshua Lathrop were landholders and public spirited men. Dr. Daniel Lathrop was the first druggist in Norwich and probably in Connecticut, and for many years the brothers Lathrop were engaged in this business. In 1779 Capt. Ebenezer Lathrop was in military service. In 1782 an association against illicit traffic was formed in Norwich and Josiah and Rufus Lathrop were members. Representatives of the family have been resident in Norwich since that time.

the select school, and teaching a common school. At the select school he obtained the rudiments of a classical education and some of the higher branches of mathematics. At the age of twenty-two he commenced the study of law with the late Luther C. Peck, then a prominent lawyer of Pike, who afterwards moved to Nunda, Livingston county. He continued his studies for about five years, supporting himself by intervals of land surveying and teaching school. As already stated he was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court in 1836 in the city of New York."

In the summer of the same year he located in Randolph for the practice of his profession and was the second lawyer who settled in that part of the county, George A. S. Crooker, then of Conewango, being the first. He was the first resident lawyer in Randolph, and when he came here in 1836 the lawyers in practice in the county were George A. S. Crooker at Conewango, the only lawyer west of Ellicottville at that time; Chauncey J. Fox, Anson Gibbs, Eleazar Harmon, and Lewis D. Simonds at Ellicottville; James Burt and David McCluer at Franklinville; Chester Howe at Persia; Timothy H. Porter, Andrew Mead, and Roderick White at Olean; and Ashbel H. Hurd, at Perrysburg,—all of whom are now deceased. Mr. Weeden was one of the founders of the Randolph Academy (now Chamberlain Institute) and was a member of the Board of Trustees until the institution was transferred to the care of the Methodist Episcopal church. He opposed the transfer on the ground that he was unwilling it should be controlled by or managed in the interests of a religious sect, claiming that the institution should confine itself to the promulgation of science and literature, and that such was the intention of its founders. Although not an active politician he has always taken an interest in prominent political issues. He acted with the old Whig party during its life and was a member of the Assembly of New York in 1847. This was a long session, continuing about eight months of the year. The then recent adoption of a new State constitution rendered a large amount of legislation necessary in order that the statutes might conform thereto, and Mr. Weeden participated in the enactment of the "judiciary act" of 1847 and other legislation of that year adopted for the purpose of re-organizing the judicial system of the State. He was a member of various important committees, among them the committee appointed to divide the State into senatorial and judicial districts. "After the dissolution of the Whig party he united with the Republicans, with whom he continued to act until after the close of the war, when he disagreed with some of its principles and especially with its policy towards the South and the colored people, and since that time has acted with the Democrats." In 1840 he was appointed by Governor Seward a Supreme Court commissioner for the county of Cattaraugus and in 1848 he was appointed by Governor Young a loan commissioner for Cattaraugus county. He has also held the office of justice of the peace and several minor offices in the town. Some time ago Mr. Weeden sold the principal part of his law library to Hon. William H. Henderson, and since that time he has not been engaged in extensive practice, although he still goes to his office daily, transacts minor professional business, and attends to his property interests.

Mr. Weeden was a very active lawyer in his earlier years and had an extensive practice. He was a close student, careful in his practice, fertile in resources, and had occasion frequently to devise new methods of procedure in adapting legal practice to the new condition of things consequent upon the change in our judicial system wrought by the constitution of 1846. In addition to his professional work Mr. Weeden has given considerable attention to the investigation of scientific and philosophical questions and is a member of the American Scientific Association. On the 27th of September, 1836, he was married to Margaret, third daughter of Gershom and Marion Wait, then of Sherman, Chautauqua county, and five children were born to them, four sons and one daughter.

Seth Lockwood was also admitted in 1837, but did not engage in general practice. He lived in Hinsdale, where he was a justice of the peace several years. He was also supervisor of the town of Hinsdale in 1840 and 1841, and was a justice of sessions in 1851 and also in 1866 and 1867.

Hiram H. Barney was admitted in 1837 and practiced law a short time in Franklinville, and then went to Aurora, N. Y., and engaged in teaching.

W. A. Stewart became an attorney in our Court of Common Pleas in 1838. He seems to have been a resident of Allegany county, where he afterwards held the office of district attorney.

Daniel Reed Wheeler came from Cortland, N. Y., and located in Ellicottville, where he was a prominent lawyer several years. He was admitted to the Court of Common Pleas in 1838 and immediately began an active practice. In February, 1841, he was appointed district attorney and held the office three years. In 1844 he was appointed master and examiner in chancery. He soon afterwards moved from Ellicottville to Dunkirk and engaged in business with one of the Colmans. He remained there a short time and went west, locating at La Crosse, Wis., where he died about 1857. He married Frances Williams, of Ellicottville.

Leverett Spring was also an attorney in our Court of Common Pleas, taking the oath of office as such in 1838. He resided and practiced law in Arcade, N. Y.

Lester Cross was also admitted in 1838, but he does not seem to have ever engaged in practice in this county.

D. C. Bailey was admitted in 1838 and located in Gowanda. His health failed and he went south and died there about 1839.

Charles H. S. Williams was admitted to our Common Pleas in June, 1838. He was an Erie county lawyer, and was elected district attorney of that county in 1850.

Roderick White was born in 1814 and seems to have come to Olean from Springville, N. Y. He was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas in 1838. He was also admitted as an attorney of the Supreme Court in 1841 and as a counselor in 1844, both licenses being signed by Judge Samuel Nelson. He was also in the latter year admitted to practice as solicitor in the Court of Chancery. In 1845 he was elected to the Assembly and served one year. In 1855 he was elected to the State Senate from the Thirty-second District. He died May 26, 1856, while a member of the State Senate. For several years he was the only practicing lawyer in Olean. He did a general business and was a man greatly respected in the community, a good lawyer, a good citizen, an upright man, and one who enjoyed the confidence of the community. James T. Henry, in his "Personal Recollections," says of him: "He was a man of rare virtues and personal worth; his integrity and high honor were known of all men; he never knowingly deceived man, woman, or child. He was truthful and kind to all, a lawyer by profession, but he took more pleasure in settling and avoiding litigations in court than in receiving retainers from either side."

D. Carlos Woodcock was admitted in 1839 and located in Olean, coming from the eastern part of the State, either Albany or Troy. He published for a time a newspaper called the Olean Advocate, which was afterwards transferred by him to Dudley C. Bryan.

Horace M. Hawes was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1839, and seems to have been for a short time in Olean, but no definite information has been obtained relating to his practice or when he went away.

William Pitt Angel was a native of Otsego county, N. Y., and served an apprenticeship on the Freeman's Journal in Cooperstown, then under the control of Col. John H. Prentiss and William H. Stone; afterwards he was editor of a paper in Bath. He studied law with his father and was admitted to practice in our Common Pleas in 1840. He opened an office in Cuba, N. Y., and afterwards moved to Ellicottville, where he soon obtained a prominent position, and for a long time was one of the leading lawyers in the county. He took the oath of office as district attorney of Cattaraugus county February 7, 1844. He was elected district attorney in the fall of 1847 under the new constitution, and was again elected in 1856, holding the office altogether nearly ten years. In 1850 he received the appointment of inspector of prisons and in 1865 he represented the First District of Cattaraugus county in the Assembly. Upon the organization of the Ellicottville & Great Valley Plank Road Company in 1850 Mr. Angel was elected its secretary and treasurer. This road continued to be run until 1864, when it was formally abandoned. On the 22d of August, 1867, Mr. Angel delivered the address at the laying of the cornerstone of the court house at Little Valley. On leaving Ellicottville he removed to New York and was for a time associated with James W. Nye. He again returned to this county, locating in Olean, and in 1866 removed to Westchester county, and died February 11, 1869, at the age of fifty-six years. While in Ellicottville he was for some time in partnership with Charles P. Washburn and while in Olean was a partner of Harper H. Phelps. This did not continue long, Mr. Phelps having lost his life in the great fire in Olean in January, 1866.

Madison Burnell was also admitted to practice in our Common Pleas in 1840. He occasionally practiced in our courts, but was a resident of Jamestown, where he was one of the leading lawyers.

Marshall B. Champlain was admitted to our Common Pleas in 1840. He lived in Cuba, N. Y., where he practiced law several years, being a member of the firm of Champlain, Armstrong & Russell. He was a man of unusual ability and occupied a prominent place at the bar of western New York. He practiced considerably in this county. He held several important public positions, having been district attorney of Allegany county and also attorney-general of the State.

John W. Turner was also admitted in 1840 and seems to have been in practice for a short time in Gowanda.

Nelson P. Willson was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1840. His father was a resident of Ischua and is said to have been a well-to-do farmer. Nelson's early advantages were quite limited. He left home at an early age and found employment in a mercantile house in Chautauqua county, where he discharged the duties of a clerk about two years. He afterwards entered the office of Josiah Ward, a lawyer then living at Franklinville, and began the study of law. After pursuing his studies a year he became convinced that he needed a better general education, and he accordingly entered the Aurora Academy, where he remained two years, teaching common schools during the winter seasons to enable him to complete his academic studies. He came to Ellicottville in 1838 and entered the office of Eleazar Harmon, and after about two years of study was admitted to the Common Pleas. He immediately formed a partnership with Mr. Harmon, which continued until his death April 16, 1844. He is said to have been a young man of great promise.

Stephen T. Bentley was admitted in 1840 after an examination, but no information has been obtained concerning his residence.

Ira C. Irish was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1841 and practiced law at Gowanda. He seems to have resided in Erie county.

Martin Grover was also admitted to our Common Pleas in 1841. He was a resident of Angelica, Allegany county, and was afterwards a justice of the Supreme Court and also judge of the Court of Appeals.

A. S. Diven was admitted in 1841 and was a resident of the county of Allegany.

Orville C. Pratt was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1841. His grandmother was a sister of Gen. Joseph McCluer. Mr. Pratt at first chose a military career and entered the United States Military Academy at West Point on July 1, 1837. He was then eighteen years old. On account of ill health he was granted a leave of absence before the close of the first year and on March 13, 1839, resigned. He next turned his attention to the law, studying in the office of Mr. Stevens in Albany, N. Y., and after admission to the bar of the Supreme Court he returned to Franklinville and practiced about two years in connection with James Burt. He married a Miss Culver, of Rochester, N. Y., and after leaving Franklinville was for a time a resident of Rochester. He then went to Wisconsin and from there to Galena, Ill. While residing at Galena he was appointed by President Pierce territorial judge of Oregon and resided at Portland several years. He finally moved into California, making his home at San Francisco, and became a wealthy landowner. He died about two years ago.

Elisha Ward was admitted to our Common Pleas in 1841. He resided at Silver Creek, Chautauqua county.

Lorenzo Morris was admitted to practice in our Common Pleas in 1841. Mr. Morris is still living at Fredonia, N. Y.

William C. Mitchell was admitted to practice in 1842. John S. Ford was also admitted in 1842. Dolphin Stevenson was also admitted in 1842. No information has been obtained as to the residence of either of these three men.

Peter Masten studied law with Joseph E. Weeden, of Randolph, and was admitted in 1842. He practiced a few years in Randolph and moved away. In 1843 he was appointed examiner in chancery.

Albert Sawin was admitted to practice in 1842. Mr. Sawin was a prominent lawyer in Erie county. Charles S. Macomber was admitted the same year. He practiced a while at Gowanda.

Wilkes Angel was also admitted in 1842. Mr. Angel was a brother of William P. Angel, and for several years was a prominent lawyer in Allegany county. He is now deceased.

William Mitchell was admitted in the same year, 1842. He resided in Wyoming county.

Arthur B. Fenner took the oath of office as an attorney of the Common Pleas in October, 1842. Mr. Fenner resided in Chautauqua county.

David J. Pulling was also admitted in 1842 and practiced for a time in Franklinville. It is said that he then went to Hume, Allegany county, but no information has been obtained as to his subsequent career. Mr. Pulling was a brother-in-law of the late A. P. Laning, of Buffalo, and was said to have been an excellent lawyer.

Lewis D. Simonds was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas in 1843. He practiced in Ellicottville several years, and while there was appointed in 1844 to the office of master and examiner in chancery.

Theodore Smith was admitted as an attorney of the Common Pleas in 1843, but did not engage in practice. He was a native of Orwell, Rutland county, Vt., and located in this county in 1838; he was for several years connected with the Holland Land Company and afterwards in various important business enterprises. He subsequently moved to Buffalo. A more extended sketch of Mr. Smith appears in the chapter devoted to the town of Ellicottville.

Orange Rose was also admitted in 1843, but no information has been obtained as to his residence or practice.

J. Monroe Gillett was admitted in 1843 from Steuben county, but it does not appear that he was ever located in this county.

Wolcott Hatch was admitted in 1843. He lived in Cuba, Allegany county. Horatio N. Jacobs was also admitted in 1843 upon an examination, but it does not appear that either of these men practiced law in this county.

Addison G. Rice was born at Richfield Springs, Otsego county, December 29, 1821, and removed with his parents to the town of Otto, now East Otto, in May, 1826, and from that time until the fall of 1867 was a resident of this county. He attended the district school and then a few terms at Springville Academy, and was also taught at home by his father, who was then regarded as among the best educated men in the county. In 1841 he commenced the study of his profession with William P. Angel at Ellicottville and was admitted to the Court of Common Pleas in June, 1843, and to the Supreme Court in October, 1846. He commenced the practice of his profession at Ellicottville, where he continued to reside until he left the county. He represented the town of Ellicottville on the Board of Supervisors six years, from 1856 to 1859 inclusive and also in 1861 and again in 1867, and was chairman of the board three years, from 1857 to 1859 inclusive. He was a delegate to the first Republican national convention in 1856 and was a member of the Assembly in 1862, in which he served as chairman of the Committee on Claims and a member of the Ways and Means, and of the Committee on the Revision of Rules and Joint Rules of the two houses. After leaving this county Mr. Rice practiced law a few years in the city of New York and subsequently located in Buffalo, where he had an extensive practice, and was at the time of his death a partner of Loran L. Lewis, now a justice of the Supreme Court. He was recognized as one of the foremost men at the Buffalo bar. While in this county he became one of the leaders in the profession, often employed by other attorneys as the leading counsel in the trial of important cases. Soon after he was admitted to the bar he was married to Ellen R. McCoy. "Mr. Rice was a man of varied learning, of comprehensive views, of great force of character, of sound judgment, of strict integrity, resolute and determined, and unyielding in the cause of right as he understood it."

Robert Owen, Jr., was born in Clarendon, Orleans county, on the 17th of July, 1820. His father became a resident of Conewango in this county in 1828, Robert being then eight years old. His father, like most other early settlers, was a man of moderate means, and moreover in those days academies and select schools were not very numerous. He therefore could not give his children such opportunities for mental culture as are enjoyed by most youths in these days, being compelled to keep his boys at home from even the common schools during the summer and fall months. He was, however, a man who loved learning and did all he could to aid his children in educating their minds. He gave them all a portion of each day which was set apart especially for study and reading, and he taught them also to spend their evenings in this profitable manner. It was in this way that Mr. Owen obtained what education he had as a foundation to begin his way in the world. When he was about twenty years old he went to Randolph to study law, and for this purpose entered the office of Joseph E. Weeden. He remained with him several years, teaching school the first two winters to clothe himself and working for his board the rest of the year. He thus managed to acquire a knowledge of the law wholly from his own independent exertions, having no aid in his struggle from any quarter. As soon as he had prepared himself for his business he opened an office in Randolph and began practice. On the 11th of January, 1846, he was married. In 1848 he entered into partnership with Mr. Williams, afterwards of Jamestown, but this did not continue long. In 1849 he was nominated by the Whigs for the office of State senator and was elected by a large majority. His health broke down soon after he was admitted to the bar, and during the first year in the Senate his health did not permit him to take an active part in the work of the session. He was the youngest member of the Senate, but during his career he won for himself a reputation honorable in the highest degree. He was ambitious—too ambitious by far for his powers of endurance. He never spoke except on great occasions; and not then without the most careful and laborious preparation, and the manner in which he delivered his views when the occasion came showed the thoroughness of his study as well as the natural brilliancy of the orator. One of his great speeches was upon the nomination of Hamilton Fish for United States senator; and Mr. Fish was so much pleased with this effort that he afterwards presented Mr. Owen a fine gold watch and chain. During the latter part of the year 1851, while he was in Albany in the performance of his duties as a member of a select committee, his health again failed and it was some time before he was able to return home. He only reached home in time to witness the death of his wife, which occurred on the 31st of December, 1851. After that his health continued to fail and he died at Randolph, December 14, 1853.

Benjamin F. Green was admitted to the Common Pleas in this county in 1843. Mr. Green lived at Fredonia. He was elected a justice of the Supreme Court in 1853 and died in 1860.

William L. Starke was admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor in the year 1844.

Albert P. Laning was also admitted to practice in our Common Pleas in 1844. Mr. Laning subsequently located in Buffalo and became one of the leading lawyers of western New York.

Alexander Storrs was born at Worcester, Otsego county, January 9, 1806. After attending the common schools he began at the age of eighteen an apprenticeship at the shoemaker's trade and worked at this trade until he came to Franklinville in 1827. On the 15th of April, 1831, he married Phœbe Platt, daughter of Stephen Platt, of Plattsburgh, Clinton county. In 1832 Mr. Storrs moved to Hinsdale, where he resumed the shoemaker's trade. In 1836 he was elected justice of the peace in Hinsdale and held that office about thirty years, being elected the last time in 1866. His election to the office of justice of the peace led him to the study of the law, and in 1844 he was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas in this county, and to the Supreme Court in 1853 and to the United States Court in 1857. In 1855 he was elected a member of Assembly, and in this capacity it is said of him that he "was an industrious, capable representative, always in his seat during the pendency of any important legislation, voting against all jobs and corruption in whatever form presented to him." At that time he was a "hardshell" Democrat, but in 1856 he joined the Republican party and thereafter was an earnest adherent of the principles of this party. During the more active practice of Mr. Storrs in Hinsdale that town was the center of a large trade. It was before the building of the Buffalo, New York & Philadelphia railroad, and the Genesee Valley canal was then in operation and Hinsdale was the principal point of shipping for the Ischua valley and neighboring towns. Mr. Storrs had a good law practice and was one of the solid men of Hinsdale. Emery A. Storrs, Mr. Storrs's eldest son, who was educated in Hinsdale, subsequently removed to Chicago, Ill., where he became one of the leading lawyers of the northwest. Alexander Storrs had charge of important business interests while in active practice, being the counsel for several business men in Hinsdale who carried on large enterprises, and he was considered a safe and wise counselor. He paid more attention to office business than to court practice.

Allen C. Fuller was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas in 1844. He began practice in Hinsdale, but after a short sojourn there went to Warsaw, Wyoming county, and entered the office of James R. Doolittle. He was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court in this State in 1847. He immediately afterwards went west and located at Belvidere, Ill. In 1854 he formed a partnership with William H. Wood, formerly of Ellicottville, which continued about five years, when it was dissolved in consequence of Mr. Fuller's election to the office of Circuit judge. At this time Mr. Fuller had established an extensive practice and ranked among the ablest lawyers of northern Illinois. He was nominated and ran on the Republican ticket as presidential elector in 1856 and stumped the State in joint debate with the late General Rawlins, the Democratic candidate for Congress in that year. Upon the election of Governor Yates in 1860 Mr. Fuller accepted the position of adjutant-general of the State and continued in that office during the war of the Rebellion. He was recognized as an able and effective officer and rendered conspicuous service in organizing the forces of the State and pushing them on to the field. At the close of the war he retired from the practice of law and devoted himself to his own extensive business at Belvidere and elsewhere. He still resides at Belvidere.

Gideon L. Walker was admitted in 1845 from Allegany county, where he seems to have been engaged in practice.

George W. Gillett was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas at the January term, 1845, without examination, upon motion of Judge Chamberlain. Mr. Gillett had been county clerk and did not engage in the practice of law.

J. G. Staunton was also admitted in 1845. Azel B. Hamilton was admitted in 1845, but it does not appear where either of these men lived.

J. M. Parker was in practice as an attorney in Gowanda for a short time about the year 1845.

Milton L. Rice was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas in 1845. He was a brother of Addison G. Rice. Soon after his admission to the bar he removed to Kentucky and there engaged in general practice. He became eminent as a criminal lawyer. When the Civil war broke out he advocated the Union cause and remained one of the strongest supporters of the administration of Abraham Lincoln. "His energetic individual efforts did much to save Kentucky to the Union." He served as provost-marshal, and was also one of the presidential electors from Kentucky in 1864. After the war he substantially abandoned the practice of law and embarked in railroad enterprises. "His brain conceived and his energy pushed to completion the Iron Mountain railroad and he was president of the company many years." This road afterwards passed under the control of the Jay Gould Southwestern System and Mr. Rice removed to Colorado. He subsequently removed to Spokane Falls, Washington, where he died March 16, 1890.

Nelson Cobb, who was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas in 1845, was prominent in public life in this county a generation ago, and no history of the bar would be complete without a sketch of his career. He was born in Greene county, N. Y., in 1811. At the age of fourteen he moved with his parents to Livingston county, where his father, with the aid of his two sons, cleared up a farm. He attended the common schools in the winter and gained a great deal of his knowledge at that time from his parents, both of whom had been teachers, and who were educated, cultivated people. After finishing the common schools he attended an academy a short time. What other education he acquired was by his own efforts. He began the study of law at the age of twenty-one, but his eyes failed and for five years he could do little or nothing. While studying law he held his first office, at the age of twenty-two—that of commissioner of public schools of the town of Portage. Soon afterwards he held the position of constable, which office was of use on account of the pay which he received. His next office was justice of the peace, nominated by the Democrats and endorsed by the Whigs, with only three votes cast against him. Having moved to Cattaraugus county and entered upon the practice of law Mr. Cobb was nominated for prosecuting attorney and was defeated by about thirty votes, the majority against his party being over 500. He was soon afterwards elected judge of the county, being nominated by the Democrats and endorsed by the Whigs and elected by a large majority. This was in the year 1855. The term was for four years, which he held except the last three months. He resigned to go to Kansas. He located at Lawrence, in that State, in October, 1859. In April, 1865, he was married to Susan Eliot Baker, daughter of Marsena Baker, of Farmersville, a highly esteemed farmer and a member of the State Legislature at the time of his death. It was during the white heat of the strife of the war of the Rebellion that Governor Robinson, the first Free Soil governor of Kansas, appointed Judge Cobb to the position of chief justice of Kansas in place of Chief Justice Thomas Ewing. Judge Cobb had always been a Democrat, and though not a fanatic his political opinions were, as he was, firmly grounded in the Democratic faith, but his reputation was so high that the governor had no hesitation in giving the appointment, and his acceptance of the trust was received by the public regardless of party with entire satisfaction. Judge Cobb has decided many important cases and has handed down some opinions that will long stand as authority upon the questions involved. His reputation as a sound lawyer and an upright judge rests mainly, however, on his decisions in reference cases, settling principles of both law and fact. Mr. Cobb is not without military record. His age exempted him from military duty, but he was not slow to join in helping to defend the homes and property of his friends and neighbors. With the breaking out of the war it became apparent that Lawrence was endangered. He joined Captain Cracklin's company and drilled industriously. After Quantrell had burned Lawrence, sacked the place, and butchered 180 of her people it was evident that more vigorous measures must be taken. An independent militia company was formed in Lawrence and equipped in the best possible manner with weapons and ammunition paid for by the members of the company for the defense of the city. Judge Cobb was a private in the company, which was subsequently mustered into the State militia. During the Price raid he served as a member of the company under Captain Swift, a fearless and gallant soldier, in the Wilson Creek fight. The judge never asked for nor received any compensation for his services. He lost a fine law library, which was burned by the Quantrell raiders. In 1868 Judge Cobb moved to Kansas City, Mo., where he still lives. Here he continued the practice of his profession, and was the senior partner in the firm of Cobb & Cook for ten years and had charge of several protracted and important trials. He has retired from active life and is living quietly with his family, consisting of his wife and three daughters. While Judge Cobb was practicing law in Ellicottville he was for a time a partner of Allen D. Scott. While county judge he was also acting surrogate and performed the duties of both offices until April, 1857, when the two offices were separated by act of the Legislature and Judge Scott was appointed surrogate. Judge Cobb is remembered by the older members of the bar as a careful, painstaking lawyer and an upright citizen.

Edwin O. Locke was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas on February 5, 1845, and in June of the same year was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court at Rochester. Prior to this time he had practiced considerably in the lower courts. He practiced at Little Valley and also at Machias. He was a justice of the peace and also a justice of sessions in 1850. His most active practice occurred at the time of the building of the Erie railroad, as there was considerable trouble about title, wages, etc., incident to the enterprise. His opportunities for early education were somewhat limited, but by diligent exertion he succeeded in acquiring a fair education and became well read in the books of his time. He was a pleasing speaker and possessed an ample stock of ready wit. He died in 1853. Charles G. Locke, of Randolph, the surveyor, is his son.

William H. Wood was born at Hinsdale on June 25, 1822. His father, Emery Wood, was born in Greene county in 1797. At the age of fifteen years he entered the United States army in the War of 1812. He was twice taken prisoner. He was conveyed to Halifax, where he was released at the close of the war. He settled in Hinsdale in 1816, and in 1819 was married to Permelia Marsh and engaged in agricultural and mercantile business. William H., the subject of this sketch, passed his earlier years on his father's farm and in his store, attending such district schools as were to be found in the neighborhood at that time. Afterwards he was sent to the academy at Springville, then to the seminary at Lima, N. Y., where he finished his preparatory course in 1840. In the fall of the same year he entered Geneva College at Geneva, N. Y., remaining there during the freshman year. He was admitted to the sophomore class in Union College at Schenectady in 1841 and graduated from that institution in 1844. Having commenced reading law in the office of Judge Jones before his graduation he determined to embrace the legal profession. Upon his return from college he entered the law office of Eleazar Harmon, of Ellicottville, one of the leading lawyers of western New York, in October, 1844. He was admitted to practice in the Court of Common Pleas in June, 1845, and immediately formed a partnership with Mr. Harmon. He was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court in 1847. His partnership with Mr. Harmon, under the firm name of Harmon & Wood, continued until 1850, when Mr. Harmon retired from active practice on account of ill health. Mr. Wood remained in practice in Ellicottville until he removed from the State in November, 1854. In 1850 he was elected to the office of district attorney and held the office one term until December 31, 1853. In the fall of that year he was elected a member of Assembly on the Democratic ticket, and was a member of the Legislature during the session of 1854. In November, 1854, he left the State and engaged in practice at Belvidere, Boone county, Ill., in connection with Allen C. Fuller, formerly of Hinsdale, the firm being Fuller & Wood. In May, 1861, he removed to Chicago. Since that time he has not been in much active practice, but is engaged as trustee for large property interests. In 1869 he purchased a residence at Oak Park, a suburb of Chicago, where he resides. While residing at Belvidere he was county superintendent of schools. He has been supervisor of the town in which he lives and for three years was county commissioner. In 1847 he married Frances A., daughter of David Gregory, of Ellicottville. He is a member of the Reformed Episcopal church. Until 1856 he was a Democrat, but since the organization of the Republican party he has been one of its most earnest adherents. He is a brother of Staley N. Wood, of Hinsdale.

William Woodbury was born at Salem, Mass., September 8, 1818. His father, Rev. David Woodbury, was a Baptist minister, and in 1822, with his family and goods in a two-horse wagon, he made the journey from Massachusetts to Chautauqua county and settled on a farm three miles south of Fredonia. The journey exhausted his means except his horses and wagon, which he sold for a Holland land article of the farm, and his family were subject to the severe privations common to all the early settlers. This section was then largely a wooded country, and the rude but healthful fare—corn-bread, potatoes, beech-nut pork, and "leeky" butter—developed sinew and strength, and the father, mother, and five children (of whom William was the third) by industry and economy supplied the wants (few compared with this age) necessary to a comfortable home. Among the early settlers contentions and strifes could not be afforded. A mutual dependence existed, and the call for help by any neighbor was quickly responded to. Men who opened the wilderness to the sun were almost invariably large-hearted and big-brained men who were there to grapple with the hardships of frontier life. Game was plenty, and as William grew up he became fond of the chase and a good marksman, and has retained his love of field sports through life. In 1834 his father's family moved to a farm near Silver Creek. William remained at home, worked on the farm summers, attended school winters, and one term of a select school at Silver Creek. In the spring of 1839 he left home to seek his fortune in the west. With a leather trunk, a limited amount of clothing, and $11.75 in money, the sum total of his earthly effects, he went to Jamestown, worked two weeks rafting lumber, and then hired to Jones & Seymour to help run a raft to Cincinnati. He left Frewsburg the last of April and the next day they "tied up" at Warren. The lumber was run to Pittsburg in sections; there the whole was formed into one raft, six rods wide and twenty rods long. The nights were cold and frosty. A thin scattering of straw for a bed and only a light overcoat for covering made the nineteen days of running the raft a time of severe suffering. The young man soon gained the good will of the owners and of the hands, though many of them were rough characters. At Cincinnati he took a boat for St. Louis, getting a reduction of his fare by helping wood.

After one day at St. Louis he went up the river to Rock Island, and there started on foot for Chicago, following the trails of that unbroken country for his guide. Eight miles west of Chicago he found employment, remained there nearly two years, made many friends, then came home to Silver Creek by boat "down the lakes." In 1842 he began to study law with Judge Elisha Ward at Silver Creek, with whom he remained until admitted to practice in Chautauqua and Cattaraugus counties. He was admitted to the Common Pleas here in 1845, and opened an office in Gowanda, where he has since resided. In January, 1846, Mr. Woodbury married Majorie J. Barnard, of Forestville, and he says that to her counsels and energy he is largely indebted for all he has accomplished in life. In 1848 he was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court in the class with Judge S. S. Spring. In 1849 he was elected justice of the peace and appointed postmaster of Gowanda and held the office until a change of administration. In 1859 he was elected county judge and held this office four years. In 1862 he was commissioner for the draft which was suspended on the eve of completion by Governor Fenton. In 1873 he was appointed railroad commissioner for Persia and still holds the office. David R. Woodbury, of Wisconsin, A. B. Woodbury, of Silver Creek, and himself are the only members of his father's family living. Family tradition says that his grandfather was an officer in the Revolutionary army and fought at the battle of Bunker Hill, and that he was uncle of Levi Woodbury, an eminent jurist of New Hampshire. Judge Woodbury's mother's maiden name was Esther Wales. Her father was a resident of Massachusetts and often a representative in its Legislature. Judge Woodbury is the oldest lawyer in active practice in the county, and for nearly half a century has occupied a prominent place at the bar, and been connected with a large proportion of the important cases. A friend of Judge Woodbury contributes the following:

"He commenced professional life with a single aim, and that was to excel as a lawyer. Of robust constitution, an analytical mind, and a love for the work he soon achieved high standing as a careful practitioner. Judge Woodbury does not believe in dazzling the jury by meaningless pyrotechnics. Mastery of the law and facts of his case, united with good judgment, was the ground work of his success. He had an exalted conception of the duties a lawyer owes to his client. A retainer called forth his best energies and honest work. Though intensely Republican he was never attracted to political life. He well knew that his dominating purpose to attain prominence in his profession was incompatible with a thirst for official preferment. Earnest conviction characterized his every act. In examining a question of law he made it a part of himself and was relentless in his pursuit of it, and even an adverse decision by the court of last resort rarely altered his convictions. Defeat at Circuit or Special Term seldom discouraged him. Few men equalled him in nerve and coolness. If in the trial of a cause unexpected evidence apparently destroyed his chances of success he was not disturbed by it. He has always been a hard fighter in his profession. Earnest, aggressive, indomitable, and relentless in what he deemed right he excelled as a lawyer. He was a good citizen, an upright man who believed the old-fashioned virtues should be a part of a man's daily life."

Alexander Sheldon was born in Victor, N. Y., April 5, 1823. "His parents were farmers in limited circumstances, and the privileges of his boyhood were very meager compared to many around him." He worked hard upon his father's farm, and was also engaged at different times by neighboring farmers. His means of education were the common schools and afterwards the academy at Mendon, Monroe county, where he spent two years.

W. Woodbury

He early formed the resolution to leave home and seek his fortune in the west. His mother tied up his scanty wardrobe and he set out on foot. "He reached Randolph in 1842, at the age of nineteen, with a capital of $7 and all his personal effects contained in a pocket handkerchief." He first found employment as a merchant's clerk, but having determined to enter the legal profession he used his spare time in pursuing such studies as would best fit him for his life work. He struggled through this period under great disadvantages, but he overcame them all and was admitted in our Common Pleas in 1846. It is said that his first cause was in justice's court and his client was non-suited through an error of Mr. Sheldon's. He immediately paid the costs out of his own pocket, though it took nearly all his money, and began the case again. This time he succeeded, and thenceforward his professional life was eminently successful. His business was in the higher courts and was of a character that called for the greatest research and most profound knowledge of law. "His office became among his friends a place of frequent resort for counsel and advice, as his great experience and practical information on subjects that crowd the daily walks of life made him an invaluable counselor. He was a peacemaker rather than a promoter of strife; and his counsel was for a fair adjustment of difficulties wherever attainable." May 28, 1851, he was married to Leonora E. Granger, of Tolland, Mass. In 1853 he was elected district attorney of this county and served one term. It is said that he afterwards received a unanimous nomination for county judge, which he declined. He was elected to the Assembly in the fall of 1851 and served during the session of 1852. Mr. Sheldon was one of the strongest lawyers in this county and was highly esteemed as a citizen. It is said that he was pre-eminently the young man's friend. To the students in his office he gave not only the words of cheer and encouragement, but the advantages of his extensive practice. He died at Jamestown, N. Y., February 16, 1866.

Orlo J. Hamlin was admitted to practice in 1846 from the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.

Enos H. Southwick took the oath of office as an attorney of the Common Pleas on June 17, 1846, but did not engage in practice. Mr. Southwick was for a long time connected with the county clerk's office, and was elected to the office of county clerk in 1852 and again in 1858.

Alonzo Turner was admitted to the Common Pleas in 1846, but does not seem to have practiced in this county.

E. L. Rice was admitted in 1846, but no information has been obtained concerning him.

Alfred Tallent practiced law in Olean sometime in the forties, but did not remain long. It is said he removed to Jamestown and subsequently to New York. He is said to have been an able lawyer.

J. T. Clark lived and practiced law at Versailles in this county for a short time about 1848. It is said that he left his family here and went to California and remained there a few years; that he accumulated some money, returned, and took his family and went away.

Charles P. Washburn* was born at Cavendish in the State of Vermont on the 4th of September, 1821. The family of which he was a member has been remarkable for its many men of note in the public service, of whom the most distinguished, perhaps, was the Hon. E. B. Washburn, of Illinois. Those who were acquainted with the subject of this sketch during the few years that death spared his early manhood will admit that no brighter promise of a splendid eminence ever stimulated the energies of an aspiring nature. He was brilliant even in his boyhood, easily distancing all his comrades in study and attainments. Yet his was not, as is mostly the case with boys that are called smart, a mere evanescent precocity that sickened and died before the boy became a man. He developed in mind as he grew in stature, and every year to the day of his death added to his resources and strength. He studied hard and he never left a subject till he mastered it. He delighted in that exercise from which most boys shrink with unconquerable distaste, the exercise of declamation. Even when a school boy he faced an audience, however large, with the assurance of a practiced speaker, but without a touch of impudence or pert conceit, and in all declamatory contests for prizes or on "exhibition" days he stood unrivalled and pre-eminent. As the boy developed into youth and young manhood he composed and spoke his own discourses, and whether in the tilt of the lyceum or the rough and tumble of the debating club he was the invariable victor. He was a born orator, endowed with the whole range of qualifications requisite to the part, an unrivalled command of forceful and picturesque expression, imperturbable assurance, a voice of great compass and melodious in all its tones, and a delivery of wonderful grace and power. These brilliant qualities were supplemented by a ready, powerful, and cultivated intellect, a ripe scholarship, and a vivid imagination—all set off to the highest advantage by a winning presence, a gallant carriage, and a countenance which in moments of inspiration glowed and shone with the emotions of a pure and noble spirit. On the lecture platform he was superb. He was magnificent on the stump. But he was seen at his best on a purely extemporaneous occasion when something had occurred to put him on his mettle. Mr. Washburn entered Dartmouth College and completed the college course, graduating with high honors, though not the highest of his class. The assistance his father had been able to give him had been slight and he was considerably in debt for the means to pay his college expenses. In order to provide for the discharge of that debt, and also for his expenses while studying for a profession, he was compelled to teach. He found a suitable opportunity in Virginia, where he remained some years. While there he was attacked by a sickness, lasting several months, that brought him very near to death. It resulted in a fever-sore that sadly weakened and crippled him during the whole residue of his life. But he accomplished his purpose, and after returning north completed his legal studies, which he had pursued in Virginia as opportunity had offered, and was admitted to the bar of New York State in 1848. He was in politics an ardent Whig, and he entered with great fervor into the presidential campaign of that year for Taylor and Fillmore.

He had become a resident of Ellicottville in the county of Cattaraugus. He was almost a stranger there and quite so to the people of the county at large, but he worked and spoke for the presidential candidates of his party with such vigor, eloquence, and effect that he was the same fall made its candidate for county treasurer. He continued on the stump, and much oftener than was safe, until November, when he was elected, and started upon the duties of his office in January following. Owing to ill health and other drawbacks he did not actively commence the practice of law till the summer of 1850, when he formed a partnership with William P. Angel at Ellicottville, and for a few months made the law his principal business. But the "Compromise Measures" of that year had been stirring up flagrant controversy in the bosom of the Whig party between the then president, Mr. Fillmore, his administration, and his friends on the one hand and Mr. Seward and his following on the other. Mr. Washburn took a decided interest in politics and became a strong and untiring champion of the administration or Silver Grey side of the question. He was, in the fall of the year, appointed acting Indian agent for the State of New York. He held the office some months, when, at the desire of Mr. Fillmore, who wished to placate a political coterie in Buffalo by conferring that place on a Buffalo man, he resigned and was almost immediately appointed to a special agency in the Postoffice Department, which he held to the day of his death. As the duties of these successive posts, especially the last, were exacting, and his health never good, he practically ended his career as a lawyer by the acceptance of the first office. The whole of his active connection with the practice was comprised within the period of a very few months, but none who knew him can for a moment doubt that, had his life been spared and devoted to that profession, his gifts would have led him up to its highest honors. He died at Ellicottville, after a final sickness of a few days, on the 3d of March, 1853. Indeed his life, from the attack in Virginia, was one long sickness and involved a continued struggle against the debilitating effects of a prostrating disease and almost unrelenting pain. Nothing but an indomitable will, irrepressible ambition, and unflinching courage enabled him to withstand the fearful and at last fatal drain upon his strength and stamina. In person Mr. Washburn was slightly above medium stature. In spite of the limp in his gait, caused by his fever-sore, his carriage was extremely graceful. His head was a noble one and his countenance luminous with intellect. He was the most instructive and delightful of companions, always genial and gracious even when his tortured body was racked with pain.

No matter how much he might be suffering his smile was always ready, his spirit always high. His talk flowed on like a beautiful river, now musical with the murmur of laughing ripples, now sonorous with the rush of the cataract. Dying he left among the living few equals, no superior.

E. H. Sears took the oath of office as an attorney in this county in June, 1848. He does not seem to have been a resident of the county.

Cyrenius C. Torrance was the youngest of eight children. His parents emigrated from Middlebury, Vt., in 1808, to the State of New York, locating near Buffalo, and in 1824 moved to Michigan near Mt. Clemens, where Mr. Torrance was born July 21, 1825. The family left Michigan and came to reside in Persia in this county in 1827. Mr. Torrance's grandfather was an Irish Protestant who emigrated from Ireland to Vermont about the middle of the 18th century. He bought 400 acres of land in what is now East Middlebury, built a brick house on it, married a wife, and had five children. He died in 1816. His children were all born in the brick house, all grew up to manhood and womanhood, and all died in the old brick house except the father of Cyrenius, who died in Hidi, near Gowanda, in 1838. Mr. Torrance's education was acquired in the district schools. He studied law with the late Chester Howe in Gowanda, entering his office in 1842. He became a partner with Mr. Howe in 1846. This partnership continued until 1852, when Mr. Howe entered upon the duties of the office of county judge, to which he had been elected the preceding autumn. Mr. Torrance continued the practice of law in Cattaraugus county until 1858, when he moved into Erie county on the north side of the creek. He was married to Miss Mary Curtis on October 21, 1851. He was elected district attorney of Erie county in 1863 and appointed Grover Cleveland his assistant. He was afterwards a candidate for State senator upon the Democratic ticket, but was defeated. Mr. Torrance was a partner in the practice of law at Gowanda with Henry F. Allen, now of Buffalo. Later he formed a partnership with George M. Rider, now of Ellicottville, and at the time of his decease was in partnership with Fred J. Blackmon. In connection with his law business he was interested in various manufacturing enterprises. Mr. Torrance represented the town of Collins several years on the Board of Supervisors of Erie county and occupied a prominent place in that body. He was a man of intense activity, great pertinacity and strength of will combined with keen intelligence, and in the practice of his profession was a foeman whose steel was always to be dreaded. He was a tireless worker, a hard student, and thoroughly prepared all his cases. During the later years of his life his health began to decline, and he sought relief in travel, but without avail. He died April 1, 1888.

Lewis Hall took the oath of office January 27, 1847, but where he lived or practiced has not been ascertained.

William H. Andrews was admitted in 1847. He was raised in Leon, and while a young man was a clerk in a store there. After his admission to the bar he practiced at Leon and then went to Buffalo, where he became prominent. Mr. Andrews was some time in partnership with ex-President Millard Fillmore. He died several years ago.

Benjamin Mosher was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas at the January term, 1847, after an examination by a committee composed of George A. S. Crooker, Anson Gibbs, and Pliny L. Fox. Mr. Mosher did not practice in the courts of records, but was one of the most active and successful practitioners of his day in justice's court. At that time justice court practice was different from what it is now, and several men in different parts of the county gave a great deal of attention to it and became very expert. Mr. Mosher was one of the recognized leaders of the justice court bar. He was one of the pioneers of Leon, coming from Hoosick Falls, N. Y., and occupied a prominent place in her history and development. He was a man of strong will and great firmness, and wielded a great influence in local affairs.

George W. Canfield was born in Middlefield, Otsego county, in 1816. He studied law in Ellicottville and was admitted to the bar in 1847. He opened an office in Buffalo with Judge Clinton. He afterward moved to Ellicottville, then to Hinsdale, then back to Ellicottville, then to Little Valley, and then to West Salamanca, practicing some time in each of these places. He died at West Salamanca, April 12, 1867. Mr. Canfield had for many years been often subject to severe illness, which embarrassed him in the practice of his profession, and his life had evidently not been altogether a cheerful one. It is said that a short time before he expired he requested his sister to open the door that he might look out upon the green earth again. He took a last survey as far as he could see, said "it looks pleasant," and then said: "I have had a rough and stormy life, and I am ready to have it closed today." He is said to have been honorable and upright and highly esteemed in the circle of his acquaintances and friends, and had maintained a reputable standing in his profession. His remains were buried in Ellicottville.

Stephen P. Mead was admitted to practice in the Common Pleas on January 31, 1848. He was a son of Amos T. and Ann (Purdy) Mead and was born in the town of Norwich, Chenango county, September 26, 1819. He received his education at Fredonia Academy and in 1839 entered the law office of Chauncey Tucker, of Fredonia, and graduated at Cambridge Law School in 1842. He then returned to the office of Mr. Tucker. In 1844 he went to Versailles, N. Y., and in 1850 was appointed agent for the New York Indians and served in this capacity three years. In 1855 he went to La Porte, Ind., and served two terms as sheriff of La Porte county. He was then appointed clerk of the court and served as such until he went to California in 1870. He held the office of deputy collector at San Francisco a number of years. He died at Healdsborough, Cal., in 1887. It is said that Mr. Mead did not practice his profession after removing from this county and did but little business while here.

Joseph B. Wilkins was admitted to practice in 1848, but does not seem to have practiced law in this county until 1868, when he located in Allegany and remained there until 1873, and then removed to Michigan, where he died about ten years ago.

Samuel Stowell Spring was a son of Samuel and Eunice (Stowell) Spring, and was born at Grafton, Vt., December 25, 1823. He was the youngest of a family of fourteen children. His father was an energetic and practical farmer located on the uplands bordering upon the eastern slope of the Green Mountains and living on a stony farm, and it required an unfaltering industry to wring from the stubborn soil the required means of subsistence. Prior to the age of fourteen years young Spring's educational advantages were confined principally to the common school. His study there was supplemented by home teaching, by which he received not only the rudiments of learning, but the exemplary teachings of his father, instilling into his life habits of industry, energy, and perseverance; and also the wise counsels and pious precepts of his mother. At the age of fourteen he entered upon a higher grade of studies under the tuition of his brother Levi, who was a ripe scholar and a graduate of Amherst College. Here he remained a student until the fall of 1842, when he came to Arcade, Wyoming county, and attended the academy at that place one year, and then entered the office of his brother, Leverett Spring, and began the study of law. He did chores for his board and worked in the hay-field in summer to earn money to defray his expenses while pursuing his legal studies. He remained in the office of his brother until 1845, when he entered the law office of Wells Brooks, a prominent lawyer at Springville, where he remained a few months, and then returned to Arcade, where he prosecuted his legal studies nearly two years. In the spring of 1848 he left his brother's office and became a student in the office of Gen. Linus W. Thayer, of Warsaw, and remained there until the fall of the same year, when he was admitted to the bar. He came to Franklinville in the autumn of 1848 and opened an office for the practice of his profession. He was then unacquainted there, was in debt, and though well grounded in the elementary principals of the law he had had no experience whatever in its actual practice. David McCluer, of Franklinville, and Jerome B. Jewell, of Machias, were then in their prime and were astute practitioners in justice's court. It is said that they combined to run out the raw youth whose appearance indicated verdancy. Mr. Spring was at first easily beaten by them in justice's court, but his knowledge of the law enabled him to secure reversals and after a year or two he became master of the situation. He always liked to practice in justice's court; and even after his elevation to the bench he arranged to go into Allegany county on "pettifogging" trips, but was prevented by other engagements. "Ever clear and earnest in his convictions he at once took high rank in his profession, and was always distinguished for his complete mastery of his cases and thorough knowledge of legal principles." In the great majority of cases he was attorney for the plaintiff. During a good portion of the time he was in practice he was the only lawyer in Franklinville or that vicinity, and consequently was employed by those wishing to commence actions and was engaged in most of the cases arising in that part of the county.

On the 9th of May, 1850, he married Ellen, daughter of William Hogg, of Franklinville, she being the youngest of a family of twelve children. He continued in the practice of his profession with complete success and a growing popularity, and in the fall of 1859 was elected district attorney of Cattaraugus county and re-elected in 1862, holding the office in all six years. In 1870, with a unanimity scarcely paralleled in the history of political contests, he was chosen to the office of county judge, the duties of which he continued to discharge until the time of his death. "As a prosecuting attorney he was without vindictiveness to the criminal, but to the crime he was as relentless as destiny, allowing no considerations to interfere with the majesty of the law or to swerve him from his inflexible purpose of punishing the guilty, and no defective indictment ever tarnished his legal reputation. As a judge he held the scale of justice with an even and steady hand, zealously guarding the rights of all and granting favors to none. His unbending integrity as a man, and his extensive and thorough knowledge of the principles of law, secured for him the entire confidence of every member of the legal profession who had business at the court over which he presided, and appeals were seldom taken from his decisions. Not only had he secured the entire confidence of the legal profession, but by his honor as a man, his urbanity as a gentleman, and his conceded ability as a jurist he had acquired a growing popularity that pointed unmistakably to his elevation to a seat upon the bench of the Supreme Court of the State." Judge Spring was brought up with the New England notions of economy, and was never given in the least to speculation. He was liberal and public spirited, but careful in small matters. He was always in favor of public improvements, and during the war was a liberal contributor in proportion to his means for the suppression of the Rebellion. He was a reticent man as to himself, and sometimes appeared on the surface severe, even to asperity. This was caused during his later years by severe sickness; in fact, he was very tender hearted and could never endure seeing others suffer from pain or disease. His knowledge of the law was remarkable, and also his quickness in comprehending the vital point in any case. His was the motto of St Paul: "This one thing I do," and his whole life was devoted to the gratification of his ambition to excel as a lawyer.

He always enjoyed farming and since 1857 owned a small farm on which the family lived. About 1866 he added to this until he had one hundred and eighty acres, and he always assisted in the chores and in haying. His practice extended over a wide circuit, embracing nearly all of eastern Cattaraugus and extending into Allegany, Erie, and Wyoming counties. He had a remarkable love for the profession and also for his brother lawyers. He always enjoyed their companionship, but the burden of his talk was about the law. He never believed in making his fees dependent upon the result of the case, adopting the position that his services were worth the same, regardless of the consequences to his client. His outside reading was not extensive, but the books he read were standard and mainly historical. He was an enthusiastic admirer of Macaulay and read both his "Essays" and "History" more than any other works. He was also a thorough student of Hallam's works, reading carefully his "Constitutional History of England" and his "History of the Middle Ages." "In the initial proceedings for the incorporation of the village of Franklinville Judge Spring took an active and prominent part; his influence as a citizen and his knowledge of law either bore down or neutralized the powerful opposition arrayed against it and carried the enterprise to a successful termination. He was elected as its first president, and by his skill and astuteness, in connection with his official compeers, placed it as an incorporation in successful operation."

Subsequent to 1870 his health was in a state of slow but constant decline from a malady which defied all medical skill, and for five years he suffered intense pain without a murmur, never relaxing his habitual industry or ignoring his official duties. In the summer of 1875, by the advice of friends, he was induced to travel in the delusive hope that the invigorating atmosphere of the lake region of northern Minnesota might improve his health or at least mitigate his sufferings. He arrived at Duluth early in July, but after a few days was taken violently ill, and on the 18th of July, 1875, he quietly breathed his last, a stranger in a strange land. His remains were brought home and are now deposited in Mount Prospect Cemetery on the confines of the village of Franklinville, in easy view of that quiet home he loved so dearly and from which he parted so reluctantly. Hon. David H. Bolles, of Olean, who was many years a compeer of Judge Spring in the practice of law in this county, contributes the following observations on his professional and personal characteristics:

"There was nothing in the personal appearance of Mr. Spring to indicate the genuine and solid qualities of mind and character that lay hid under his peculiar exterior. A stranger observing him for the first time in court would have been surprised to be informed that he was one of the foremost lawyers in the county. The stranger would also have noted this peculiarity about him—the striking resemblance he bore in many ways, and particularly in his face and head, to Abraham Lincoln. There was discernible in him the same angularity of form and figure, the same carelessness of dress and attitude, the same cast of countenance and irregularity of feature, that distinguished the great president. His many peculiarities of manner and of person might be termed eccentricities, but they were all honest, natural, and genuine. He copied nobody. There was nothing put on for the purpose of exciting attention or remark, or gaining a reputation for originality. They were the spontaneous output of the man, odd and quaint, but entirely unaffected. These peculiarities might and sometimes did move the looker-on who did not know him to smile, but the smile would have disappeared at once on a better acquaintance, for under this surface of eccentricity he would have discerned the sterling qualities and high deserts of the man. Mr. Spring was a lawyer in the best sense of the word. Honesty is a homely term, and represents, as most suppose, a very common virtue, but such is not the fact. Downright, perfect, honest honesty is a merit too rare to be undervalued or ignored. He was honest as a man, and emphatically an honest lawyer. His honesty bore the 'hall mark.' It was veritable and genuine. He was an able lawyer likewise—thoroughly grounded in the doctrines, maxims, and science of the law, and exhaustively mastering the facts and principles involved in the cause in hand; full of resources and skillful in the use of them; rarely, if ever, taken by surprise; able, aggressive, vigilant, untiring, and sagacious; he was a redoubtable advocate and a formidable adversary in any forum, and before a jury as well as the court in banc. He was an industrious lawyer (and indeed without industry no lawyer can be either able or honest); patient and indefatigable in the preparation of his case, taking nothing for granted, questioning his client for the facts and searching his library for the law, and turning the light of his trained and subtle intellect upon every aspect, prospect, and tendency of his case. It is almost superfluous to add that he was scrupulously loyal to every trust. To every matter that came to his hands, whether trifling or important, he devoted his time, skill, and energy. If, as some one has said, genius is industry, Mr. Spring possessed genius of the highest order. He was industry incarnate. It was, in the main, industry that triumphed over all the deficiencies and drawbacks of his early years, and established him on an assured eminence of reputation and success. But his list of sterling attributes did not begin and end with industry. There were many other auxiliary qualities that aided in making him what he was. His moral perceptions were quick and clear, his principles sound to the core, his convictions strong and abiding. He detested sham and pretense. To his friends he was hearty and loyal, to his enemies frank and bitter. His mind was always in working order; his intellectual perceptions were rapid, clear, and accurate, his logic cogent and convincing. He made no pretensions to eloquence, but his speech was fluent, lucid, and replete with energy, and the quaintness and oddity of his style were often a helpful embellishment. His courage was indomitable and exhaustless, and he was seen at his best when confronted by the jeopardy of a desperate case. No matter what the odds, he flung himself into the fight without fear and without a thought of defeat or discomfiture. He gave his whole soul and all his energies to his case. Beyond all doubt his death was due to the tremendous toil and tireless devotion that marked his professional life. He died universally mourned and regretted, and his body was followed to the grave by a great concourse of sorrowing friends, among whom were many members of the bar from his own and other counties. He yet lives in the memory of the many who knew and honored him."

James O. Crosby is a native of the village of Lake George, Warren county, where he was born March 22, 1828. His father was Nathan Crosby and his mother, Melinda, was a daughter of Ketchel Bishop, who for fourteen years in succession represented Warren county in the New York Legislature during the gubernatorial careers of Daniel D. Tompkins and De Witt Clinton. The family moved to Little Valley in 1836. In 1842 Mr. Crosby determined that James should be a lawyer, and as the law required a seven years' course of study at that time, and a certificate to be filed at the beginning with the clerk of the Supreme Court by an attorney of that court, it was designed to start the boy in at fourteen to gain admission to the bar on arriving at his majority. Pliny L. Fox was then practicing law at Little Valley, and arrangements were made whereby he was to take the boy under his care and hear his recitations in Blackstone. During the winter following it was ascertained that Mr. Fox was only admitted to the Common Pleas and that no certificate had been filed. Mr. Crosby made arrangements the next spring with Daniel Reed Wheeler at Ellicottville, then district attorney, to take the boy into his office and board in his family. He was also expected to assist about the office and house, and the "chores" were sometimes so numerous that there was no time for the office work. On one of those days Mr. Wheeler said: "Now, James, while we are taking out this hole of potatoes I shall certify for you just the same as though you spent the time in the office." That winter the student took a recess and taught school in the Lebanon district in the town of Cold Spring, and in the spring attended one term at the Fredonia Academy and then entered the office of Eleazar Harmon. William H. Wood, who had just graduated from Union College, entered the office as a student three days before. The next winter was spent in teaching in the Kill Buck district in Great Valley and the winter following in the district half-way from Ellicottville to Great Valley. In those days teachers "boarded round." Robert H. Shankland was then surrogate and Francis E. Baillett was county clerk, and they gave the student occasional work, enough to pay his board. When the constitution of 1846 was adopted the time clause in the course of study for law students was abrogated, and good character and qualifications only were needed to gain admission to the bar. In 1848 John W. Fowler was conducting a law school at Cherry Valley, N. Y., and from November of that year until the March following, when the school was moved to Ballston Spa, Mr. Crosby "bunked" with Daniel G. Bingham in the back room of Charles C. Coleman's office, and attended the school while it lasted, and after that closed and until the General term of the Supreme Court at Albany in May, 1849, studied diligently, and then went to Albany with Mr. Bingham, where they were both admitted at that term. Charles P. Washburn was a partner of William P. Angel, but ill health kept him from the office, and on returning to Ellicottville Mr. Crosby at once found employment in their office as managing clerk, and so continued until September, when Mr. Washburn retired from the firm for a year, and the firm of Angel & Crosby was formed for that period. Mr. Bingham came to Ellicottville to take a post-graduate course with the new firm, and at the end of a year a partnership was formed between him and Mr. Crosby. After a short time the partnership ended, but they continued to occupy the same office until Mr. Crosby moved to Garnaville, Iowa, in 1854. In April, 1851, Mr. Crosby was married to Caroline C., youngest daughter of Anson Gibbs, then a prominent lawyer of Ellicottville. Upon locating at Garnaville in the fall of 1854 Mr. Crosby formed a partnership with Samuel Murdock, to begin the next spring, when Mr. Crosby intended to move his family. In the spring Mr. Murdock was elected judge of the district court and turned his office and business over to his expected partner. From that time to the present Mr. Crosby has continued in the practice of law, following the Circuit until 1861, and was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of the United States in March, 1884. The Iowa law formerly provided for a commission of legal inquiry to consist of three counselors to observe the practice and notice its defects, and to communicate with the judges of the State in relation thereto and report to the General Assembly with the suggestions of needed legislation to remedy the defects and improve the practice. Gov. Samuel Merrill appointed Mr. Crosby on that commission and he assisted in making a report at the next session following his appointment; and when the code of 1873 was adopted the commission was omitted. When the act was passed providing for the building of the Iowa capitol Mr. Crosby was chosen by the General Assembly as one of the commissioners for two years. For five years he has been one of the curators of the State Historical Society, appointed by the governor. He has attended four world's fairs, viz.: Vienna in 1873, Philadelphia in 1876, New Orleans in 1885, and Paris in 1889, and is now (1893) president of the Iowa Columbian Commission, which is charged with the duty of devising and executing plans for a creditable exhibit at the World's Columbian Exposition of the resources and advantages of the State of Iowa.

Daniel G. Bingham was born in Riga, Monroe county, January 29, 1827, and is a son of Thomas Bingham, Jr. Mr. Bingham was educated at the Middlebury Academy, N. Y., Grand River Institute, Ohio, and at Professor Fowler's law school at Cherry Valley, N. Y., and was admitted to the Supreme Court at Albany in 1849. He settled in Ellicottville in 1850. He was a man of excellent education, and was a practical civil engineer and an expert mathematician. His tastes did not lead him into active legal practice. For some time prior to the beginning of the last war he had been lieutenant-colonel of the old 64th Regiment of New York State Militia and was possessed of decided military tastes. At the first call for troops in 1861 he went with Companies H and I of the old 64th to New York city, where they were absorbed in the 37th New York Volunteers (The Irish Rifles), and with them on to Washington as captain of engineers. Upon the enlistment of the re-organized 64th Regiment he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel February 13, 1861. He left Elmira with his regiment for Washington, December 10, 1861. On the 7th of January, 1862, his regiment marched across "long bridge" down the right bank of the Potomac, through Alexandria, to "Camp California"; it was the first fifteen-mile march of the regiment. In a few days McClellan advanced on Manassas, but the rebels had fled, leaving unoccupied forts with wooden guns piercing the embrasures. The Union army was disappointed and disgusted, and sullenly marched back to Alexandria, took transports for Yorktown, and the Peninsula campaign followed. At Fair Oaks on the first of June Lieutenant-Colonel Bingham was severely wounded and carried from the field. Upon the resignation of Colonel Parker, July 12, 1862, Lieutenant-Colonel Bingham was promoted to the colonelcy, but was not able on account of wounds to assume command until winter. He commanded his regiment at Chancellorsville and at Gettysburg. He was again severely wounded at Gettysburg and was rendered unfit for duty in the field for many months. His constitution had become enfeebled by hard service and continued exposure, and he was not able again to assume active command of his regiment. He continued to fail until he died July 21, 1864. "He bore a blameless life, was finely educated, and a lawyer without love for its entangling bickerings. He was a philosopher, conversant with history, a civil engineer of much skill, and fond of its practice; hence he took readily to a military occupation in its varied departments. He was also personally liked by officers and men because he was upright and just to all with favoritism to none, and he was esteemed as a gentleman and good citizen in private life." Mr. Bingham was never married.

Charles S. Cary was born in Hinsdale, November 25, 1827. He received an academic education, chose the law for a profession, and graduated from the National Law School at Ballston Spa in 1850 and was admitted to the bar at the St. Lawrence General term the same year. He at once located in Olean, and when he came there Roderick White was the only lawyer in practice at that place. Mr. Cary has continued in active practice there since that time. He was in partnership for a time with Justus White, a brother of Roderick White, under the firm name of Cary & White. He afterwards formed a partnership with Judge David H. Bolles, which continued until 1870, and for a time Joseph R. Jewell was a member of the same firm. After Mr. Bolles retired from the firm it was continued as Cary & Jewell, Mr. Jewell residing in Little Valley until the fall of 1873. Afterwards Frank Rumsey was admitted to the firm, and this partnership continued until the organization of the firm of J. R. & M. B. Jewell, when the firm of Cary & Rumsey was organized. This continued until January 1, 1890, when Mr. Hastings was admitted and the firm was re-organized under the name of Cary, Rumsey & Hastings. About 1862 he was appointed by President Lincoln to the office of commissioner of the Board of Enrollment and in 1866 he was made collector of internal revenue. In 1881 he was elected to the Assembly from the First District of Cattaraugus county. He has also been the candidate of his party for the office of State senator, representative in Congress, and justice of the Supreme Court. In the Supreme Court canvass in 1883 Thomas Corlett was elected, but Mr. Cary's minority was only about 1,000 in a district which usually gives from 10,000 to 12,000 Republican majority. During the first term of President Cleveland Mr. Cary was appointed as a member of a board to examine the Northern Pacific railroad, and in 1887 he was appointed solicitor of the United States Treasury, which office he held until the inauguration of President Harrison. Mr. Cary has been and is now interested in various public enterprises in Olean and vicinity. He has been attorney for the Buffalo, New York & Philadelphia Railroad Company and has been interested in several other railroad enterprises. He has seen Olean grow from a small hamlet until it has become the only city in Cattaraugus county, and he has always taken an active interest in everything which would promote its welfare. In 1850 he married Sarah A. Mitchell, of Livingston county. Their only child is the wife of Frank Rumsey, a partner of Mr. Cary who now lives in Buffalo. Only one other lawyer in the county, William Woodbury, of Gowanda, has been in practice longer than Mr. Cary; and during his active professional life of forty-three years Mr. Cary has been engaged in a large number of the most important cases that have occupied the attention of our courts. His work has not been confined to this county alone, but his reputation has extended throughout the whole State. He is still in active practice.

Merrill T. Jenkins is a native of Bethany, Genesee county, and was born October 10, 1825. His father was the Rev. Herman Jenkins of the Free Baptist church. His mother died when he was but eight years old, and his father being in very moderate circumstances the boy was left to take care of himself. When he was about fourteen years of age he went to Milwaukee, Wis., then a small but growing town. Here he spent one year. He left Milwaukee and went to Berea, Ohio, attending an academy and laboring four hours daily making grindstones to defray the expense of board and tuition. In this industry he became skillful, and he now boasts that he can turn a better grindstone than any other lawyer in the great State of New York. From Berea he returned to his native State and entered the law office of Charles B. Green in Ellington, Chautauqua county, to begin the study of law. He spent a year or more in this office. Then for the purpose of preparing himself more efficiently for the duties of his profession he became a student in the Jamestown Academy, and while there paid his board in the family of Richard P. Marvin, afterwards justice of the Supreme Court, doing "chores" and other labor. Later he prosecuted his law studies in the office of Madison Burnell in Jamestown and finished in the Ballston Law School, and was admitted to practice in 1850. During the time that he was pursuing his law studies he taught in the common schools in the winter months to obtain means to pay his expenses.

Mr. Jenkins located in East Randolph, where he practiced about twenty-five years. In 1865 he was elected to the office of district attorney of the county of Cattaraugus and re-elected in 1868. He afterwards left East Randolph and for a time practiced in Fredonia, Dunkirk, Gowanda, and Buffalo. About two years ago he returned to Randolph, where he now resides. Mr. Jenkins represented the town of Conewango on the Board of Supervisors in 1861. In 1850 he married Sarah H. Rolfe, of Bethany, N. Y. They have three children, one, a son, Walter S. Jenkins, now a practicing lawyer in Buffalo, and a daughter, Alice, who is the wife of Joseph M. Congdon, of Gowanda, and another daughter, Florence, who is a teacher in the public school in Randolph.

Mr. Guiteau practiced law a few months in Franklinville about 1855, and it seems that he afterwards went to Ellicottville and was a partner for a short time with Henry W. Harrington. He then left the county and nothing further is known of him. He is said to have come from Livingston county.

Henry W. Harrington was born at Laurens, Otsego county, September 12, 1825, and came to this county before he was one year old. He was admitted to the bar at Geneseo in 1846. He practiced at Geneseo about six months, when he came to this county. It is said that he practiced his profession at Allegany and also at Ellicottville. While in Ellicottville he was for a time in partnership with Mr. Guiteau and also with the late Judge Rensselaer Lamb. About 1856 he removed to Madison, Ind., and followed his profession there. While living at Madison he was elected and served two successive terms in Congress. He then removed to Indianapolis, where he engaged in active practice several years and became one of the most prominent lawyers in that city. His prominence and activity brought him into acquaintance with leading men in the Democratic party, such as the late Vice-President Thomas A. Hendricks and others. While living there, about 1870, he was the candidate of the Greenback party for governor of Indiana. He died March 20, 1882, of heart failure, sitting in his chair in his law office.

P. O. Berry practiced in Allegany from 1851 to 1858. He afterwards practiced in Great Valley. He died several years ago.

J. W. Deuel practiced law in Gowanda some time about 1852, and was in partnership with C. C. Torrance. He afterwards moved to Rochester and later to Wemple, near Albany, where he now lives.

William H. Henderson is a son of John and Mary (Hunt) Henderson, and was born in Tully, Onondaga county, December 4, 1828. In 1840 he removed with his parents from Onondaga county to Cattaraugus county. He received his literary education at the Fredonia Academy, which was then one of the best educational institutions in this part of the State, at that time under the management of the distinguished and talented F. A. Reddington. Young Henderson remained at Fredonia about three years. Leaving there in the spring of 1847 he entered the State Normal School at Albany, then recently founded by legislative enactment as a school for the preparation and education of teachers. During his attendance the school was under the superintendence of David P. Page, the first principal of the institution and a man of fine educational abilities. In the spring of 1848 he was honorably graduated and soon thereafter became a resident of Randolph, where he engaged in teaching as required by the rules of the school, remaining thus engaged for almost two years. He then entered the office of Alexander Sheldon at Randolph to begin the study of law, and finished his office studies with Joseph E. Weeden, the veteran lawyer of that place. He was admitted to the bar April-27, 1852, and has since practiced his profession at Randolph, where he still resides. For a time he was in partnership with Mr. Weeden and afterwards with Alson E. Leavenworth, and since 1859 he has been in partnership with Alexander Wentworth, and this firm of Henderson & Wentworth is said to be the oldest law firm in western New York. June 3, 1858, he married Anna M., daughter of Rev. Thomas Morris, who for many years was the rector of St. John's Episcopal church at Ellicottville. In 1851 Mr. Henderson was nominated by the Democratic convention for the office of county treasurer, but was defeated by the Whig candidate, John P. Darling, of Cattaraugus. Mr. Henderson is not a politician in an active sense, but has several times been honored with nominations for important offices by the Democratic party. In 1875, upon the death of County Judge Samuel S. Spring, Mr. Henderson was appointed by Governor Tilden to complete the unexpired term. On the 21st of March, 1876, he was appointed by Governor Tilden as a justice of the Supreme Court for the Eighth Judicial District in place of George D. Lamont, deceased, and he held this office until the end of that year. The same year he received the nomination of his party for a full term, but owing to the heavy Republican majority in the district was unsuccessful, Albert Haight being elected at that time. Judge Henderson has always exercised a leading and active influence in affairs conducing to the development and prosperity of Randolph as well as the entire county. He is now and has been for several years president of the Board of Trustees of Chamberlain Institute and Female College, and was for many years the attorney and adviser of Judge Chamberlain, the founder of the institution. He is also president of the Board of Trustees of the Western New York Home for Homeless and Dependent Children, and he takes a very active interest in the affairs of that institution. He was largely instrumental in the organization and incorporation of the State Bank of Randolph. On the occasion of the centennial celebration of American independence at Olean, July 4, 1876, Judge Henderson was chosen president of the day and presided over one of the largest and most enthusiastic gatherings that ever assembled in Cattaraugus county. For more than forty years he has adorned his chosen profession by his scholarly attainments and profound knowledge of jurisprudence, and by his close and unremitting application to the duties of his profession he long ago secured an extensive and varied practice in the highest courts of the State and a seat upon the bench of its most important trial court. His legal ability and general worth have been fully recognized, not only by the people and bar of the county, but by the executive of the State, in bestowing upon him judicial appointments. No member of the profession occupies a higher place in this county than Judge Henderson.

H. L. Green was born in Virgil, Cortland county, February 28, 1828. He received his education at Cortland Academy and studied law with Stephens & Duell in Cortland village, and was admitted to the bar in 1852. He began the practice of law the same year at Marathon, Cortland county. In 1854 he was elected a justice of the peace for that town and the next year he moved to Cortland village and opened a law office there. In the fall of 1856 he was elected county treasurer of Cortland county. In 1865 he removed to Syracuse, N. Y., and opened a law office in that city, where he resided until 1876, when he removed to Salamanca and commenced the practice of law. In 1886 he removed to Buffalo, N. Y., since which time he has been engaged in the publishing business.

Williams B. Huntley, of Ellicottville, was a son of Williams Huntley and a grandson of Gen. Daniel Huntley, one of the first settlers in that town. He was born October 19, 1827. He studied law with Addison G. Rice at Ellicottville and was admitted to the bar in 1852. He immediately engaged in general practice, which was terminated by his death September 10, 1860.

Romanzo Bunn was born at South Hartwick, Otsego county, September 24, 1829. His father, Peter Bunn, was of German descent and his mother, whose maiden name was Polly Ann Jackson, was English. In September, 1832, the family removed into the county of Cattaraugus and settled upon a farm in Mansfield. Young Bunn had the usual experience of farmers' boys in this county at that early day, and remained until 1846, working on the farm summers and attending the district school winters; he early developed a love for study and became the first scholar in his school. In the summer of 1846 he "worked out" for a neighbor and earned money enough to pay his expenses for a half-term in the fall of that year at the Springville Academy. His associates there were Charles C. Wilson, now a leading lawyer of Rochester, Minn., and William Manley and Allen D. Scott, of Ellicottville. Through the influence of Scott with his father, Justus Scott, young Bunn was engaged to teach the district school in the Scott district in East Otto the following winter for three months at $12 a month; and he gave such satisfaction that the trustees, near the end of the three months, made a pilgrimage to the school house and gravely informed him that they had held a consultation on an important subject and had come to inform him of the result of their deliberations, and said that they had decided to ask him to continue a half-month longer with his wages increased $1 a month. This promotion greatly pleased Bunn at the time, and in after years he often spoke of this episode in his experience with great pleasure. From this time on Bunn taught school in the winter and worked with his cradle in the wheat-harvest fields in the Genesee valley in the harvest season at good wages, and attended the old Springville Academy between these employments. He thus taught school at East Otto Corners, Yorkshire, and Waverly. In the spring of 1849 Bunn and his friend Wilson went to Oberlin College, paid tuition for a term, and intended to work their way through the college; but becoming dissatisfied decided to abandon the college and commence the study of law, and went to Elyria, Ohio, and entered the office of McCatcheson & Myres. From that time the study of law was Bunn's business, and teaching school and working in the harvest field a means to help him in his chosen calling as his necessities required. He studied at home, at Springville, and at Ellicottville until the year 1853, when he entered the law office of Harmon & Wood in Ellicottville, and in September of that year was admitted to the bar. During that year he began to practice in justices' courts, meeting such masters in the art as John P. Darling and Ben. Mosher. About that time, Mr. Harmon wishing to go out of the practice, Bunn formed a partnership with William H. Wood, now of Chicago, which continued one year.

In August, 1854, Mr. Bunn married Miss Sarah Purdy, a niece of Dr. A. B. and Marshall K. Wilson, of Mansfield, and in September of that year they went west to Galesville, Wis. There was little or no legal business in that new country, but Mr. Bunn was soon appointed district attorney for the new county of Trempealeau and did a small business for six years. In the fall of 1859 he was elected to the Legislature and served one year as a member of Assembly. In the spring of 1861 Mr. Bunn removed to Sparta, Monroe county, Wis., where he practiced law with fair success; was district attorney for Monroe county and in 1868 was elected Circuit judge of the Sixth Wisconsin Circuit, which corresponds to the office of justice of the Supreme Court in the State of New York. His learning and ability were so manifest and his impartial administration of the law so satisfactory and he became established in the confidence of the people to such an extent that, at the end of his first term, he was, regardless of political considerations, re-elected without opposition and upon the unanimous recommendation of all the members of the bar of his Circuit. Upon the recommendation of the bench and bar of the State Judge Bunn was appointed in 1879, by President Hayes, the United States district judge for the Western District of Wisconsin. This necessitated his removal to Madison, the capital of the State, where he now resides. The judge holds court at Madison and other places in his district, and at Chicago, both as district judge, and, since the United States Court of Appeals was established, as one of the members of that court. Besides attending to his judicial duties the judge has for several years given lectures in the Law Department of Madison University; and for the past two years has lectured in the Law School of Northwestern University at Chicago upon federal jurisprudence. Mr. Bunn is also a man of fine literary taste and culture, and spends many leisure hours in his carefully selected private library of several thousand volumes. Perhaps his greatest pleasure is in studying and comparing the different versions of the plays of his favorite writer, Shakespeare, of whose works he is exceedingly fond and has more than a dozen editions. He is frequently invited to lecture before the students of Madison University and the literary societies of Madison on some literary subject, and always responds with something interesting to the most cultivated listener.

Edgar Shaw was in practice in Allegany from 1853 to 1870, when he removed to Iowa, where he now resides.

A. Philemon Russell studied law in Ellicottville with Judge David H. Bolles and engaged in practice there for a time. He removed to Little Valley about 1855, where he remained until 1861, when he enlisted in the 9th N. Y. Cav. After the close of the war he resumed the practice of law, but not in this county.

Asgill Gibbs appears from the list of attorneys in an old law register to have been located at Yorkshire in 1853, but inquiry fails to elicit any information concerning him.

David H. Bolles was born at Clinton, Conn., December 18, 1829. He removed with his mother's family to Jamestown, N. Y., where he remained until the fall of 1846, when he went to New Haven and entered Yale College, graduating in the summer of 1850. Soon after leaving college he entered the law office of Angel & Washburn at Ellicottville and began the study of law. He was admitted to the bar in March, 1853, and immediately began practice at Ellicottville. He remained there until December, 1865, when he removed to Olean, where he has since resided and practiced. In November, 1863, he was elected county judge and held the office until his removal to Olean, when he resigned. While in Ellicottville he was in partnership with the late Judge Rensselaer Lamb for a short time and also with Manley Crosby, now of Corry, Pa. After his removal to Olean he formed a partnership with Charles S. Cary, which, under the name of Cary & Bolles, continued until 1870. Mr. Bolles then continued in practice for a time alone. He subsequently was in partnership with the late Enos C. Brooks and also with Charles P. Moulton. Since October 1, 1884, he has been in partnership with James H. Waring, now district attorney. Judge Bolles does not now often attend court, but still gives his attention to the work of the office. For thirty years Judge Bolles has been among the leaders of the Cattaraugus bar and has been engaged in nearly all of the great litigations of that period. His thorough mastery of legal science, his broad, general scholarship, his eloquent felicity in discussing intricate problems of law and fact, his untiring industry, his urbanity and abundant kindness combined to place him in the front rank of the western New York bar. His literary efforts have not been entirely confined to professional subjects. He was for a long time connected with the editorial department of the Olean Times, writing the "leaders" for the paper during that period. In 1876, upon the occasion of the centennial celebration of our independence, the people of Cattaraugus county held a great meeting at Olean, at which Judge William H. Henderson, of Randolph, presided, ex-Vice President Schuyler Colfax delivered an able address of a general national character, and Judge Bolles was the unanimous choice of the people to prepare an address on the history and development of the county. His address, delivered at Olean, July 4, 1876, was a monument to his industry and patient research, and a masterpiece of historical and biographical eloquence. Judge Bolles has found his chief pleasure in the work of his chosen profession, to which he has thoroughly devoted himself for more than forty years. He is a brother-in-law of the late Charles P. Washburn, a sketch of whose career appears in this chapter.

Rensselaer Lamb was a native of Vermont, where he was born in 1805. About 1830 he came to this county from Oneida county and located in the town of Machias. "He was then poor, with a large family upon his hands, which taxed to the utmost all his energies and resources to provide for their support and maintenance. He very soon manifested and developed traits of character such as inspired the confidence of his fellow citizens in him as a man of decided ability and integrity, and that confidence they manifested toward him by conferring upon him positions of trust and responsibility." While living in Machias he held various important local offices, having been elected justice of the peace in 1836, 1839, 1843, and 1847; he was town clerk in 1842 and was supervisor of the town from 1837 to 1840 and again in 1846. He took the oath of office as associate judge of the old Court of Common Pleas on January 18, 1845, and as county judge under the new constitution June 26, 1847, and held office until January 1, 1851. In January, 1866, he was again appointed county judge and held the office until January 1, 1870, when he was succeeded by Judge Samuel S. Spring. Soon after being appointed judge he removed to Ellicottville. He died in November, 1871. After he was elevated to the bench of the county he was admitted to the bar and was for a time a partner with Judge Bolles and also with Commodore P. Vedder. Concerning Judge Lamb the late Leverett Spring, of Arcade, N. Y., on the occasion of his death, made the following observations: "The history of Judge Lamb during his residence in Cattaraugus county illustrates what perseverance, integrity, and moral courage accomplishes for a man, and how positions of honor and responsibility can be reached even under unpropitious and discouraging circumstances. Too surely want and destitution for a series of years were his bosom companions, and with them he was compelled to struggle. Yet he had force of character sufficient to meet the pressure of his pecuniary embarrassments with such fortitude and resolution as entitled him to great credit. He commenced the profession of law at a late period in life and not until he was involved in the cares of a family. The duties and cares growing out of the domestic relation would necessarily occupy very much of his time and largely engross his attention. Under all these discouraging circumstances he prosecuted his studies and improved his opportunities, and made himself so familiar with the legal principles and our system of practice that he was admitted as an attorney and counselor at law in the highest courts of our State."

J. B. Finch is a son of Nathaniel and Samantha Finch, and was born in the town of Fishkill, Dutchess county, in April, 1823. He was educated at Alfred University from 1848 to 1850. Mr. Finch studied law with his father from 1850 to September, 1853, when he was admitted to the bar at Rochester. He practiced law at Hornellsville, N. Y., from 1853 to 1866, when he removed to Olean, where he remained in the practice of his profession until December, 1878. He was in partnership with William P. Angel two years from 1866 to 1868 and with Wilkes Angel from 1868 to 1878. In 1878 he returned to Hornellsville, where he continued in practice two years and then retired. During all the time he was in practice from 1853 to 1880 he was the local attorney for the New York, Lake Erie & Western Railroad Company in the counties of Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Chautauqua.

William M. McCluer was born in Franklinville on the 6th of September, 1831. His father was one of the pioneers of western New York and died when William was only four years of age. His mother was a woman of intelligence and force of character, and continued to carry on the farm after her husband's death and provided for the thorough education of her children. William graduated from Temple Hill Academy in Geneseo, N. Y., in 1850. He then read law in Moscow, N. Y., and in 1854 graduated from the National Law School at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He then engaged in the practice of law at his old home in Franklinville, where he remained about two years. In the summer of 1856 he went to Stillwater, in the then territory of Minnesota, and engaged in the practice of his profession. On the 27th of September, 1858, he was married at Waterford, N. Y., to Helen Jenks. In 1857 he was elected prosecuting attorney of the First Judicial District in Minnesota. He was afterwards county attorney for Washington county, city attorney for Stillwater, twice mayor of the city of Stillwater, a member of the State Board of Inspectors of the State prisons, a member of the State Commission for Auditing Claims against the State arising out of the Sioux Indian war of 1862, and for several terms a member of the Board of Education of the city. "In all these official positions he discharged his duties with eminent fidelity, zeal, and ability." November 21, 1881, he was appointed by Governor Pillsbury to the office of judge of the First Judicial District of Minnesota, and at the fall election in 1882 he was elected to the same office and re-elected in 1888. At the last election in 1888 he was placed on the tickets of both parties and was elected practically without dissent or opposition. He applied himself to the duties of his high office with conscientious industry and fidelity. He is described as being very popular with all classes. "The rich and the poor, the high and the low, all approached him as personal friends." He was a brother of Dr. Benjamin McCluer, now a prominent physician in Dubuque, Iowa. He died at his residence in Stillwater, August 3, 1890.

William Manley, eldest son of John F. Manley, one of the pioneers of Mansfield, was born in that town April 29, 1829. He was raised on his father's farm, and after the usual course at the common schools of the neighborhood became a student at the Springville Academy, which he attended several terms. When he was eighteen years of age he began teaching in the common schools and taught seven or eight terms. In 1852 he entered the office of D. M. Bennett, of Rome, N. Y., to pursue the study of law, and was admitted to practice in the courts of this State in 1854 and subsequently in the courts of the United States. Immediately after his admission he opened an office for the practice of his profession in Ellicottville, where he has since resided. He represented the town of Ellicottville on the Board of Supervisors in 1874 and 1875. In 1869 he was elected surrogate of Cattaraugus county and served one full term of four years. In March, 1857, he was married to Lucy Bryant, daughter of Nathaniel Bryant, of Little Valley.

Enos C. Brooks, third son of Judge James Brooks, of the first Court of Common Pleas, and grandson of Cornelius Brooks, one of the pioneers of Olean, was born in the town of Olean, September 4, 1823. He received the principal part of his education at the public schools, finishing his literary studies at the Elmira Seminary, Elmira, N. Y. Immediately after leaving the latter institution, and on September 4, 1850, he entered the office of Roderick White, of Olean, to begin the study of law. He was admitted to the bar in September, 1853, and immediately began practice, which continued until 1856, when his library and office effects were destroyed by fire. He then served one term as deputy sheriff of Cattaraugus county. In 1853 he was commissioned major of the 64th Regiment New York State Militia. On August 17, 1861, this regiment was accepted as a part of the quota of the State, and on the 28th of November following he was regularly mustered into the Union army. With his regiment he played an important part in the battles of Williamsburg, Seven Pines, Fair Oaks, Gaines's Mill, Savage Station, White Oak Swamp, Glendale, and Malvern Hill, and crowned the list with the ever memorable battle of Antietam. December 13, 1862, at the battle of Fredericksburg, he was dangerously wounded by a ball passing through his left shoulder, and in consequence he received a leave of absence until April, 1863, when he was assigned to duty as provost-marshal of western New York under General Diven at Elmira, and by him appointed inspector of draft for eleven congressional districts. He continued in that position until January 8, 1864, and was afterwards placed on duty as commandant of barrack number one at Elmira. On May 4, 1864, he reported at Washington and was honorably discharged. On December 28th following he was made commissioner of enrollment and so continued until the close of the war. At the close of the war he again resumed the practice of law. In 1867 he was elected to the office of county clerk of Cattaraugus county and performed the duties of that office three years. While living at Little Valley as county clerk he established the Brooks creamery and had charge of it some time. Soon after the close of his term of office he returned to Olean and resumed practice. He was for a time in partnership with D. H. Bolles and later with Thomas Storrs, of Olean. From 1876 to March, 1877, he served as a clerk in the State prison at Dannemora, Clinton county. He also held the office of justice of the peace in his town and in 1886 was supervisor. "His life was pure and simple, his integrity unstained. His manner was easy and urbane, and he enjoyed to the highest degree the respect and confidence of the community in which he lived." Colonel Brooks died December 18, 1887.

A. A. Bruce practiced law a short time in Gowanda and then went away. No information has been obtained concerning his subsequent history.

George B. Wood came to Allegany from Allegany county about 1854, and practiced law about two years. He died in 1856.

Ira L. Burlingame located in Franklinville about 1855 and engaged in practice in partnership with the late Judge Samuel S. Spring. He died in 1857. He was a quiet, retiring gentleman, but had the reputation of being a good lawyer.

Joseph Bouton came to Allegany from New York city about 1856, and after practicing there a few months returned to New York.

A. Patterson was in Olean about 1856, and was for a time in partnership with Enos C. Brooks. He remained in Olean about a year.

Julian Clinton Converse was admitted to the bar about 1856 and practiced in Gowanda a short time, when he moved away. The writer has not been able to learn where he went.

William A. Meloy was born in the village of Chenango Forks, Broome county, on the 26th of August, 1832, and is the eldest son of Frederick W. Meloy and Martha Emilia Willard, his wife, both of New England stock. His father was a native of New Haven and his mother of Stafford Springs. William was prepared for college at Binghamton Academy and graduated at Yale in 1854. The same summer he followed his parents to Ellicottville, and there began the study of law in the office of Addison G. Rice and Chester Howe, then county judge and surrogate. September 9, 1856, he was admitted to the bar at a General term held in Buffalo. He had already entered into partnership with William P. Angel, then the district attorney of the county. Mr. Meloy went to Washington, D. C., in the spring of 1864 and became a clerk in the ordnance bureau of the War Department, where he remained about six weeks, when he was appointed to a clerkship in the loan branch of the office of the secretary of the treasury. He was soon promoted to a fourth-class clerkship and had charge of the secretary's correspondence regarding the loans of the government. In 1868, having meanwhile been admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Meloy resigned his clerkship in the Treasury Department and shortly afterwards began again the practice of law in the District of Columbia and State of Maryland. In 1879 he became a partner of George W. Julian, who was a member of Congress and once the nominee of the Free Soil party for vice-president. In 1883 he was appointed an assistant attorney-general of the State of Indiana for the prosecution of certain claims of the State against the general government, and in 1885, after the termination of that employment, he was appointed by the governor of Indiana to be the counsel of the State at the city of Washington for the same purpose. In 1885 and again in 1887 he was nominated by the Republicans of Prince George county, Md., to represent the county in the House of Delegates of Maryland, but the party being in the minority he was defeated. He was again nominated in 1889 and was elected and served in 1890 and 1891. Mr. Meloy is still living in Washington, D. C.

Patrick Henry Jones was born on the 20th of November, 1830, in Westmeath, Ireland. His father's name was James Jones and his mother's name was Ellen Lynch. The initial name represents his paternal grandfather, Patrick Jones, and the second his maternal grandfather, Henry Lynch. When Mr. Jones was ten years of age his father removed to America with his family, landing in New York on June 5, 1840. Patrick attended school at a monastery at Tullugh, County Wicklow, Ireland, three years before coming to America; then he attended the common schools of this State. His father settled in the county of Cattaraugus upon a farm, where Patrick lived until he went to Ellicottville to begin the study of law with Addison G. Rice. He was admitted to the bar at the General term held in Buffalo in November, 1856. He immediately afterwards formed a partnership with Mr. Rice under the firm name of Rice & Jones, and he continued in the practice of his profession at Ellicottville until the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion. About 1860 Alanson Crosby, who had been a student in the office of Rice & Jones, was admitted to the bar and also to a partnership in the firm, which then became Rice, Jones & Crosby. Just before the breaking out of the war Mr. Jones withdrew from this partnership and formed a partnership with Allen D. Scott under the firm name of Scott & Jones. Mr. Jones continued a member of this firm during his absence of four years in the army, although the business was conducted by Judge Scott. Mr. Jones enlisted June 7, 1861, and was made second lieutenant in the 37th Regiment N. Y. Vol. Inf. He was subsequently promoted adjutant, then major of the regiment, and served in the same until promoted to the colonelcy of the 154th N. Y. Vols. on the 8th of October, 1862. On the 4th of December, 1864, he was commissioned as brigadier-general of United States volunteers. Mr. Jones participated in all the various actions in which his regiment, the 37th, was engaged, viz.: The first battle of Bull Run, July 22, 1861; siege of Yorktown; battle of Williamsburg, Va., May 5, 1862; Seven Pines, May 31, 1862; Seven Days' Fight about Richmond; and at Malvern Hill, July 2, 1862.

The 37th was a part of Berry's Brigade, Carney's Division, Heintzelman's (the Third) Army Corps, Army of the Potomac. Upon the evacuation of the Peninsula by General McClellan Major Jones accompanied his division and regiment to the Army of Virginia, commanded by Gen. John Pope, and participated in the second battle of Bull Run, August 26, 1862, and the battle of Chantilly, September 1, 1862.

On being promoted to the colonelcy of the 154th Regiment he was assigned to the Eleventh Army Corps, commanded at that time by Gen. Franz Sigel and subsequently by Gen. O. O. Howard; and under the latter general Colonel Jones participated in the battle of Chancellorsville, Va., where he was wounded and taken prisoner May 2, 1863. He was exchanged in October of that year and was sent to the west with General Hooker, who commanded the Eleventh and Twelfth Army Corps, which were subsequently consolidated, forming the Twentieth Army Corps. Under the command of General Hooker Colonel Jones participated in the battle of Chattanooga, Tenn., November 24 and 25, 1863, and in the subsequent movements of the army under General W. T. Sherman for the relief of General Burnside at Knoxville, Tenn. Upon the opening of the campaign against Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, resulting in the capture of Atlanta the following year, he accompanied General Sherman's army and was present at the battle of Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Dallas, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, and other engagements resulting in the capture of the place in July, 1864. On June 6, 1864, he was assigned to the command of the Second Brigade, Second Division, Twentieth Army Corps, and continued to command the same until the close of the war. He also participated with it in the march through Georgia and the Carolinas.

On the 27th of June, 1865, the war being closed, he tendered his resignation as brigadier-general of volunteers, which was accepted, and he returned home and resumed the practice of his profession at Ellicottville. In the State election in November, 1865, he was elected clerk of the Court of Appeals of the State for three years and performed the duties of that office during the term. His official duties required his presence in Albany the greater part of the time. In 1867 he opened a law office in the city of New York, and in that year was appointed counsel to the commissioners of immigration of this State. In 1868 his former law partner, Mr. Rice, removed to New York city to practice his profession and they again became partners, Edward I. Wilson, of that city, joining them and forming the law firm of Rice, Wilson & Jones. This partnership continued until April, 1869, when Mr. Jones was appointed by President Grant postmaster of the city of New York, whereupon the firm was dissolved. This appointment was unexpected. Soon after the election of General Grant Horace Greeley, who was a warm friend of General Jones, obtained from the president-elect the promise to appoint General Jones marshal for the Southern District of New York. This promise the president forgot, and soon after his inauguration another candidate for the position was appointed. It is said that Mr. Greeley was terribly incensed, and taking Mr. Jones with him repaired to Washington, where he was given an audience with the president. He stated his grievance and the president informed him that his promise had slipped his mind, but assured Mr. Greeley that the matter must be left to the president and that he would try to find something for General Jones. The result was that the general was appointed postmaster. The first intimation he had that he was a candidate was when his commission was placed in his hands. While holding the office of postmaster General Jones formed a partnership with Gen. George W. Palmer and Col. Michael Nolan. General Palmer was from Westfield, N. Y., and Colonel Nolan from St. Lawrence county. Both of these gentlemen are now dead. General Jones served as postmaster of New York during President Grant's first term, when he resigned and resumed the practice of law in that city. At the general election in 1874 he was elected register of the city and county of New York, and served out his term of three years and again returned to the practice of his profession in New York. General Jones was a delegate to the Republican national convention in Chicago in 1868. He is now living at Port Richmond, Staten Island, N. Y.

Alson E. Leavenworth became a member of the firm of Weeden & Henderson at Randolph on June 15, 1856, and he continued a member a little more than a year. The firm name during that period was Weeden, Henderson & Leavenworth. Mr. Weeden had no interest in the business, but suffered his name to continue in the firm. It is said that Mr. Leavenworth did not practice law after his connection with this firm was dissolved. He graduated at the Albany Law School a short time before he came to Randolph.

Allen D. Scott is a native of Springville, Erie county, and was born January 15, 1831. In his infancy his father removed to Otto in this county, where he became the owner of a large farm. Allen spent his boyhood at labor on his father's farm and acquired his education in the district schools during the winter months. Several of the pupils in that school became prominent in after life, among them John P. Darling, at one time State senator; Addison C. Gibbs, formerly governor of Oregon; Benjamin F. Rice, United States senator from Arkansas; Romanzo Bunn, now United States district judge in Wisconsin; Dr. Henry Van Aernam, pension commissioner and member of Congress now living at Franklinville; and Addison G. Rice, a prominent lawyer of this county and subsequently of the New York and Buffalo bars. After leaving the school Mr. Scott attended a few terms at the old Springville Academy and a single year at Lima. After leaving the academy he engaged in teaching for a year or two and then commenced the study of his profession with Chester Howe, then county judge of Cattaraugus county, at Ellicottville, and continued and completed his clerkship with Nelson Cobb, then the county judge, in the year 1857, when he was admitted to the bar and began practice at Ellicottville. In 1861 he formed a partnership with Addison G. Rice at Ellicottville, the firm being Rice & Scott. This continued until 1867, when Mr. Rice removed to New York city and then William G. Laidlaw became a member of the firm of Scott & Laidlaw, and this partnership continued until Mr. Scott was elected county judge. In April, 1857, he was appointed surrogate by the governor under a statute which provided for a separate surrogate in this county. He was elected to the same office in the fall of 1857 and re-elected in 1861, serving nearly nine years in all. In the fall of 1860 he was appointed by Governor Morgan county judge to serve out the unexpired term of Judge Cobb, who had removed from the county. In 1869 he was elected to the State Senate. While in that body he was a member of the Committee on Finance and was an active worker on the floor of the Senate. In the fall of 1875 he was elected to the office of county judge and re-elected in 1881, serving two full terms. After the expiration of his term of office as county judge he continued the practice of his profession in Ellicottville, where he remained until May, 1892, when he was invited to enter the law office of Sprague, Morey, Sprague & Brownell in Buffalo, one of the largest law firms in that city. By reason of his experience in railroad matters he was, in the fall of 1892, appointed receiver of the Allegheny & Kinzua Railroad Company, and is now operating the road in that capacity. He is now with the same law firm in Buffalo, acting as general counsel, and recently removed to that city, where he now resides. Judge Scott took an active interest in procuring the construction of the Rochester & State Line railroad, which has since become the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad. This enterprise was of great benefit to the people of the county, enabling several important towns to enjoy railroad facilities. For several years Judge Scott was the attorney of the road, having charge of procuring the right of way and afterwards acting as the counsel for the road. Judge Scott was always popular here. He took an active interest in public affairs and enjoyed the confidence of our people, who bestowed on him many trusts of great importance. He discharged all his duties, both public and private, with scrupulous fidelity.

John R. McConnell practiced law in Allegany from 1857 to 1861, when he moved away. He married a sister of Stephen Welch, of Allegany, and is now in the Department of the Interior at Washington, D. C.

Alexander Wentworth is a native of Aurora, N. Y., and was born July 26, 1837. He is a son of Alexander and Asenath (Harmon) Wentworth. In 1840 his parents moved to Ellicottville; they lived there until 1844, when they moved to Randolph, where Mr. Wentworth has since resided. He was raised upon a farm about two miles west of the village of Randolph. He attended the district school winters until the Randolph Academy was opened in the fall of 1850, and then attended that institution three winters, working on the farm during the summer. He then engaged in teaching, taking charge of schools in the winters of 1854-55 and 1855-56. In the latter year he began the study of law in the office of Weeden & Henderson in Randolph and was admitted to the bar at the May General term at Buffalo in 1859. Grover Cleveland, now president of the United States, was a member of the same class. Soon after his admission Mr. Wentworth entered into partnership with Mr. Henderson under the name of Henderson & Wentworth, and this firm has continued since and is now the oldest law firm in western New York, having been in existence thirty-four years. Mr. Wentworth has given his entire attention to his profession and has taken little interest in politics; at least he has held no official positions except one or two local offices of minor importance. In 1859 he was married to Ellen C., daughter of Asahel Crowley, and two children have been born of this marriage: Isabel C., now the wife of Dr. Edward W. Lee, formerly of Randolph, now of Omaha, Neb., and Crowley Wentworth, who graduated at the College of New Jersey in June, 1892, and is now pursuing a course of study at the New York Law School. Manley Crosby, now of Corry, Pa., and Alanson Crosby, who died in the last war, and who were students in Ellicottville; Worthy Putnam, the elocutionist; Delos E. Lyon, who was a student in Judge Spring's office, now a prominent lawyer in Dubuque, Iowa, and others were members of the class of 1859. The firm of Henderson & Wentworth has now, and has had for many years, an extensive practice, doing a general business in all the courts, and has achieved a reputation second to none in western New York.

Delos E. Lyon was born and reared in Franklinville. He studied law in the office of the late Judge Samuel S. Spring and was admitted to the bar in 1859. A few months afterwards he left the county and located in Dubuque, Iowa, where he has since resided and practiced his profession.

Manley Crosby was born at Franklinville on March 12, 1834, and is a son of Alanson and Cornelia (Wright) Crosby. He was educated at the common schools and at the State Normal School at Albany, N. Y. He read law at the law school at Poughkeepsie and in the office of David H. Bolles in Ellicottville, and was admitted to the bar at Buffalo, May 18, 1859. He was a partner with Judge Bolles under the firm name of Bolles & Crosby. In 1863 he married Frances S. Clarke, youngest daughter of the late Staley N. Clarke, of Ellicottville. In 1865 he removed to Corry, Pa., and was appointed the general solicitor of the Oil Creek & Allegheny River Railroad Company, and held that office fifteen years. He was elected mayor of the city of Corry in 1890 and was re-elected and served as such two terms. He has been a member of the Board of Education six years and was president of the board three years. On the organization of the National Bank of Corry in 1892 he was elected president, and is now serving as such. He is still engaged in the practice of law at Corry. (See family sketch in Franklinville town history.)

Alanson Crosby, a brother of Manley Crosby, was born April 2, 1836, at Franklinville. He received his education at the common schools and at a university in Kentucky. He read law at the Poughkeepsie Law School and in the office of Rice & Jones at Ellicottville. He was admitted to the bar May 18, 1859, and entered upon the practice of his profession for a time at Ellicottville. He subsequently entered the law office of Alexander Sheldon at Randolph, where he remained until he went into the army as first lieutenant of one of the companies of the 154th Regiment N. Y. Vols. He was subsequently made adjutant of the regiment and later captain of Co. A, which position he held when he was wounded at the battle of Kenesaw Mountain, from which wound he died in the hospital at Nashville, Tenn., July 9, 1864. Gen. Patrick H. Jones speaks of Mr. Crosby as a "brave and gallant soldier, a bright lawyer, and a young man of great promise."

Henry F. Allen was born in the village of Gowanda, in the town of Collins, Erie county, N. Y., March 6, 1837, and is a son of John J. and Hannah Allen. He received his education in Gowanda Union School and studied law in the office of the late C. C. Torrance and also with Judge Woodbury, both of Gowanda. He was admitted to practice in November, 1859. He was a partner at one time with Judge Woodbury, and for many years, until his removal to Buffalo, was in partnership with Mr. Torrance, the firm name being Torrance & Allen. For a few years after his admission to practice he resided in that portion of Gowanda lying in the county of Cattaraugus. He removed to Buffalo in 1882, and on the first day of February, 1882, entered into partnership with Charles W. Goodyear. That partnership continued about one year. He was a member of the law firm of Allen, Movius & Wilcox, of Buffalo, from August 1, 1883, until January 1, 1892, when the partnership was dissolved and since that time Mr. Allen has been engaged in practice alone in Buffalo. In 1883 he was appointed by Governor Cleveland a member of the New York State Board of Claims and entered upon the duties of the office June 1, 1883. He continued to discharge the duties of this office until January, 1892, when he was succeeded by Judge Porter, of Watertown. Mr. Allen was at one time attorney for the Seneca Nation of Indians, having been appointed by Governor Hoffman. In the fall of 1877 he was elected a member of Assembly from the Fifth District of Erie county. Mr. Allen has always been an adherent of the Democratic party. He was at one time the candidate of his party for county judge of Erie county, and he was also a candidate for justice of the Supreme Court at the time of the election of Judge John S. Lambert.

Willard Teller was born in Granger, Allegany county, and was educated at Alfred University, Rushford Academy, and finally graduated in a classical course at Oberlin College in 1858. He studied law with Z. A. Kendall at Angelica, N. Y., and was admitted to practice in November, 1859, at Buffalo. He began practice in Olean in April, 1860, and remained there until November, 1861, when he went to Morrison, Ill., and engaged in practice at that place. In 1864 he removed from Morrison to Central City, Col., and from there to Denver in 1877. Formerly his practice related largely to questions growing out of mining matters, but for the last twenty years he has been engaged in both mining and corporation practice. He has been attorney for the Union Pacific Railroad System for about twenty years. He was formerly in partnership with his brother, Henry M. Teller, United States senator from Colorado and secretary of the interior in the cabinet of President Arthur. In 1862 Mr. Teller married Weltha A. Gleason, daughter of Ira F. Gleason, of Olean. He now resides in Denver and is a member of the firm of Teller, Orahood & Morgan, general attorneys of the Union Pacific System for Colorado.

A. M. Brown located in Gowanda for the practice of law about 1860. He remained there a year or two and then went to Buffalo. No information has been obtained concerning his subsequent history.

John B. Newton read law with Judge Samuel S. Spring at Franklinville and was admitted to the bar about 1860. He afterwards removed to Emporium, Pa., and achieved considerable prominence as a lawyer. He died several years ago.

Orange S. Searl was a student in the office of Judge Samuel S. Spring at Franklinville. He remained in Franklinville a short time after his admission to the bar and then removed to Cohocton, Steuben county, where he is now engaged in practice. He represented the First District of Steuben county in the Assembly in 1882 and 1883.

Ashley D. Bessey also read law with Judge Spring and afterwards removed to Morley, Mich., remaining there a year or two. He then returned to Rushville, near Canandaigua, remained there a short time, and then moved to Canandaigua. He then went to Prattsburgh, Steuben county, where he now resides. He is not now engaged in practice.

Hiram Thornton practiced in Yorkshire some time about 1860. He afterwards moved with his family to Minnesota.

Frank S. Smith, son of Ahijah Smith and Eliza A. Goodrich, was born in Collins, Erie county, September 1, 1833. His father was a native of New Bedford, Mass., and his mother of Otsego county, N. Y. He received his education in the common schools. His legal studies were pursued principally in the office of C. C. Torrance, of Gowanda. He was admitted to the bar in 1860 and soon afterwards opened an office in Buffalo. He practiced there and at Gowanda until about 1873, when he moved to Little Valley, where he resided until the spring of 1891, when, on account of poor health, he was obliged to retire from practice. He went to New Boston, Mich., where he remained with a brother until his death May 5, 1892. Mr. Smith was a man who made friends wherever he was known, possessing many kindly traits of character, and was devoted to his profession. He was well grounded in the elementary principles of law; he made no pretensions to advocacy, but his advice given in the quiet of the office was generally safe. Mr. Smith never married, but during his later years lived in his office with only "his faithful dog to keep him company."

James G. Johnson is a son of Marcus H. and Sophronia (Willoughby)

Johnson and was born in Ellicottville, June 28, 1836. He received his education in the common schools and also at Jamestown and the Randolph Academy. He began the study of law with Alexander Sheldon in 1854 and was admitted to the bar in June, 1860. In September, 1861, he enlisted in the 64th Regiment N. Y. Vols. and remained in the service until November, 1862. He was appointed provost-marshal of the Thirty-first District and held the office until January 1, 1865. He practiced law in Randolph from 1864 to 1880, and since that time has been engaged in practice in Salamanca. While in Randolph he was in partnership with Rodney R. Crowley and while in Salamanca he was in partnership several years with James E. Markham. He still retains his residence in Randolph. May 16, 1864, he was married to Mary, daughter of Albert G. Dow, of Randolph. Mr. Johnson was for several years attorney for the Seneca Nation of Indians. He also represented his town on the Board of Supervisors in 1869 and 1870.

Eugene A. Nash was born near Nashville, Chautauqua county, March 28, 1837. His great-grandfather on his father's side was of English descent and served as a soldier in the war of the Revolution from the State of Connecticut. His grandfather on his father's side settled in the town of Dayton in 1810 and served on the Board of Supervisors from that town for many years. He had a brother, Aaron Nash, killed in battle in the War of 1812 at Black Rock. He had a nephew, Oscar Winship, who distinguished himself as an officer in the regular army in the Mexican war. The father of Eugene A. Nash was born in Dayton in 1811. He went to California in 1849 and died there the same year. Mr. Nash lived on a farm until he was about fourteen or fifteen years of age. He then attended one term of school at Gowanda and one term at Silver Creek. The balance of the time he worked on a farm until he was sixteen years of age, when he went to the State of Wisconsin, taught district schools two terms, and worked on a farm when not otherwise employed. He then took a four years' course in Albion Academy in Wisconsin and graduated, standing first in his class. After graduating he taught Latin and mathematics in that academy one year and then received an urgent offer to continue his connection with that institution. He entered the junior class of the classical course in the State University at Madison, Wis. He next entered the senior class after passing the examination at Alfred University in this State, where he graduated in 1860 in the classical course and received the degree of A.B. Being in debt he engaged with L. K. Thacher in building a book store and putting in a stock of books. They soon sold the store and stock of books for a small profit, Mr. Nash's part of which was used in taking a course in the Albany Law School, from which institution he graduated in 1861, receiving the degree of LL.B.; on his graduation he was admitted to the bar. On the 8th of August, 1861, he enlisted as a private in the 44th N. Y. Vols., which was also known as the People's Ellsworth Regiment. Before leaving the rendezvous at Albany he was promoted to the position of second lieutenant and after the battle of Hanover Court House was appointed acting adjutant of his regiment. After the Seven Days' Fight in Virginia he was promoted to the rank of captain for gallant and meritorious conduct in battle. For about one year he served as assistant inspector-general of the Third Brigade, First Division, Fifth Corps. After the battle of the Wilderness in 1864 he commanded his regiment until the battle of Bethesda Church. He passed Casey's Board in the spring of 1864 after an extended examination, was commissioned lieutenant-colonel United States Colored Troops, and assigned to the command of the Twenty-third United States Colored Troop. This last command he was unable to assume on account of a wound received after passing the examination and before receiving his commission. He was in every battle in which his regiment was engaged except while disabled by wounds. He was twice wounded. He served in the army over three years. After the expiration of his term of service he was offered the colonelcy of a regiment to remain in the army, but was disabled by wounds from accepting the same.

After the war he received from Alfred University the degree of A.M. He spent the winter of 1865 in the employ of the State in the New York State agency, and from there went to Kansas City and resumed the study of law. He commenced the practice of law at Cattaraugus in 1868, and continued to practice at that place until 1873, when he was elected county clerk and removed to Little Valley. While practicing at Cattaraugus H. M. Herrick studied law with him and after his admission they formed a co-partnership, which continued until Mr. Nash removed to the county seat. After the expiration of his term as county clerk he formed a partnership with C. Z. Lincoln for the practice of law, which continued until the latter part of the year 1885. A year afterwards he formed a law partnership with Burdett A. Rich, and later John M. Willson was taken into the firm, the new partnership being known as Nash, Rich & Willson, which has been continued since that time. Colonel Nash was a member of Assembly from the Second District of Cattaraugus county in 1884-85, and the latter year was a member of the Judiciary Committee. He has been a member of the Board of Supervisors of Cattaraugus county sixteen years, four years from New Albion and twelve from Little Valley. He married Angie C. Clark, of Perrysburg. Colonel Nash has taken an active interest in military matters since the war and in everything that tends to benefit the "old soldiers." He is now commander of Fuller Post, No. 246, G. A. R., at Little Valley, and has been chosen historian of his old regiment, the 44th New York.

Frank A. Newell was admitted to the bar about 1861 and located in Gowanda in the town of Persia. He was elected a justice of the peace of Persia in 1860. He remained there until about 1871, and then removed to the west and is said to be now living at Pomona, Cal., and engaged in raising lemons and oranges. He is also professor of law in the college at that place.

Oscar Hawkins was a student in Judge Spring's office and was admitted to the bar while at Franklinville. He subsequently located in Buffalo, where he practiced a few years. He died several years ago.

Rodney R. Crowley is a son of Rufus and Parmelia Crowley and was born at Mt. Holly, Vt., November 12, 1836. In April, 1841, he accompanied his parents to Yorkshire, Cattaraugus county, and in 1848 to Randolph, at which latter place he has since resided. He received his education at the common schools, which he attended until about thirteen years of age, and also at the Randolph Academy, where he was a student four years. In the spring of 1855 he began the study of law in the office of Weeden & Henderson. On account of an impairment in his eyesight by too close study he turned aside for a limited period and became a clerk in the store of W. H. Lowry at Jamestown, N. Y. He afterwards resumed his law studies, completing them with Porter Sheldon at Rockford, Ill., and Alexander Sheldon at Randolph. He was admitted to the bar in May, 1861. Soon after his admission he enlisted as a private in Co. B, 64th Regiment N. Y. Militia, and was soon promoted to sixth corporal and subsequently to quartermaster's-sergeant. In February, 1862, he was made second lieutenant of Co. B and in March following was promoted to first lieutenant and quartermaster of the same regiment, and served as such until immediately before the battle of Fair Oaks, when he was transferred to Co. H as first lieutenant, and participated as such in the battle of Fair Oaks, June 1, 1862, where he was wounded. About January 1, 1863, he was promoted to the captaincy of Co. B. He afterwards served as brigade quartermaster and also as brigade commissary on the staff of Brigadier-General Caldwell. Several months afterwards he took command of his company and served in such command through the campaign and battle of Chancellorsville and the campaign and battle of Gettysburg, in which latter battle he was severely wounded in the knee, on account of which he resigned his commission November 7, 1863. On returning from the army he resumed the practice of law at Randolph, forming a partnership with James G. Johnson under the firm name of Johnson & Crowley. December 6, 1864, he was appointed provost-marshal for the Thirty-first Congressional District of New York, which position he occupied until October 15, 1865. In May, 1869, he was appointed collector of internal revenue for the Thirty-first New York District, which position he held until June, 1871. From this time until January 1, 1876, he practiced law alone at Randolph. In 1872 he was nominated by the Liberals and Democrats for member of Assembly in the Second District of Cattaraugus county, but was defeated by the Republican candidate. In 1875 he was nominated by the Democrats for the office of State prison inspector and was elected. He served until March 1, 1877. His service in this office was very satisfactory. Several reforms were instituted, which were carried forward by subsequent administrations, tending to the improvement of the prison department of the State. Beginning in 1860 he served twelve years as justice of the peace in the town of Randolph. He was elected supervisor in 1861 and again in 1869, but resigned the latter year and James G. Johnson was appointed in his place. He was one of the original incorporators of the State Bank of Randolph. He has also taken an active interest in the affairs of the Western New York Home for Homeless and Dependent Children. September 2, 1861, Mr. Crowley was married to Jennie Mussey, of New London, Conn.

Charles D. Murray was born in Guilford, Chenango county, May 4, 1831, and is the son of Dauphin and Sally (Seymour) Murray. In 1839 Dauphin Murray with his family came to Hinsdale, where he had a large contract in building the Genesee Valley canal. Charles D. Murray received his education in the "old red school house" in Hinsdale, together with two terms at the Hinsdale Academy. In 1845 he engaged as a clerk in a large establishment in Norwich, N. Y., remaining until the spring of 1850, when he went to California, where he was engaged in business until 1855. During his residence in California he went to Sydney in Australia, twice, on business ventures, and also made several trips to Oregon. In 1855 he returned home, having made a comfortable amount of money in his California business. He bought a lumber tract and engaged in lumbering and general merchandise. He was caught in the panic of 1857 and suffered severe loss. He then began reading law in the office of Alexander Storrs in Hinsdale. He received in 1858 an appointment as route agent on the Erie railroad running from Dunkirk to Hornellsville. He had six hours' leisure each day in Hornellsville and became a clerk in the office of Reynolds & Brundage in that place. He carried a law-book with him on the cars and when not engaged in distributing mail he read law in his mail-car. He was admitted to the bar in 1861 at Buffalo. He then left the mail service and located in Hinsdale, opening an office there. He resided in Hinsdale until 1864, when he was drafted into the army, and going to Dunkirk in August to procure a substitute he thought it a good place to locate. He rented an office and in two weeks was the occupant of it, and removed there in October, 1864, with his family, where he has ever since resided. He now occupies the same office that he rented in 1864. He has been mayor of the city of Dunkirk and president of the Board of Education two terms, and has also been city attorney. He was a candidate for Congress in 1870 and 1872, and lacked only a few votes of an election. He is now president of the Merchants' National Bank of Dunkirk. May 20, 1860, he was married to Orpha A. Bandfield, of Hinsdale.

Elias L. Matteson was born in Collins, Erie county, September 22, 1823. His father was a native of Vermont and his mother of Massachusetts. He was raised on a farm and educated in his native town. He followed the employment of a millwright for several years and also taught common schools winters. In 1850 he went to Vermont, where he remained until after the close of the war. While there he engaged in building mills in the summer and read law and practiced in the winter. In 1860 he entered the law school at Albany and graduated from that institution May 23, 1861. He remained in practice in Vermont until 1864, when he came to Cattaraugus county and in 1866 formed a law partnership with Joseph E. Weeden, of Randolph. This partnership continued until about 1885. After that Mr. Matteson withdrew from active practice and engaged in manufacturing. January 17, 1867, he married Maria Sample, daughter of John Sample, a pioneer of Randolph.

Johnson V. Goodwill is a son Johnson and Livonia M. (Greeno) Goodwill, and was born at Darien, Genesee county, January 26, 1837. His mother died when he was six years of age, and immediately after her death in 1843 he came to Cattaraugus county and lived with his uncle, John Greeno, until he was twenty-one years old. He received his education in the common schools and in 1857 taught one term of district school. In 1866 he was married to Lovisa D. Williams, only child of Norman B. Williams, of East Randolph. In 1861 he began reading law with Merrill T. Jenkins at East Randolph, and in the fall of 1862 he attended the Albany Law School and was admitted to the bar in December, 1862. He immediately entered into partnership with Mr. Jenkins for the practice of law, which continued until 1872, when on account of the removal of Mr. Jenkins from the county the partnership was dissolved. He then formed a partnership with Frank W. Stevens, the firm being Goodwill & Stevens, which continued until 1882, when Mr. Stevens removed to Jamestown. Mr. Goodwill's life has been devoted to his profession and he has given little attention to politics. Since 1882 he has been engaged in practice alone at East Randolph, where he now resides.

Dan B. Allen is a grandson of the late Dan Allen, one of the early settlers of the town of Persia and a member of the old Court of Common Pleas, and is a son of the late Constant B. Allen, who was one of the most distinguished citizens of the town of Otto. Dan B. Allen was born at Otto, April 7, 1839. Besides attending the common schools he attended an academy at Austinburg, Ohio, and also the Genesee Seminary at Lima, N. Y. He began the study of law in November, 1859, with Rice & Jones in Ellicottville, and also studied with Rice & Scott. He was admitted to the bar in May, 1862, and began practice immediately afterwards at Olean. He continued in practice there but a short time, when he enlisted in the army. Since the war he has practiced at New York city, Jamestown, and at Otto, where he now resides. In addition to his law business Mr. Allen has extensive farming interests which demand considerable attention. He represented the town of Otto on the Board of Supervisors seven years from 1879 to 1885.

George Straight is a native of Chautauqua county and was born near Hamlet in 1836. He received his education in the common schools and also attended the Ellington Academy and Chamberlain Institute; he engaged in teaching in the common schools, being employed some seven or eight terms. He began his legal studies with Judge Snow, of Fredonia, and continued them with Alexander Sheldon, of Randolph, and Daniel Sherman, of Forestville. He was admitted to the bar in 1862 and located at Cattaraugus, where he began the practice of law. Soon after this he was married to Helen J., daughter of John P. Darling, a prominent citizen of Cattaraugus. After some legal practice he entered into partnership with Mr. Darling in a general merchandise business under the firm name of Darling & Straight, but continued to practice law. He afterwards formed a partnership with D. E. Powell, which continued several years under the name of Straight & Powell. In 1889 Mr. Straight went to Buffalo and the firm was dissolved. He returned to Cattaraugus in 1890 and has practiced law there since. In 1893 he established a law office at Otto. Mr. Straight held the office of postmaster at Cattaraugus for twelve years and was also several years a justice of the peace.

Milton M. Burnham was born in the town of Dayton on the 22d day of February, 1839. His parents soon afterwards removed to Villenova, Chautauqua county, and thence to Nashville, N. Y. Mr. Burnham here enjoyed the usual advantages of a district school. He left home in 1850 to take care of himself, and from that time until 1856 he attended district school winters, working for his board, and traveled and worked the balance of the seasons in the States of New York, Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan. In the spring of 1856 he began work at lumbering in and about Kiantone, N. Y., as a common laborer, where he lived most of the time until April, 1860. He obtained his education under difficulties, carrying school books while at work. He acquired sufficient education to enable him to teach district school for a time and attend a few terms at the Jamestown Academy, then conducted by Professor Dickinson and Miss Kent. In the spring of 1860 he entered the law office of Hazeltine & Clark at Jamestown and began his legal studies. He continued with them until May, 1863, when he was admitted to the bar. He opened an office at Otto, where he remained and practiced until the fall of 1866, when he went to Pittsburg, Pa. In 1867 he removed to Holley, Mich., where he remained until 1886, when he removed to East Jordan, Charlevoix county, Mich., where he now resides. October 15, 1863, he was married to Julia A. Babcock, daughter of Oliver C. Babcock, of Persia. Mrs. Burnham died in 1884 and Mr. Burnham afterwards married Achsah M. Babcock, a sister of his first wife. In November, 1890, he was elected prosecuting attorney of Charlevoix county and served two years. He is now a director of the East Jordan High School.

Hudson Ansley* is of English ancestry, and was born in Collins, Erie county, January 15, 1838. His parents, Hudson and Maria (Heaton) Ansley, came from Pike county, Pa., to Collins some time between 1825 and 1830 and purchased the only "clearing" then made in that vicinity. Here they reared a large family amid the deprivations and pleasures of pioneer life, and gave their children such advantages of education as were within their reach. Hudson, after exhausting the resources of the district school, attended the academies of Gowanda and Fredonia, and was a teacher of district schools. Turning his attention to the law he pursued his legal studies with Torrance & Allen, of Gowanda, was admitted to the bar in 1863, and from that time has been in active practice. In the summer of 1861 he left his law studies and devoted his time to enlisting soldiers. In September he joined the 64th N. Y. Regt., was later commissioned regimental hospital steward, and held this office until he was honorably discharged in the summer of 1862. He belongs to Sherwood Post, G. A. R. After a year's partnership with his instructor, Henry F. Allen, in Gowanda, in 1864 he removed to Salamanca, where he has since resided. In October, 1870, after the death of James D. McVey, surrogate of Cattaraugus county, Mr. Ansley received the appointment to that office from Gov. Lucius Robinson and held it during Mr. McVey's unexpired term. In 1882 he was appointed by Gov. Grover Cleveland attorney for the Seneca Nation of Indians and held that office ten years. Mr. Ansley represented Salamanca on the Board of Supervisors in 1866, 1867, 1868, 1869, 1880, 1881, and 1891, and commenced his services as postmaster of Salamanca July 1, 1893.

Mr. Ansley has ever been a Democrat. Much interested in political movements, he is an ardent worker and a prized counselor in the conclaves of his party. He has been frequently a delegate to district, county, and State conventions, was on the State Committee in 1884 and 1888, and was sent as a delegate by the "anti-snapper" convention to the Democratic national convention held at Chicago, Ill., in June, 1892. Mr. Ansley has given much attention to Free Masonry: he is a member of Cattaraugus Lodge, No. 239; Salamanca Chapter, No. 266; and Salamanca Commandery, No. 62. He has been several times master of his lodge and high priest of his chapter. In 1863 Mr. Ansley married Elzina J., daughter of Zalmon and Belinda (Southworth*) Hanford, of Gowanda. They have one son, George H. Mr. Ansley enjoys the social side of life and has many friends—to quote a prominent Republican lawyer of Chautauqua county: "In law, in sociality, in everything but his politics, 'Hud.' Ansley is a fine fellow." Mr. Ansley owns a farm near Salamanca, where he raises fine breeds of cattle and horses. In 1880 he made an extensive tour through Scotland, England, Holland, Germany, Austria, Italy, Switzerland, and France; in 1889 he visited the island of Cuba, and in 1891 he passed some time in Mexico.

Norman M. Allen is a son of Luther and Huldah (Benedict) Allen, and was born in Dayton, December 24, 1828. His parents were natives of Onondaga county, N. Y., and emigrated early to Cattaraugus county, settling in Dayton. His mother died when he was but ten years old and his father when he was seventeen. His educational advantages were extremely limited, the merest rudiments of an English education being acquired by a few years' attendance in the common schools of his native town prior to the death of his father, which event prevented his further attendance at school. He, however, used his leisure hours for many years in study and thus acquired a substantial store of knowledge. For several years after the death of his father he taught in the common schools in his vicinity in the winter and worked at farming in the summer. As the result of his continuous labor his health became impaired so much that for three years he was unable to perform outdoor work. During this time he devoted himself to hard study, but without the aid of a teacher. In 1848, at the age of nineteen, he married Huldah Merrill, daughter of Heman Merrill, of Dayton. In 1855 he was elected county superintendent of the poor upon the first Republican ticket nominated in the county, and held that office until 1857, when he resigned to accept the office of school commissioner, which office he held during the years 1858-60 inclusive. In 1861 he was appointed to the position of United States mail-route agent and held and discharged the duties of this position until February, 1863, when he resigned to accept the office of paymaster in the army, to which he had been appointed by President Lincoln. This office he filled only a short time, resigning it to accept the office of assistant provost-marshal of the Thirty-first Congressional District, which position he held up to the time of his first election to the State Senate in the fall of 1863. For several years prior to his election to the Senate in 1863 he had devoted his spare time to the study of law, but was not a clerk in any office and had no instructor. He began to do business, however, some time before his admission to the bar, being employed in legal affairs by his friends and townsmen, and did much of their law business, drew writings, and tried causes for them in justice's court. While serving his first term in the State Senate he was admitted to the bar at Albany upon motion of the late Amasa J. Parker. Mr. Allen was again elected to the State Senate in 1871, and during this term was a member of the Judiciary Committee and other important committees, and by virtue of his office as senator was a member of the Court of Impeachment that tried and removed Judge Barnard from office. In 1867 he was elected a delegate to the constitutional convention and served during the sessions of that body. In 1866 he was appointed State assessor and held that office four years. In 1868 and again in 1876 he was one of the candidates for elector upon the Republican electoral ticket. He performed loyal service in assisting in the organization of regiments during the late war of the Rebellion and in sustaining the cause of the Union, and when the remains of President Lincoln were brought to Albany on their way to Springfield Mr. Allen was one of the pall bearers appointed by the Senate who attended the remains of the dead president during their stay at the capital of the State.

Mr. Allen's service on the Board of Supervisors is longer than that of any other man in the history of the county, he having been elected thirty-four consecutive terms, during twenty-eight of which he has been chairman of the board. Mr. Allen was again elected to the State Senate in 1881, serving two years. While Grover Cleveland was governor of the State he appointed Mr. Allen one of the State prison commissioners charged with the duty of examining the prisons of the State and making a report upon the subject of convict labor. No man in this county is more familiar with its history or its public affairs than Mr. Allen. His long service upon the Board of Supervisors and his chairmanship of that body have given him an unparalleled opportunity to watch the development of the county, the growth of its industries and public improvements, as well as its political history, and he has thus become entirely familiar with every detail of county affairs. This knowledge and familiarity have been made useful by him for the benefit of the county and of his town. During all this time he has been engaged in active practice and has had the care and management of many large and important trusts. For a generation he has stood in the front rank of the public men of our county and has been acknowledged one of the leaders in politics, at the bar, and in public affairs. Mr. Allen owns a fine farm in Dayton to which he gives his personal attention. His studies have not been confined to legal subjects alone, but in his efforts to overcome the disadvantages of early life in procuring an education he became proficient in the French language and also acquired sufficient knowledge of Latin to enable him to teach it in the public schools. He still retains a deep interest in all matters affecting the general welfare of our people.

Edwin D. Northrup was born in Tolland, Conn., April 27, 1839. He received a good common school education and graduated at the Connecticut Literary Institution in 1862. The following year he removed to Cattaraugus county and located in Ellicottville, where he has since resided. Mr. Northrup taught the Union School at Ellicottville one winter, and the following spring, May 18, 1864, entered Johnson's land office in the same place, of which he had charge several years. He was admitted to the bar in May, 1865, and was admitted to practice in the United States Supreme Court in October, 1876. Mr. Northrup was supervisor of the town of Ellicottville six years from 1876 to 1881 inclusive. He is a grandson of John Northrup, who was a native of New London, Conn., and who served in the War of 1812, and is a son of Nelson W. Northrup, a native of Morris, Otsego county. Mr. Northrup's mother was Loraine Fitch and a relative of John Fitch, the steamboat inventor. The Fitches trace their lineage back to Joseph Fitch, a native of Braintree, County Essex, England, and he was one of the earliest settlers of Windsor, Conn. Mr. Northrup is still engaged in active practice at Ellicottville.

Henry M. Seymour is a son of Silas and Charlotte Seymour and was born in the town of Randolph, September 12, 1839. He attended the district schools of Miller hollow, Sample hill, and Mud creek, and was a student at the Randolph Academy four terms. He also taught district schools four terms and "boarded round." In the spring of 1863 he entered the law office of Merrill T. Jenkins at East Randolph and began the study of law. In the fall of 1864 he entered the Albany Law School and took a complete course of lectures, graduating May 25, 1865, and was admitted at the Albany General term of the Supreme Court, May 4, 1865. He began to practice in what is now West Salamanca in the fall of 1865 and moved to Salamanca in September, 1877, where he remained until October, 1880, when he removed to California. While in Salamanca he was in partnership for about a year and a half with Carey D. Davie. While living in Salamanca he held the office of justice of the peace eight years, and was also assessor three years and postmaster about six years at West Salamanca. In 1872 he was elected school commissioner of the Second District of Cattaraugus county and held the office three years. Mr. Seymour is now (1893) living at Santa Ana, Cal., and is not engaged in the practice of law.

William G. Laidlaw's native place was Jedburgh in Roxburgshire, Scotland, where he was born January 1, 1840. He came to this country with his parents in 1852, being then twelve years old. His mother died soon after their arrival. His father and the rest of the family moved into Franklinville and settled upon a farm in that town in the fall of 1852, building a log house on the place. William helped clear the farm before he was old enough to leave home. His parents were in moderate circumstances, and were able to make a good payment on the farm and buy a yoke of oxen, two cows, and some tools. William went through, on the farm, all the steps of ox-driving, making black salts, chopping fallow, etc. The Scotch believe in giving their children an education, and while living in Scotland William attended school eleven months in a year and was a pretty good scholar for a boy of twelve years when he arrived in this country. After going onto the farm he began work in earnest, and only went to school about twelve weeks each winter. The time to begin going to school was in the fall when the snow got too deep to "underbrush," and school generally wound up in the spring when sap began to run. From 1852 until 1860 the reading of the family was the New York Tribune. Mr. Laidlaw paid no attention to politics in those days, but he had read "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and that and the Tribune made him intensely anti-slavery. There was an excellent school in that district which Mr. Laidlaw attended. Some of the teachers were well educated people and gave a great impulse to Mr. Laidlaw's ambition. He obtained here a good idea of the common branches and gave some attention to the higher branches. During this time he procured an elementary geometry which he studied at home without a teacher. When he was pretty well grown he hired out on a farm for six months at $12 a month. In the fall of the same year a select school was started in Franklinville by Mr. Kimball which Mr. Laidlaw attended, and the following winter he began teaching, getting $20 per month. In the fall following this the Rev. D. C. McVean, the pastor of the U. P. church at Franklinville, who was a graduate of Union College, got an undergraduate of that institution to come on to Franklinville and open a private school. Mr.

Laidlaw attended his school. The teacher went back to college after a time and another "Union" man came on and took his place. Mr. Laidlaw boarded with both of these men at Mr. McVean's for a number of terms, and so was in every-day intercourse with them. He learned much from them. Mr. McVean had plenty of books, magazines, and reviews, and was the father of the school. He is described as being a good man among the young folks and had the respect of all sorts and conditions of men. In this school Mr. Laidlaw studied Latin, Greek, higher algebra, geometry, and English grammar, and taught a class in the school part of the time. He taught school three winters in all. His instruction at this school was sufficient to prepare him for college. He began reading law in the office of the late Judge Samuel S. Spring at Franklinville.

While engaged in his law studies a party of young men from Olean and Hinsdale began making arrangements to go into the navy. This was in the summer of 1862. Mr. Laidlaw joined them and they went to New York and shipped. Three of them got on board the United States steamer Montgomery, then being put in readiness at the navy yard in Brooklyn. In a few days they sailed, not knowing where they were bound, but they soon reached Havana and sunk a steamer on the coast of Cuba, supposed to be a blockade runner. The Montgomery kept to sea off the American coast, watching the ports for blockade runners. One large steamer was captured with a valuable cargo, and afterwards a small sailing craft loaded with sea-island cotton. Spain had complained in the meantime to the United States about the sinking of the steamer in her waters, it being too close to the shore, and with the result that in January, 1863, the Montgomery was ordered to Boston and her captain, Hunter, of the regular navy, was suspended, ostensibly to please Spain; afterwards Congress restored him by special act. Mr. Laidlaw was discharged from the navy in Boston, May 11, 1863, and immediately returned to Franklinville and resumed the study of law in Judge Spring's office. He took with him when he enlisted on the Montgomery Edwards on Bailments so that he was enabled to continue his law studies in a way while at sea. The war continuing, and Mr. Laidlaw's interest in it also continuing, he was urged to try to raise enough volunteers to save a draft in some of the towns, and to do this he made some war speeches in Franklinville, Farmersville, and Hinsdale. The result was that sixty or seventy men, all volunteers, started for Erie, Pa., and shipped, or enlisted, in September, 1864. September 1, 1864, before he left home, Mr. Laidlaw married Elizabeth, daughter of William McVey, of Franklinville. The company of volunteers was immediately sent by rail to Evansville and down the Ohio to Paducah, Ky., and the Cattaraugus men were placed on three gunboats to fill up a deficiency in their respective crews. It was warm work on the Tennessee river, which was lined with thick woods, and they were at the mercy of batteries that could only be located by the smoke of their guns. After a few weeks of hard service the three gunboats were sunk by the Confederate batteries at Johnsonville, Tenn., and a large quantity of stores and several transports on the river destroyed. This left the crews of the vessels in the woods, and they started for Nashville, eighty or ninety miles away across the country. Mr. Laidlaw, with a few of the other men who had kept together, reached Nashville on election day. They were next sent to Cairo and a few of the Cattaraugus men, including Mr. Laidlaw, were put aboard the Cincinnati. This vessel was an ironclad, one of the best boats on the river, and did some hard fighting. The vessel went up the Tennessee river past Johnsonville and as far as she could find water, but encountered nothing. They then started down the Mississippi to New Orleans, reaching that city on Washington's birthday. Mr. Laidlaw went ashore at New Orleans and obtained a few books at an old junk-shop. The vessel was ordered to Mobile, which was rather risky, as the Cincinnati was not a sea-going craft. After considerable difficulty the vessel reached Mobile. There was an immense fleet off this port and a large body of soldiers was being transported towards the city to aid in its capture, preparations for which were being carefully made. The work of the navy here was hard and dangerous. The Cincinnati was assigned to the duty of taking up torpedoes out of the bay. This work could only be done in the night, on account of the batteries, but the torpedoes were slowly removed and the fleet gradually moved up the bay. Finally the city with its defences was taken April 12, 1865, three days after the surrender of Lee at Appomattox, the army having done most of the fighting. In this battle the navy lost two vessels by torpedoes, the Metacomet and Osage. After the capture of the city the Cincinnati was sent after Confederate gunboats up the Alabama and Tombigbee rivers.

On the 15th of May, 1865, the war being over, Mr. Laidlaw was discharged from active service at Mobile and was to go to New York for examination as acting assistant paymaster in the navy. But by the time he reached New York there was no use for paymasters. Mr. Laidlaw entered the navy as "landsman," was promoted to "ordinary seaman," then to "able seaman," and finally to "captain of the forecastle." He returned to Franklinville, began keeping house, and resumed his law studies in Judge Spring's office. He was admitted to the bar in the spring of 1866 and began practice in Franklinville. His practice had really begun before he was admitted to the bar, for he had, prior to that time, been engaged in numerous cases in justice's court, generally with Judge Spring on the other side; and he continued his practice in the lower courts after his admission to the bar. In the fall of 1866 he was elected school commissioner for the First District of Cattaraugus county and served a term of three years. In the spring of 1869 he moved to Ellicottville and went into partnership with Judge Allen D. Scott, and afterwards his wife's brother, James D. McVey, joined the firm. In April, 1871, Mr. Laidlaw was appointed an assessor of internal revenue by President Grant and held the office until the following year, when he resigned. He was elected district attorney of Cattaraugus county in the fall of 1871, served three years, and was re-elected and served another term. Mr. McVey was elected surrogate in 1873 and in 1874 moved to Franklinville. In 1875 Mr. Scott was elected county judge and Mr. Laidlaw continued to practice law alone for a time afterwards. Later, S. R. McNair, who had read law with him, was taken into partnership, and this partnership still continues. Mr. Laidlaw was elected to the Fiftieth Congress in the fall of 1886. The House was Democratic, and he was appointed the fifteenth member of the Claims Committee by Speaker Carlisle. He was elected to the Fifty-first Congress in 1888 and was appointed chairman of the Committee on Claims by Speaker Reed. This was a very important committee, having to deal with all kinds of claims presented against the government, many of them involving large amounts of money and requiring the examination of intricate questions of law. Upon the expiration of his service in Congress Mr. Laidlaw resumed the practice of his profession at Ellicottville, where he now resides.

John C. Spencer practiced law in Allegany about a year, 1866 and 1867, but it is not known whence he came to this county or where he went.

Harper H. Phelps practiced in Olean some time prior to 1866, and for a time was a partner with William P. Angel. At a great fire which occurred in Olean in January, 1866, Mr. Phelps lost his life in attempting to rescue his law library.

Commodore P. Vedder was born February 23, 1838, on a farm in the town of Ellicottville. His parents were Dutch and his ancestors fought in the Revolutionary war and the War of 1812. He lived in a log house on a fifty-acre farm until he was fourteen years of age. He was then employed by a butcher in Great Valley at $2.50 per month. In 1854 he was a driver on the Erie canal. In the spring of 1855 he went from Great Valley to Cincinnati down the Allegheny river on a raft. From Cincinnati he went to Cleveland, Ohio, and shipped as a sailor before the mast on the brig Alert, bound for Chicago. He followed sailing as a living until the close of navigation in 1859. In the third year of his sea-faring life he was promoted to the position of mate, and was captain of the vessel in 1858 and 1859. After leaving the lakes he took a course in Springville Academy and finished in 1861. He began the study of law with Judge David H. Bolles in 1861 and taught school during the winters of 1859, 1860, 1861, and 1862. In August, 1862, he enlisted as a private in the 154th N. Y. Vols. and was successively promoted to lieutenant and captain in that regiment. At the battle of Chancellorsville he was taken prisoner and for two weeks endured the horrors of Libby prison. He was paroled, and while under parole was detailed by the secretary of war to take charge of the camp of paroled prisoners near Alexandria, Va. In the fall of 1863 he was transferred with his regiment to the Army of the Cumberland near Chattanooga. He participated in the battles of Chancellorsville, Wauhatchie, Lookout Valley, Lookout Mountain, Mission Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, and the siege of Savannah, and was on the celebrated march of Sherman from Chattanooga to Knoxville, Tenn., for the relief of General Burnside. He was also with General Sherman in his famous march from Atlanta to the sea and through the Carolinas. He was discharged in June, 1865, by reason of the close of the war. At the battle of Rocky Face Ridge, May 8, 1864, he was wounded, but refused a furlough after leaving the hospital, and was appointed by President Lincoln and the secretary of war to examine applicants for commissions in colored regiments, with headquarters at Chattanooga. At the battle of Look-out Mountain he was breveted major in the United States or regular army "for gallant and meritorious conduct." He was promoted to be lieutenant-colonel of volunteers "for bravery in battle" in the campaign from Chattanooga to Atlanta.

After the war he resumed the study of law and in the winter of 1865-66 he attended the Albany Law School, and was admitted to the bar at Buffalo, May 7, 1866. In May, 1867, he was admitted to practice in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York. In 1867 he was appointed register in bankruptcy and resigned that position in 1875 to enter the State Senate. From 1872 to 1875 inclusive he was a member of the Assembly. In 1872, as member of the Judiciary Committee, he assisted in investigating the unjust judges of the city of New York, to wit: Cardozo, McCunn, and Barnard. He was chairman of the committee to draft articles of impeachment against Judge Barnard and was appointed one of the managers on the trial of that official before the High Court of Impeachment for maladministration in office. In 1869 he was appointed United States assessor of internal revenue and held the office until the next congressional succession. He was elected to the Senate in 1875 and served in that body during the sessions of 1876 and 1877. In 1880 he was appointed State assessor by Governor Cornell and held that office until his successor was appointed in 1883. In 1884 he was again elected to the State Senate and was re-elected three successive terms thereafter. He was chairman of the Committee on Taxation and Retrenchment during the last eight years he was in the Senate. Mr. Vedder drafted and introduced the bill to tax gifts, legacies, and collateral inheritances, which became a law in 1885. He drafted and introduced a bill taxing corporations for the privilege of organizing, which became a law in 1886; also the bill amending the collateral inheritance act of 1885, which amended act became a law in 1891, under which the succession, by death, of personal property of $10,000 or more is taxed one per cent. He is now a member of the Holland Society and the Lawyers' Club. He is president of the New York and New Jersey Ice Lines of New York, president of the State Bank of Norwood, N. Y., president of the Elko Milling, Mining, and Manufacturing Company of Randolph, is a member of the G. A. R., and has an office in the city of New York. In 1867 he formed a partnership with William Manley, of Ellicottville, which continued some time. In 1869 he entered into partnership with the late Judge Rensselaer Lamb, which continued until Judge Lamb's death in November, 1871. In 1876 a partnership was formed between Mr. Vedder and George M. Rider under the name of Vedder & Rider, which continued until 1884. Mr. Vedder afterwards formed a partnership with James O. Clark, of Ellicottville. In 1862 Mr. Vedder married Bettie E. Squires, of Springville, and had one child, a son, who died in February, 1882. His wife died in 1884. In 1892 he was married to Mrs. Genevieve A. Wheeler, of Chicago, Ill.

Joseph R. Jewell is a son of Jerome B. Jewell, of Machias, and was admitted to the bar about 1867. He pursued his legal studies with Cary & Bolles at Olean and soon after his admission to the bar located at Little Valley as a member of the firm of Cary, Bolles & Jewell. He remained at Little Valley until the fall of 1873, when he went to Olean and there joined his partner, Mr. Cary, in a general practice. Judge Bolles had retired from the firm about three years before. Mr. Jewell remained in partnership with Mr. Cary until the spring of 1883, when he withdrew from the firm and entered into partnership with his brother, M. B. Jewell, under the firm name of J. R. & M. B. Jewell. This firm continued until the winter of 1892-93, when it was dissolved. Since that time Mr. Jewell has practiced alone at Olean. He owns a farm about two miles north of the city. Mr. Jewell married Julia E. Lamper, of Conewango.

William E. McDuffie was born about 1844 in the town of New Albion. He attended the common schools until about fourteen years old, when he went to Oberlin College for a time. He then went to Springville, N. Y., and attended the academy there a short time. After that he went to Buffalo and began the study of law in the office of Mr. Day and was admitted to the bar in Buffalo in 1867. He afterwards located and practiced in Otto in this county. He married Miss Addie McMillen, of Springville, and went to Magnolia, Iowa, to engage in the practice of law. He died at Council Bluffs about 1868, at the age of twenty-five years. He is described as a young man of unusual ability and one who gave great promise of a successful career at the bar.

William P. Spargur practiced in Little Valley a short time about 1868. He then removed to Wellsville, N. Y., where he now resides.

Arunah Ward was born in Reading, Steuben county, September 30, 1820, and is a son of Charles and Lydia (King) Ward. His parents came to Great Valley from Vermont in 1821 and settled in an unbroken wood lot. They traveled from Steuben county with an ox-team. While clearing a small plat of ground and erecting a log cabin they lived in the only school house in the town. They remained until 1846, when they removed to Wisconsin. Mr. Ward's mother died in 1848, and his father returned to this county and died in 1850. Arunah Ward was raised on the homestead, where he spent his boyhood at hard labor, attending the common schools in winter. He afterwards attended Springville Academy two terms and at once began teaching district schools, and taught in all fifteen terms. He began business life as a millwright and farmer, and owned and occupied the old homestead in Great Valley. He was a justice of the peace in Great Valley and has also been superintendent of the poor of the county. In 1865 he was elected surrogate of the county and served four years. He removed to Ellicottville, January 1, 1866, where he still resides. In May, 1868, he was admitted to the bar, and in July, 1884, was admitted to practice in United States courts. September 15, 1852, he married Jane A. Palmer, of Great Valley.

Emory A. Anderson was at one time a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church. At the beginning of the late war he enlisted in the 9th N. Y. Cav., taking an active part in raising the regiment. While in the service he was promoted to the rank of major. After the war he studied law and opened an office at Little Valley about 1868, in partnership with Andrew Smith. He continued in practice there a short time, and then removed to Granger, Allegany county, but did not continue the practice of law. He died several years ago.

Andrew Smith, who came from Allegany county, opened an office at Little Valley in connection with Emory A. Anderson upon the removal of the county seat to that village in 1868. He remained in Little Valley only two or three years, when he returned to Allegany county and soon afterwards died.

Samuel Dunham was born in 1840 at Windham, Bradford county, Pa. His father was Henry Dunham, a Methodist preacher. He received his education at the Owego Academy, from which institution he was a graduate. He learned the trade of a miller and engaged in this business several years before the war, and during the same period he taught in the common schools during the winter season. In the fall of 1861 he enlisted in the 64th Regiment N. Y. Vols. He remained in the service about two years, and then began reading law in Owego. He afterwards came to Salamanca and was appointed station agent of the Atlantic & Great Western Railway Company; he held this position about three years. He continued his legal studies with Hudson Ansley and was admitted to practice about 1868; he then formed a partnership with Mr. Ansley at Salamanca. He afterwards went to Minnesota, where he held the office of district attorney. He then moved to New York city, where he was a clerk in one of the departments of the city government. He held this position three years and then settled in Little Valley, where he remained until the fall of 1890, when he removed to the west. While in this county he held several important local offices, and for eleven years was clerk of the Board of Supervisors.

J. Wilbur Cochran, who now resides in Centralia, Wis., is a native of the town of Otto, where he was born April 8, 1845, and is the youngest son of Orson Cochran, who was a farmer and surveyor and for many years one of the leading citizens of that town. Wilbur spent his early life on the farm and at the district school at Scott's Corners in the town of Otto. He also attended the Springville Academy one term. On the 6th of September, 1864, he enlisted as a private in the 188th Regiment N. Y. Vols. and went immediately to the front at Petersburg, Va. He participated in the battle of Hatcher's Run, October 27, 1864, and the subsequent battles around Petersburg, the raid on the Weldon Railroad, and the second Hatcher's Run fight on February 4, 5, and 6, 1865. He remained in the army until March 25, 1865, when he left the field on account of illness. He was discharged from the service at Elmira, N. Y., June 1, 1865. He engaged in business at Shaffer and Miller Farms in the oil regions of Pennsylvania in November, 1865, and continued there several months. In April, 1866, he removed to Chicago and engaged in the mercantile business. In November of the same year he left Chicago and returned to Otto, N. Y. He taught school at East Otto Corners in the winter of 1866-67 and worked on his father's farm the following summer. In November, 1867, he commenced reading law with Albert Haight, now a justice of the Supreme Court, at Buffalo, N. Y., and was admitted to practice at a General term held in Buffalo in May, 1869. While reading with Judge Haight he received one dollar a week for office attendance; he boarded at the old Franklin House, lodging in the office and using army blankets for bedding. He located at Otto in the spring of 1869 for the practice of law, where he remained until the spring of 1873. He then went west, locating at Centralia, Wis., where he now resides. In July, 1873, he formed a partnership with Charles M. Webb, who was then United States district attorney for the Northern District of Wisconsin, living at Grand Rapids, Wis., which partnership continued until 1883, when Mr. Webb was appointed and afterwards elected Circuit judge of that Circuit, which position he still holds. Since that time Mr. Cochran has pursued the practice of law alone. He has been chairman of the county Board of Supervisors, district attorney of his county one term, and city attorney for the city of Centralia since its incorporation in 1874.

James M. Gallagher, a son of John and Ellen Gallagher, was born in Canada in 1841, and moved with his father and mother to Little Valley Center. He attended the common schools and worked on his father's farm during his youth, and later attended the Randolph Academy about three years. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in the 154th Regiment under Captain Nelson. He was promoted successively to sergeant, quartermaster, second lieutenant, first lieutenant, and captain. He participated in all the battles in which the 154th Regiment was engaged, and at Lookout Mountain was wounded. He also marched with Sherman to the sea, and at the close of the war was mustered out of service. After his return from the war he was sick at his home in Little Valley about a year, when he went to Buffalo and commenced the study of law in the office of Babcock & Moore, and in 1869 was admitted to the bar. He immediately opened an office for the practice of his profession in Buffalo, where he remained about three years, when he removed to Little Valley and practiced there about a year. From there he went to Cleveland, Ohio, and engaged in the manufacture and sale of burglar alarms. He died in Cleveland in 1885. He was married to a Miss Burns, of Rochester, N. Y., sister of Rev. P. Burns, of that city.

Martin V. Benson, son of John and Millie (Helms) Benson, was born in Conewango, June 28, 1839. His father was a mechanic and owned a farm where Martin spent his youth in attendance at the common schools and in labor on the farm. He also took an academic course at the Randolph Academy. He began the study of law in the office of Alexander Sheldon, of Randolph, and completed his course at the Albany Law School; he was admitted to the bar in February, 1870. During the time that he was acquiring his education and pursuing his law studies he taught eight terms in the district schools. Immediately after he was admitted to the bar he opened a law office in the village of East Randolph, where he has since resided. He represented the town of Conewango on the Board of Supervisors from 1866 to 1871 inclusive, and also in 1873, 1874, 1880, and 1881, in all ten years, and was chairman of the board in 1874. He has been three times elected president of the village of East Randolph, and is now president of the Board of Water Commissioners and also president of the People's State Bank of East Randolph.

Charles W. Blackney was a son of Nathan and Sarah Ann (Leonard) Blackney, and was born in Perrysburg, February 18, 1846. He moved with his parents to Gowanda about 1851 and was educated in the Gowanda Union School. After leaving school he was a clerk in his father's grocery store and also in the hardware store of Sellew & Popple until 1867, when he began the study of law with Frank A. Newell, of Gowanda. He continued with Mr. Newell about two years and then became a student in the office of William Woodbury, from whose office he was admitted to the bar about 1870. He was for a short time a partner with Judge Woodbury. In 1871 he purchased the law library and office of F. A. Newell, where he continued to practice until his death September 8, 1875. He was murdered by Lewis Derby, who immediately committed suicide. Mr. Blackney was a young man of great promise and bright prospects, and had already taken high rank in his profession. He had held the office of justice of the peace and was also town clerk several years. He represented Persia on the Board of Supervisors two terms. In 1874 he was the candidate of the Democratic party for district attorney, but was defeated by William G. Laidlaw. December 24, 1863, he was married to Alice E., daughter of William H. Stuart, of Gowanda, who still survives him.

Albert L. Read was the oldest son of Allen L. Read, and was born in the town of Westmoreland, Oneida county, February 3, 1845. He received his education at the Whitestown Seminary and graduated from that institution at the age of twenty-two years. Afterwards he studied law in the office of Scott & Laidlaw in Ellicottville and was admitted to the bar in 1870. He practiced law in Yorkshire Center in 1871 and 1872. He then went to Buffalo and formed a partnership with Mr. Gibbs, and afterwards was a partner with L. Le Clear, of the same place, in 1877 and 1878. He died at his father's home in Yorkshire on the 12th of July, 1879.

Benjamin F. Congdon, son of William H. K. and Elizabeth (Miller) Congdon, was born in Napoli, May 2, 1844. His father was a native of Rhode Island and his mother was born in Napoli. He received an academic education at Randolph Academy. He studied law with M. T. Jenkins, then of East Randolph, Judge Hazeltine, of Jamestown, N. Y., and William Manley, of Ellicottville. While pursuing his law studies he taught district schools at intervals. He finished his law studies at the Albany Law School and was admitted to practice in October, 1870. He opened an office for the practice of law with his brother, Joseph M. Congdon, in East Randolph, and in October, 1873, located in the village of Randolph, forming a partnership with James G. Johnson, which continued about a year. Since then he has practiced his profession alone. In December, 1872, he was married to Frances M., daughter of Dr. Samuel S. Wilcox, of Napoli. In 1880 Mr. Congdon was appointed by Governor Cornell attorney for the Seneca Nation of Indians, which position he held three years. During the legislative sessions of 1892 and 1893 Mr. Congdon was in Albany acting as clerk to a Senate committee.

Joseph M. Congdon is a native of Napoli, where he was born on the 12th of January, 1846. His father, William H. K. Congdon, and his grandfather, Benjamin Congdon, who was a soldier in the War of 1812, removed from Rhode Island to this county in 1840, and his mother, Elizabeth Miller, was a daughter of Joseph Miller, who was one of the early settlers of Napoli, having purchased from the Holland Land Company a large tract of land and settled upon it. Mr. Congdon lived upon his father's farm in Napoli, attended the district school in the "little red school house on the hill," and did the ordinary work of a farmer's boy until fifteen years of age, when he began attending school at Randolph Academy, then presided over by Samuel G. Love, an educator of more than ordinary ability. Soon after he became sixteen he commenced teaching school in the winter and going to the academy during the spring and fall terms. In the fall of 1864 he went to Oil City and worked on the oil wells for about two years, going through the rise and fall of the renowned Pithole development. In 1868 he began the study of law with Jenkins & Goodwill at East Randolph and was admitted to the bar in October, 1870. In January following he and his brother, Benjamin F. Congdon, entered into partnership and practiced law at East Randolph under the firm name of Congdon & Congdon, and remained there three years. In the fall of 1873 he removed to Fredonia, N. Y., and entered into partnership with Merrill T. Jenkins, where he practiced two years. In the fall of 1875 he removed to Gowanda, where he now resides, and since which time he has been engaged in the practice of law. In 1877 he engaged in the oil business near Bradford, Pa., and drilled fourteen oil wells. In the fall of 1879 he was elected member of Assembly from the Second District of Cattaraugus county and was re-elected in 1880. During his first term he was a member of the Judiciary Committee and the second year was made its chairman. It is said that this is an honor which no other member of Assembly from Cattaraugus county has ever received. Since the close of his legislative service he has devoted his entire time to the practice of law. He married Alice, daughter of Merrill T. Jenkins.

Silas A. Lamb, a son of Judge Rensselaer Lamb, was admitted to the bar about 1870, and practiced law a short time in Ellicottville in partnership with Commodore P. Vedder. After the death of his father in 1871 Mr. Lamb settled his estate and then moved to Lyndon and engaged in farming; he afterwards went to Kansas, where he now resides.

Hiram M. Herrick was born at Gowanda, January 17, 1849. In 1868 he began the study of law with Eugene A. Nash at Cattaraugus, where he remained until September, 1870, when he entered the Albany Law School, graduating from that institution in May, 1871, and was admitted to the bar. He then formed a partnership with Mr. Nash at Cattaraugus under the firm name of Nash & Herrick. This partnership continued until 1873, when Mr. Nash was elected county clerk. After this Mr. Herrick continued the practice of law alone until his death, which occurred May 16, 1880. Mr. Herrick was a careful and painstaking lawyer, and had won considerable distinction when his career was cut short by his early death.

James Dow McVey was of Scotch parentage, and was born in Covington, Wyoming county, March 22, 1843. He moved to Franklinville with his parents in 1851. He there attended the district schools for a while, and afterwards went to Rushford and attended the academy at that place. He then taught district school two terms, after which he entered New York University and graduated in the classical course in 1866. While pursuing his university studies he turned aside for a year and entered the United States navy, where he acted as clerk to the paymaster on board the John Adams. After leaving the university he was engaged for a time in teaching in the city of New York, and also, while there, attended lectures in the Law Department of Columbia College. Coming to Ellicottville in 1870 he entered the law office of Scott & Laidlaw and continued his studies until 1871, when he was admitted to the bar. Upon his admission the firm was re-organized, Mr. McVey becoming a member, and the partnership continued under the name of Scott, Laidlaw & McVey. In the fall of 1873 he was elected surrogate of Cattaraugus county, being the first surrogate elected under the amended judiciary article of the constitution which was adopted in 1869. He assumed the duties of his office January 1, 1874, and soon afterwards moved the surrogate's office from Ellicottville to Franklinville and took up his residence in the latter village, where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred October 9, 1879.

At the first session of the County Court after McVey's death, which convened October 27, 1879, a meeting of the bar of Cattaraugus county was held at the court house to take appropriate action expressing the feelings of the bar with reference to his decease. On this occasion Frank W. Stevens presented resolutions, which were adopted by the bar, in which they say that the "pleasantness of their professional relations with him has never been broken or marred." "Modest and unassuming, he won the affection of all his brethren at the bar, and by his manliness and integrity commanded their respect. In the judicial capacity to which he was chosen early in his professional life he acquired our confidence as an upright judge, a well-read lawyer, and a discreet, judicious man. He discharged the different duties devolving upon him with justice and kindness to all, with favor and partiality to none. He ignored none of the claims which society has upon the man, the profession upon the lawyer, the State upon the citizen, and endeavored faithfully to meet them all." Judge Allen D. Scott on the same occasion read from the bench an appreciative tribute to his memory, in which he says: "My relations with him were most intimate. He was with me as a student at law and a partner in business, and I have watched his progress with great interest. As a student he was diligent, attentive, and thorough; in professional life he was discreet, intelligent, and the soul of honor; socially he was one of the most genial men I ever knew, generous and ever mindful of the feelings of others. As a son, a brother, a husband, a citizen, a lawyer, a judge, and a friend, and in all the walks of life, he was noble." Addresses were made on the same occasion by Hudson Ansley, N. M. Allen, E. A. Nash, J. M. Congdon, J. H. Waring, and William G. Laidlaw. The writer was well acquainted with Mr. McVey, and practiced in his court during almost his entire judicial career. He was a man who took an active interest in everything which promoted the welfare of the community. He was a thorough legal student, and was well trained in the classics. He believed that the narrowing tendencies of legal practice should be guarded against by studies of outside subjects, which tend to broaden the man and keep him abreast of the best thought of his age. He read widely and discriminatingly, and was not only an able judge, but was deeply acquainted with the best literature of his time. January 24, 1872, Mr. McVey married Isidore, only daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Henry Van Aernam, of Franklinville, who still survives him.

George M. Rider is a native of Trenton, Oneida county, where he was born September 15, 1844. His father was a farmer, and in the fall of 1847 moved with his family to this county and purchased a farm about a mile south of the village of Ellicottville. Mr. Rider attended the district school, the Ellicottville Union School, and Alfred Academy. He also taught district schools a number of terms and was principal of the Ellicottville Union School three years. In the fall of 1864 he went to Albany to attend the law school, and soon afterwards enlisted at Albany in the 91st N. Y. Regiment and served as a private in the Union army from that time to the close of the war. He then studied law in the office of Scott & Laidlaw and was admitted to the bar in June, 1871. Soon afterwards he went to Gowanda and formed a partnership with the late C. C. Torrance under the firm name of Torrance & Rider. This partnership continued about a year, when it was dissolved and Mr. Rider returned to Ellicottville, where he has since practiced his profession. He was for several years a partner of Commodore P. Vedder. Mr. Rider was elected district attorney of Cattaraugus county in 1883 and re-elected in 1886. In 1892 he was appointed a special agent of the U. S. Treasury Department and sent abroad to examine American consulates. He visited several foreign cities in the course of his official service.

Frank W. Stevens is a native of Leon, where he was born December 16, 1847. His father, Daniel S. Stevens, is of New England descent and purely English-Yankee blood. His mother's maiden name was Catherine E. Hurty, who is a direct descendant of the original Holland settlers of New York. Mr. Stevens spent his boyhood on his father's farm on Elm creek, in Conewango, two miles north of East Randolph. He attended district school until twelve years of age, Randolph Academy about two years, and prepared for college under a private tutor. He spent some months at Harvard Law School while a law student in 1870. He began teaching school at the age of fifteen, teaching his first term in Mansfield in the winter of 1863-64; he also taught in Conewango in the winter of 1865-66. He was assistant teacher in the Chamberlain Institute one year (1866-67), was principal of the Mayville Union School one year (1867-68), and was principal of Friendship Academy, Allegany county, one year (1868-69). He read law with Jenkins & Goodwill at East Randolph and at Harvard Law School, and was admitted to practice at Rochester in September, 1871. He began practice in January, 1872, at East Randolph, in partnership with J. V. Goodwill. This partnership continued until October 1, 1882, when he became a member of the firm of Sheldon, Green, Stevens & Benedict, of Jamestown. This partnership continued until July 1, 1890, when Mr. Stevens withdrew and for a time practiced alone. He is now the senior member of the firm of Stevens & Peterson. He was assistant clerk of the Board of Supervisors of Cattaraugus county in 1871 and was journal clerk of the board in 1873 to 1876 inclusive. He was elected district attorney of Cattaraugus county in 1877 and re-elected in 1880, serving six years. He was elected a member of the School Board in Jamestown in 1891. May 12, 1874, Mr. Stevens was married to Mary B. Miller and lived at East Randolph until November, 1884, when he removed to Jamestown, where he has since resided. They have one child, Margaret K., born February 22, 1883. Since his removal to Jamestown he has devoted himself with great energy to the practice of law and is the counsel for several large corporations.

Hudson H. Parke formerly practiced law at Gowanda, but is now engaged in practice in Buffalo.

Oliver S. Vreeland, the present county judge, is a native of Cuba, Allegany county, and was born September 28, 1842. He is a son of Simon and Jerusha (Butterfield) Vreeland. He grew up on his father's farm and during this time attended the common schools, where he acquired the rudiments of an education. In the fall of 1859 his father removed with his family to Olean and in the spring of 1860 he began attendance at the Olean Academy. This continued until 1862, when the family moved back to Cuba. In the fall of 1862 he entered Rushford Academy and remained there two years, excepting two winters, when he was engaged in teaching district school in the town of Ischua. He next attended Alfred University, where he remained one year, and taught one term of school at Hume, Allegany county. He entered the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor in the fall of 1865 and graduated with the degree of B.A. in 1869. In July, 1869, he began the study of law with E. D. Lovelidge, of Cuba, and was admitted to the bar in June, 1872. He located in Salamanca and formed a partnership with Hudson Ansley in 1872, which partnership continued until 1879. Judge Vreeland was president of the village of Salamanca in 1878 and 1880 and represented his town on the Board of Supervisors from 1882 to 1886. In 1887 he was elected to the office of county judge, which office he still holds. In 1888 the New York Assembly appointed a special committee to investigate the condition of the Indians of the State, of which committee J. S. Whipple, then member of Assembly, was chairman. Judge Vreeland was appointed counsel to the committee and accompanied it in its investigations of the condition of the various Indian tribes of the State. He had personal charge of the examination of witnesses and bestowed very careful attention upon the subject involved in the investigation. The committee investigated the history of the various Indian tribes, the origin and condition of their titles to the reservations which they occupy in this State, and various transfers of Indian titles to the whites. An exhaustive report was prepared, embracing many rare and important documents relating to the history of the Indian tribes, various treaties between the Indians and the State and National governments, and contracts and agreements with the Indians and various land companies. The result of this investigation, embodied in a "Report on the Indian Problem," is of great importance to persons interested in Indian titles, and in aiding to elucidate various questions concerning the disposition of the Indian tribes and their possessions in this State. In conjunction with Mr. Whipple, at whose suggestion the committee was appointed, Judge Vreeland was enabled to render the public a valuable service by settling some questions which had hitherto been seriously controverted. September 15, 1869, he was married to Anna M. Guilford. He is now engaged in general law practice in the village of Salamanca.

E. M. Sanger practiced at Gowanda a short time a few years ago and thence went to Buffalo, where he remained some time. He then went to New York, where he remained until the winter of 1892, when he removed to Mexico, and it is understood that he is there now.

"A Congress to be"

W. S. Freeland

Winfield S. Thrasher is a native of Cornish, N. H., and was born May 5, 1847. He is a son of Samuel P. and Ann (Haven) Thrasher. His father died in 1871; his mother is still living with him at Dayton. Mr. Thrasher received his education in the common schools in New Hampshire and at Kimball Union Academy at Meriden, N. H. He taught district schools winters in New Hampshire, beginning at the age of eighteen years, and after he came to Dayton he taught three years there; he came to Dayton in this county in the spring of 1868 and at once entered the office of Norman M. Allen and began the study of law. He was admitted to practice at Buffalo in June, 1872, and immediately formed a partnership with Mr. Allen at Dayton, which continued until the spring of 1886, including in the firm for about four years James E. Bixby. After 1886 the firm of Thrasher & Bixby continued until about 1890, when Mr. Thrasher formed a partnership with Irving R. Leonard at Gowanda, under the firm name of Thrasher & Leonard, which still continues, Mr. Thrasher residing at Dayton and Mr. Leonard at Gowanda. In 1869 Mr. Thrasher married Mary A. F. Allen, daughter of Norman M. Allen, of Dayton, whose sketch appears on a preceding page. Alice, his oldest daughter, is the wife of James E. Bixby, of Dayton.

Lewis J. Murphy is a son of John L. Murphy, a prominent citizen of Ashford, and was born in that town on November 29, 1850. He attended the common schools of his native town until sixteen years of age, when he became a student at Griffith Institute, Springville, N. Y., where he graduated. While attending this institution he taught district schools during the winter terms. In 1870 he began the study of law in the office of the late C. C. Severance, a prominent lawyer of Springville, and afterwards went to the Albany Law School, where he graduated in 1873 with the highest honors of his class. He began the practice of law in Salamanca in 1875 and remained there two or three years, when he removed to Bolivar, Allegany county, and formed a partnership with Mr. Curtis, who had been in practice in that town several years. For some time after Mr. Murphy located in Bolivar that part of Allegany county was a prosperous oil-producing section. He gave this business some attention in addition to his law practice, and during the last two or three years has been engaged in business in West Virginia and Ohio dealing in oil and real estate.

Mordecai E. Matteson is a native of Dayton, N. Y., and was born in 1841. He began life on a farm. After some years he sold his Dayton farm and engaged in mercantile business at Cattaraugus about two years. He then sold his business and removed to Randolph and established himself in a general store. He continued this business a few years, when he sold out and began reading law with Weeden & Matteson, of Randolph, and was admitted to the bar in 1873. He began practice at Randolph, but soon removed to Cherry Creek, N. Y., where he practiced several years. He then removed to Jamestown, where he continued to practice about three years, when he sold his library and again embarked in mercantile business, in which he is still engaged. He is a brother of Elias L. Matteson, of Randolph, whose sketch appears on page 369.

Charles Z. Lincoln is the youngest child of Pratt and Harriet (Whitcomb) Lincoln, and was born in Grafton, Vt., August 5, 1848. His mother died when he was four years old and his father when he was eight. In September, 1856, immediately after the death of his father, he, with two sisters and a brother, came to East Otto, where they found a home with Lucius L. Lincoln, his father's brother. He lived there until February, 1861, when he returned to Vermont and lived with his oldest brother, George P. Lincoln, now of East Otto. In July, 1863, he returned to East Otto and made his home with his sister, Mrs. Addie H. Perkins. He attended the common schools in East Otto and in Vermont, and was a student at Chamberlain Institute, Randolph, a few terms from 1867 to 1869. He taught district schools in Dayton, Little Valley, Kennedy, and East Otto. In March, 1871, he began the study of law with Joseph R. Jewell, then practicing at Little Valley. In October, 1872, he went to Olean and entered the office of Charles S. Cary, where he remained until his admission to the bar on April 10, 1874. August 5, 1874, he opened an office in Little Valley, where he has since practiced his profession. November 12, 1874, he was married to Lusette, daughter of William Bonsteel, of East Otto. In November, 1877, he formed a partnership with Eugene A. Nash, under the name of Nash & Lincoln, which continued eight years. Since January 1, 1886, he has practiced alone. He has been president, trustee, and attorney of the village of Little Valley and was for six years a member of the Board of Education. He was also supervisor four years from 1886 to 1889 inclusive.

James H. Waring is a son of John and Catherine Waring and was born in the town of Farmersville on February 3, 1848. He was educated in the common schools and at Ten Broeck Free Academy, where he graduated in June, 1870. He studied law in Michigan University, with Scott, Laidlaw & McVey at Ellicottville, and with the late Judge Samuel S. Spring at Franklinville. He was admitted to the bar in June, 1875. He soon afterwards opened an office in Franklinville, where he practiced until October, 1884, when he removed to Olean and became a partner with David H. Bolles under the firm name of Bolles & Waring, which has since continued. In 1876 he was married to Agnes Steele, of Franklinville. He was elected to the office of district attorney of Cattaraugus county in the year 1889 and re-elected in 1892.

Zenas M. Swift was engaged in practice at Limestone several years prior to 1880. About that time he removed to Buffalo, where he continued in practice until about 1883, when he died.

William R. Pindar was born at Hornellsville, N. Y., June 16, 1844, and is a son of the Rev. William E. and Maria (Rice) Pindar. His father was a Methodist minister, and like others of his order had no permanent abiding place. Mr. Pindar received an academic education. He went to Ellicottville in 1867. He was engaged in the clerk's office at Little Valley in 1869. In 1870 he was appointed clerk of the Surrogate's Court during the incumbency of William Manley, surrogate. While there, in June, 1875, he was admitted to the bar. He opened an office in Ellicottville soon afterwards, where he practiced his profession until 1882. He then moved to Salamanca and formed a partnership with John J. Inman. This partnership continued until 1884. Since that time Mr. Pindar has conducted his law business alone. In 1875 he was married to Mary L., daughter of Marsena Brooks, of Ellicottville. Mr. Pindar is now living in the village of Salamanca. His mother was a sister of Addison G. Rice.

Alfred Spring is a son of the late Judge Samuel S. Spring, and was born at Franklinville on February 19, 1851. He received his education at the Ten Broeck Free Academy, where he graduated in June, 1870, in the same class with James H. Waring, now district attorney of the county. He read law in his father's office and was admitted to the bar in October, 1875. In 1876 he was elected supervisor of his town, and in 1879 was elected surrogate of the county and re-elected in 1885, serving in all twelve years. May 8, 1877, he was married to Anna A., daughter of Dana O. Tarbell, of Farmersville. For several years he has been in partnership with his brother, George E. Spring, in the practice of law at Franklinville. During his twelve years' service as surrogate the business of the office largely increased and became so extensive as to require nearly all his time. Many important and complicated controversies were tried in the Surrogate's Court during his term, involving large amounts of property and intricate and novel questions of law. Mr. Spring has always taken an active interest in local affairs and has had several years' experience on the Board of Trustees of the village of Franklinville.

Thomas Storrs was born in Franklinville, January 29, 1864. He began life for himself at the age of eighteen years, and was for a time a book canvasser and lecturer and merchant in turn, using the funds thus earned to defray his expenses while he was pursuing his studies. He entered the law office of his uncle, Alexander Storrs, at Hinsdale, as a student. After the usual course of study he was admitted to the bar in June, 1876, and immediately thereafter began to practice in Hinsdale. He remained in that town until 1879 and then formed a partnership with the late Enos C. Brooks, of Olean, and removed to that town, where he now resides. This partnership continued until 1882, when it was dissolved, Mr. Storrs opening an office alone in Olean. In May, 1889, he was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of the United States. In October, 1881, Mr. Storrs was married to Fannie B. Temple, daughter of E. M. Temple, of Cooperstown, N. Y. Mr. Storrs is descended from one of the oldest English families, who trace their genealogy back to the time of William the Conqueror.

Carey D. Davie, the present surrogate, is a son of William and Angenette (Montrose) Davie and was born in Bolivar, N. Y., March 4, 1850. At the age of eighteen he began trying causes in justice's court, quite often with his father, Benjamin Mosher, as an opponent. He began studying law with his father and continued this study in connection with his practice several years before concluding to seek admission as an attorney in courts of record. In 1873 he began a clerkship with Congdon & Congdon at Randolph. His studies were pursued at his home in Leon. He was admitted to the bar in 1876. He remained in Leon until 1880, when he removed to Little Valley. He there entered the employ of his brother, Gilbert L. Mosher, then sheriff, and was deputy sheriff about three years and had charge of the jail. In April, 1865, he was married to Mercy A. Ross, daughter of Ahiman Ross, of Leon. Mr. Mosher is now engaged in general practice at Little Valley.

Charles P. Moulton, son of George and Egline (Washburn) Moulton, was born at Bridgewater, Vt., October 10, 1854. His father died when he was two years of age and when he was five years old his mother moved to Jamestown, and while living there she was married to Judge D. H. Bolles. She was a sister of the late Charles P. Washburn, of Ellicottville. When Mr. Bolles moved to Ellicottville Mr. Moulton went with the family, and there attended the common schools and afterwards for a time was a student at Perry Academy. He left school at quite an early age and was employed as a clerk in a hardware store. About 1872 he entered the office of Judge Bolles at Olean and began the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in April, 1876. Afterwards he became a member of the firm of Bolles & Moulton, which continued until 1883. After that time he practiced alone until about 1889, when he formed a partnership with Horace A. L. Beardsley. In 1876 Mr. Moulton married Gertrude Beardsley, daughter of Rev. Charles E. Beardsley, late of Olean and at one time a member of our bar.

For some time prior to June, 1872, he was a clerk in the Pension Office at Washington, and while there was graduated from the Law Department of Columbian College at Washington. He afterwards studied law in the office of the late Judge Samuel S. Spring in Franklinville and was admitted to the bar in October, 1876. Shortly thereafter he formed a partnership with Alfred Spring, under the name of Spring & Van Aernam, which continued until January 1, 1880, when Mr. Spring assumed the duties of the office of surrogate. Since that time Mr. Van Aernam has practiced alone.

Myron A. Dodge was a native of Troy, Bradford county, Pa., where he was born December 15, 1847, and was the son of a Freewill Baptist minister. In addition to the advantages enjoyed at the common schools he received an academic education at Pike Seminary, Wyoming county. He was married December 25, 1868, to Myra A. Smith, of Yorkshire. He began business as an insurance agent in Great Valley. In 1872 he moved to Olean and engaged with H. W. Eaton in the same business, following it two years. He then entered the law office of J. B. Finch at Olean and was admitted to the bar in 1876. From that time until his death he practiced law in Olean. At the time of his death he was in partnership with C. S. Dwinnells, who studied law in his office. They were also pension attorneys and Mr. Dodge was a justice of the piece. He died March 5, 1881. On the 7th of March a meeting of the members of the bar of Olean was held at the office of Cary, Jewell & Rumsey, at which suitable memorial resolutions were adopted. In these resolutions the lawyers of Olean speak of Mr. Dodge as follows: "Our relations, both social and professional, having brought us into constant and active contact with him as friend and neighbor, as citizen, and as a lawyer, qualify us to testify with peculiar propriety and emphasis to the fine, generous, and manly qualities that marked and ennobled his daily life, his quick and tender sympathy, his warm and faithful friendship, his gentleness and sense of honor, his zealous discharge of duty, his frank, free, and genial manner, and the sterling manhood of his nature."

Frank H. Robinson is a native of Cuba, N. Y., where he was born May 23, 1855, and is a son of Charles P. and Elizabeth Robinson. He attended the common schools, where he received the principal part of his education. He read law with Champlain, Armstrong & Russell at Cuba and with Sickles & Miller at Albany, and graduated from the Law Department of Union University in the spring of 1876. He was admitted to the bar in May of that year. He immediately located at Salamanca, but remained there only a short time; he formed a partnership with C. D. Davie and in September, 1876, opened a branch office at Limestone. He remained there until June, 1879, when the oil business began to decline and he went to Steuben county. He practiced law a short time at Hornellsville and then located in Canisteo in January, 1880, forming a partnership with A. M. Burnell, which continued four years. Since that time Mr. Robinson has been in practice alone. In 1886 he was elected district attorney of Steuben county and re-elected in 1889.

In September, 1880, he formed a partnership with James G. Johnson at Salamanca under the firm name of Johnson & Markham, and was associated with him until May, 1886, when he removed to St. Paul, Minn., where he is now engaged in practice.

Frank Rumsey was born at Cattaraugus in the town of New Albion, July 16, 1854. He attended the common schools of his native village and also the Forestville Academy, and taught a district school in New Albion during the winters of 1874-75 and 1875-76. In the early part of the year 1876 he began reading law with Hiram M. Herrick and continued in Mr. Herrick's office until November, 1877, when he became a student in the office of Cary &

Jewell at Olean. He remained with them as a law clerk until June, 1879, when he was admitted to the bar at a General term of the Supreme Court held at Buffalo. Soon after his admission to the bar he became a partner with his former tutors under the firm name of Cary, Jewell & Rumsey. This partnership continued until the spring of 1883, when J. R. Jewell retired from the firm, leaving it Cary & Rumsey, which continued until 1890, when it was changed to Cary, Rumsey & Hastings by the admission of Allen J. Hastings, who had been connected with the firm several years as a student and clerk. Mr. Rumsey moved to Buffalo in June, 1889, and opened an office alone, although retaining his connection with the Olean firm. He continued in practice at Buffalo until November 1, 1891, when he was appointed general solicitor of the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railroad Company. On the 1st of October, 1879, Mr. Rumsey was married to Emma F. Cary, daughter of Charles S. Cary, of Olean. In 1885 he was the Democratic candidate for the office of surrogate of Cattaraugus county.

At fifteen years of age he commenced a two years' attendance at Chamberlain Institute, Randolph, and Griffith Institute, Springville, N. Y. At seventeen years of age he began to teach school. At the age of nineteen he entered Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, as a preparatory student, succeeding to the classical department a year later. He was graduated from that institution in August, 1876, receiving the degree of B.A. Shortly after graduating he entered the law office of Cook & Lockwood at Jamestown, N. Y., to begin the study of law. He afterwards continued his studies with Allen & Thrasher at Dayton and was admitted to the bar at Buffalo, June 10, 1879. He began the practice of law at Gowanda in May, 1880. One year later he removed to Dayton, where he has since resided. He now has an office in Buffalo and does business in that city. He held the office of justice of the peace at Dayton four years. In 1888 Mr. Cook was elected supreme vice-president of the Equitable Aid Union, an insurance order, and in 1889 was elected treasurer of the same organization and re-elected in 1890 and again in 1892.

Fred L. Eaton, son of Fred R. and Florence Eaton, was born at Olean, July 16, 1857, and has resided there since that time. He received his education in the Olean schools. After leaving school he assisted his father for a time in his jewelry store in Olean. He spent the summer of 1876 in Skaneateles, N. Y., working on the farm of Willis Platt. In the fall of the same year Mr. Eaton returned to Olean and the next July entered upon the study of law in the office of George H. Phelps. During the fall and winter following he taught school at Clermont, Pa. In October, 1880, he was admitted to the bar at Rochester. He immediately afterwards formed a partnership with Mr. Phelps under the firm name of Phelps & Eaton; this partnership continued about one year, when Mr. Eaton withdrew and has since that time practiced his profession alone. In 1884 he was appointed village clerk and attorney of the village of Olean, and has been re-appointed to that position eight consecutive terms of one year each. In 1887 he was elected justice of the peace of Olean. In 1889 the Youth's Companion, of Boston, Mass., offered three chief prizes of $1,000 each for the best short story of adventure for boys and for girls respectively. Mr. Eaton contributed a story entitled "Way Out en the Prairie Kentry" to the class of best stories for girls and was awarded therefor the prize of $1,000. This story was the first literary production ever offered by Mr. Eaton for publication. Since its appearance he has written and published a small amount of other matter. In December, 1881, Mr. Eaton was married to Elizabeth Brett, of Olean.

William W. Waring is a native of Farmersville. He was born January 25, 1854, and is a son of John Waring, who was a native of Connecticut. His mother, Catherine (Hogg) Waring, was a native of Scotland. He attended the common schools of his neighborhood and afterwards Ten Broeck Free Academy in Franklinville, graduating from that institution in June, 1873. He was engaged in teaching and working on a farm until October, 1876, when he entered the office of his brother, James H. Waring, of Franklinville, to begin the study of law. After the usual course of study he was admitted to the bar in April, 1880. He practiced his profession at Arcade, N. Y., from July, 1881, to July, 1882. Since then he has practiced in Franklinville. In November, 1884, he married Lucy Flagg Thayer, at Clarendon Springs, Vt.

Fred J. Blackmon is a native of Little Valley, where he was born January 12, 1855, and is a son of Lyman and Julia Blackmon, who afterwards removed to Farmersville. He received his education in the common schools and in Ten Broeck Free Academy, Franklinville. He began the study of law with James D. McVey, then surrogate, at Franklinville, in February, 1877, and continued with him until his death in October, 1879, after which he entered the office of Alfred Spring at Franklinville, where he remained until he was admitted to practice in April, 1880. He at once began practice alone at Franklinville and continued there until September, 1883, when he formed a partnership with C. C. Torrance at Gowanda under the firm name of Torrance & Blackmon, which continued until the death of Mr. Torrance in 1886. In September, 1891, he formed a partnership with George & H. C. Wodsworth, of Buffalo, where he is still engaged in practice. Mr. Blackmon resides in Gowanda, Erie county, where he also has an office. He has represented the town of Collins several years on the Board of Supervisors of Erie county.

Vedder C. Reynolds is a native of Ellicottville and was born August 5, 1856. He is a son of Elisha and Maria (Vedder) Reynolds. He obtained his education in the common schools at West Valley, in this county, at Griffith Institute, Springville, N. Y., and at Ten Broeck Free Academy, Franklinville, and taught thirteen terms in the district schools in this county. He studied law with Nash & Lincoln at Little Valley and with Henderson & Wentworth at Randolph; he was admitted to the bar April 10, 1880, and was admitted to practice in the United States Court on September 25, 1885. He began practice at South Dayton and continued there until 1883; he then removed to Buffalo and became general manager of an insurance company, which place he held one year. He then removed to Salamanca, where he now resides, and has since been engaged in a general law practice. While at South Dayton he was in partnership about a year with E. A. Hayes, now of Buffalo; he was also in partnership about two years with T. H. Dowd, of Salamanca.

John J. Inman was born June 7, 1858, at Cottage, in the town of Dayton, and is a son of Harvey and Betsey Inman, both of whom are of Scotch descent. He attended the common schools and also took a course at Forestville Academy. He engaged in teaching in Cattaraugus and Chautauqua counties several terms. He read law a while with W. G. Laidlaw at Ellicottville, and then went to Ionia, Mich., and read law with William O. Webster; he was admitted to the bar in that State on June 7, 1878. He came to Salamanca and was admitted to practice in this State on June 11, 1880, and has resided and practiced law in Salamanca since that time. From 1882 to 1884 he was in partnership with William R. Pindar, the firm being Pindar & Inman. In May, 1886, he formed a partnership with George W. Cole, which continued until December 21, 1891. Since that time he has practiced law alone. He served as police justice of the village of Salamanca in 1881-82 and was also a justice of the peace of the town one term, beginning in 1881. He was a member of the Board of Education of the Salamanca Union School six years, beginning in 1886, and was president of the board the last year of the term. In June, 1882, he married Carrie D., daughter of Joseph Frank, of Great Valley.

Joseph E. Hazard was born in Napoli in 1855. He spent his youth attending the district school and at work on the farm. When he was seventeen years of age he began teaching district schools in the winter seasons, and was thereby enabled to defray his expenses while a student at Chamberlain Institute. He graduated with honor from that institution in 1876, and has been president of its Alumni Association. He was admitted to the bar in 1880 and to the Supreme Court of the United States in 1885. He is engaged in practice in the village of Randolph. He has filled the office of justice of the peace since 1878; he also held the position of superintendent of Indian schools on the Allegany and Cattaraugus reservations six years, and while holding that office he was instrumental in introducing many reforms in the management of these schools. He also succeeded in raising the standard of qualification of his teachers so that they became the compeers of the teachers of our public schools. In 1880 he was acting agent in place of the State Indian agent, who was ill, and in whose office he was a clerk. He held this position until a successor to the agent was appointed by the president. He took an active interest in the organization of the Union School in the village of Randolph and is a member of the Board of Education. He has taken an active interest in other local organizations in which the village of Randolph is interested. A short time ago he compiled and issued a work entitled "Hazard's New York State Constable's Guide." In 1892 he represented the town of Randolph on the Board of Supervisors and was re-elected supervisor in the spring of 1893.

Herbert W. Allen, son of Henry F. Allen, was admitted to the bar about 1880 and was in partnership a short time with William Woodbury at Gowanda. He afterwards removed to Silver Creek, N. Y., where he now resides and is engaged in manufacturing flouring-mill machinery.

A. N. Lowry was in practice a short time at Pine Valley or South Dayton about 1880. It is said that he came from Jamestown and returned thither, but no definite information has been obtained concerning his history.

William Vernon Smith was born at Yorkshire Center on August 6, 1857. He was raised on a farm and was educated in the common schools and in Ten Broeck Free Academy. He taught common schools several terms. In the spring of 1878 he entered the law office of Henry M. Hill, then of Arcade, N. Y., and began the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in June, 1881. He at once opened an office in Olean, where he has since practiced his profession. He is now the senior member of the firm of W. V. & J. E. Smith. November 16, 1881, Mr. Smith married Dora E. Allen, daughter of Andrew L. Allen, of Machias.

Myron B. Field was admitted to the bar about 1881, and since his admission has been engaged in practice at Machias, where he now resides. He is an acting magistrate of that town.

Henry R. Curtis was born in Machias, June 12, 1852, and is the son of Rensselaer Curtis, who is said to be the oldest citizen in Franklinville, having been born in that town February 24, 1818. Mr. Curtis was educated in the common schools and at Ten Broeck Academy at Franklinville. After completing his academic course he entered the law office of Vedder & Rider at Ellicottville, where he pursued the study of law for the prescribed period, and was admitted to the bar at Buffalo in June, 1881. He at once began the practice of his profession at Franklinville, where he has since resided. He is now a justice of the peace.

Burdett A. Rich is a son of Charles J. and Lucy A. Rich and was born at Cattaraugus, October 24, 1854. He was educated at Chamberlain Institute, Randolph, and Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn. He studied law with S. L. Warner, of Middletown, Conn., and was admitted to the bar in that State in 1880. In 1881 he was admitted to the bar in this State and began the practice of law at Cattaraugus. He was engaged a part of the year 1884 at Washington, D. C., assisting in the preparation of the Lawyers' Co-Operative Publishing Company's edition of the reports of the Supreme Court of the United States. In 1886 he formed a partnership with Eugene A. Nash, and the firm afterwards became Nash, Rich & Willson by the admission of John M. Willson, who had been a student in their office. Since 1886 he has been constantly engaged at Rochester, N. Y., with the Lawyers' Co-Operative Publishing Company. He prepared for that company a digest of the reports of the United States Supreme Court and is now editor-in-chief of that company's current series of the general digest of American and English decisions and also of the lawyers' annotated reports. He now resides at Rochester, but retains his connection with the law firm at Cattaraugus.

Stanley N. Wheaton is a native of Little Valley, where he was born December 1, 1857. His parents are Norman and Harriet (Carver) Wheaton. He attended the common schools of his native town, and in 1875 entered the Forestville Free Academy and was also a student in Ten Broeck Free Academy at Franklinville in 1876. He taught in the common schools of Cattaraugus county seven terms and one term in Chautauqua county. In 1877 he began the study of law in the office of Nash & Lincoln in Little Valley. His legal studies were continued in the office of J. A. Parsons at Forestville and concluded with his former tutors at Little Valley, and he was admitted to the bar in 1881. He was deputy county clerk from 1880 to 1883 and was engaged in the county clerk's office in other capacities during the terms of succeeding clerks. In 1887 he was elected school commissioner of the Second District of Cattaraugus county and re-elected in 1890. He has for several years held the office of justice of the peace of Little Valley and is now a trustee of the village. Mr. Wheaton married Nellie Fuller, daughter of Cyrus A. Fuller, of Little Valley.

William E. Gould is a native of Hinsdale, where he was born January 22, 1849, and is a son of John H. and Permelia (Wood) Gould. He received his education in the common schools and Hinsdale Academy, and studied law with the late Alexander Storrs. He was admitted to the bar in June, 1881. He has served three full terms as justice of the peace of his town and was supervisor in 1882. In connection with his law business Mr. Gould is also engaged as a grocer and land surveyor. In February, 1876, he married Julia A. Darling, of Franklinville.

James Spencer Whipple was born October 1, 1852, at Steamburg in this county. His father enlisted in the 154th N. Y. Vols. in the war of the Rebellion and died in Andersonville prison. He left a large family who were obliged to depend upon their own resources. James S. was principally educated in the common schools at Salamanca. He began the study of law in 1877 with Seymour & Davie at Salamanca and concluded his studies with James G. Johnson. He was admitted to the bar in June, 1881, and soon afterwards began the practice of law in Salamanca. For five years he was in partnership with Perry B. Coxe, who afterwards removed to the city of New York. In 1879 he was elected one of the coroners of the county of Cattaraugus, but he resigned this office when he began the practice of law. He was elected justice of the peace of Salamanca in 1879 and held the office four years, and during that time was elected police justice of the village of Salamanca, which office he held three years. In 1884 he was the alternate delegate to the Republican national convention. In the fall of 1887 he was elected member of Assembly from the Second District of Cattaraugus county and was re-elected in 1888, 1889, and 1890. While in the Legislature he was chairman of the Committee on Claims, Insurance, and General Laws, and during his entire service was a member of the Judiciary Committee and other important committees. He took an active interest in the investigation of the Indian question. At his suggestion the Assembly of 1888 appointed a committee charged with the duty of investigating the condition of the Indians throughout the State of New York, of which committee Mr. Whipple was made chairman. This committee pursued its investigations during the summer of 1888 and made an important report to the Legislature of 1889, which attracted wide attention and is a valuable and important contribution to the discussion of the Indian problem of the State. In addition to his interest in the Indian question Mr. Whipple took active participation in general legislation.

Mr. Whipple learned the steam-fitter's trade, and when he had arrived at the age of about twenty-one years he went to work in the Erie railroad yards at Salamanca village as a common switchman. While there he learned the business of card dispatcher, and soon afterwards, a vacancy occurring, he was appointed to this place. From this position he was appointed clerk in the railroad office and was afterwards employed in the ticket office, and was subsequently appointed ticket agent at Salamanca. During all this time he was pursuing his legal studies. He kept his text books in the office and read during his leisure moments. In the spring of 1892 he was elected supervisor of the town of Salamanca, and, at the following annual meeting of the Board of Supervisors, was made its chairman. He was re-elected supervisor in 1893. In the spring of 1892 he was appointed by Judge Wallace of the United States Circuit Court to the office of United States commissioner, which office he resigned after holding it less than a year. Mr. Whipple is now engaged in the practice of his profession at Salamanca.

Edgar N. Yates is a native of Hinsdale and was born February 11, 1856. He obtained his education in the common schools of Hinsdale; he entered the county clerk's office during the term of Arthur H. Howe in 1877 and in 1880 was appointed special deputy clerk by Marion J. Rich, and under Charles W. Terry, who was elected in 1882, Mr. Yates was deputy clerk. He was in the clerk's office continuously from 1877 until December 31, 1885. He read law with Samuel Dunham in Little Valley and was admitted to the bar in 1882. He practiced law in Olean from January 1, 1886, to January 1, 1889, with J. Arthur Corbin, under the firm name of Corbin & Yates. January 1, 1889, he was again appointed deputy county clerk by Henry S. Merrill and remained in that position until 1891, when he resigned and entered the employ of the National Transit Company in New York. He married Carrie Thomas, of Little Valley.

Edward A. Gould, a son of John H. Gould, of Hinsdale, was born in that town February 9, 1853. He received his education in the common schools of his native village and also under the instruction of his father. Leaving school he gave his attention for a time to civil engineering and engaged in railroad building in western New York. While serving as a justice of the peace in Hinsdale he determined to study law. He left Hinsdale and became a book-keeper at the First National Bank of Olean, which position he occupied ten years. During this time he pursued his legal studies and was admitted to the bar in 1882. He did not practice in this county. He went to Middletown, N. Y., in 1889, and after practicing his profession there a short time entered the First National Bank of that place as a book-keeper and remained there until a short time before his death, which occurred April 12, 1891. He married Parthenia Gile, of Hinsdale.

Oliver D. Sprague is a son of Delos W. Sprague, of Perrysburg, and was born at Versailles, in that town, January 20, 1859. He attended the district school of the neighborhood until 1867, when the family removed to the village of Perrysburg, where he attended school until 1872. He then entered the Union School and Academy at Westfield, N. Y., and remained a student at that institution several years, with the exception of one term at Forestville Academy in the spring of 1878. In the fall of 1878 he began the study of law with Allen & Thrasher at Dayton and was admitted to the bar June 16, 1882. He immediately began practice at Perrysburg, where he continued nearly two years. He then moved to Gowanda and formed a partnership with Irving R. Leonard, which continued about a year. He then engaged in the insurance business with George I. Lincoln. Some time afterwards Mr. Lincoln withdrew from the firm and Mr. Sprague formed a partnership with A. M. De Long. This partnership continued about two years, when Mr. Sprague sold his interest to Mr. De Long. While living in Gowanda Mr. Sprague was twice elected trustee of the village. He is now living on a farm in the town of Perrysburg and is not engaged in active practice.

Willis D. Parker, son of Leroy and Fidelia (Vinton) Parker, was born in Hinsdale, February 15, 1858, and received an academic education at Ten Broeck Free Academy at Franklinville. Horace A. L. Beardsley is a descendant of one of the old Puritan families who settled in Massachusetts in 1635, and also of one of the old families of United Empire Loyalists in Canada. He was born at Oakville, Ontario, September 5, 1863, where he received his early education and resided until about 1880, when he removed to Olean for the purpose of pursuing the study of law. He entered the office of Bolles & Moulton and was admitted to the bar at Rochester in October, 1887. Soon afterwards he formed a partnership with Charles P. Moulton under the firm name of Moulton & Beardsley. This partnership has since been dissolved. Mr. Beardsley is now practicing alone at Olean.

William C. Overton is a native of Scranton, Pa., where he was born October 3, 1863, and is a son of Giles B. and Maria W. Overton. He was educated in the common schools and at the Elmira Academy. For three years from 1878 to 1881 he was engaged in the coal and iron business with his father. In 1881 his parents removed to Olean. In 1883 he began the study of law with George H. Phelps at Olean, studying with him two and one-half years, and then went into the office of Corbin & Yates, and was admitted to the bar in June, 1887. He immediately began practicing law at Allegany, where he now resides.

Earle H. Eaton, youngest son of Fred R. Eaton, was born at Olean, October 24, 1865. He graduated from the Olean Union School in 1884, studied law in the office of his brother, Fred L. Eaton, and was admitted to the bar in 1887. He did not engage in practice, but soon after his admission became city editor of the Olean Herald, which position he occupied about two years, and then went to New York city, where he has since been engaged in journalistic work.

Jasper E. Smith is a native of Yorkshire and was born January 22, 1860. He spent his youth on his father's farm and attending school. He began his academic course at Ten Broeck Free Academy and completed a college preparatory course at Dryden Union School, Dryden, Tompkins county, in June, 1880. He then taught common schools a year and entered Hamilton College in September, 1881. During his second year at college he turned aside for a time and occupied the position of teacher in mathematics in Kingston Free Academy at Kingston, N. Y. He returned to college in September, 1883, and graduated in June, 1885, with the degree of A.B. In June, 1888, he received the honorary degree of A.M. In July, after graduating from college, Mr. Smith began the study of law with his brother, W. V. Smith, of Olean, and was admitted to practice in October, 1887. He at once formed a partnership with his brother, which still continues, under the firm name of W. V. & J. E. Smith. May 6, 1891, he married Mary L. Lee, daughter of M. L. Lee, of Olean.

John K. Ward, son of Arunah Ward, was born in Great Valley, November 20, 1859. He attended the common schools and graduated at Chamberlain Institute in 1882. He was principal of the school in Machias village a year (1882-83), and afterwards traveled through the west in the employ of H. H. Warner, of Rochester, as a salesman, for one year. In August, 1884, he became principal of the Randolph Union School, where he remained until March, 1887. He studied law with his father in Ellicottville and was admitted to practice in June, 1887. He immediately commenced the practice of his profession in Ellicottville, where he still resides. He was for a time local attorney for the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg Railroad Company and is now an acting magistrate of the town of Ellicottville. In February, 1893, he was appointed by the surrogate appraiser for the First District of Cattaraugus county under the statute relating to the taxation of collateral inheritances.

John T. Baxter was admitted to practice about 1887, and since that time has been engaged in a general legal business at Olean, where he now resides.

Henry Donnelly, son of Henry and Catherine (Brice) Donnelly, was born in Kendall, Orleans county, March 16, 1861. He was educated in the common schools of his native town, at Brockport State Normal School, and at Albion High School. He engaged in teaching district schools in Orleans and Monroe counties about five years. In 1885 he entered the law office of Calvin J. Church, of Albion, N. Y., and began the study of law. He was also a student in the office of John Cunneen and completed his studies with W. P. L. Stafford, district attorney of Orleans county, at Albion. He was admitted to the bar at Buffalo in June, 1888. In July, 1888, he located in Olean and became a law partner of J. T. Baxter. This firm continued until December, 1889, when it was dissolved, and since that time Mr. Donnelly has practiced his profession alone. He was married March 5, 1888, to Mary Brower.

Anson W. Stone studied law in Salamanca and was admitted to the bar about 1888. He engaged in practice in Salamanca until the spring of 1891, when he removed to Buffalo, where he now resides.

Allen J. Hastings is a native of Olean and was born November 26, 1864. He is a son of Loren S. and Sarah (Jones) Hastings. He was raised on a farm and received his education in the district schools and at the Olean Union Free School and Academy. He graduated from the academy in June, 1885. In September, 1885, he entered the office of Cary & Rumsey and began the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in October, 1888. He continued with Cary & Rumsey as a clerk until January 1, 1890, when he was admitted to the firm and is now engaged in practice in Olean.

John M. Willson is a native of Mansfield, is the son of E. Oscar and Emeline S. (Utley) Willson, and was born April 5, 1863. He spent his youth on his father's farm in Mansfield, attending the district schools in the neighborhood, and also received an academic education and spent some time in teaching district schools. At the age of seventeen he had charge of the graded school in the village of Otto. In 1882, at the opening of the Bank of Cattaraugus, he was appointed its book-keeper and was promoted to the position of teller, remaining in its employ four years. He then determined on the profession of law and in 1886 entered the office of Nash & Rich at Cattaraugus and pursued his studies the usual time. He was admitted to the bar June 10, 1890. Soon afterwards he became a member of the law firm with whom he had studied. While pursuing his law studies he served as a clerk of the courts of Cattaraugus county during a portion of the term of Albert T. Fancher and also of Henry S. Merrill. In 1885 he was married to Belle C. Babcock, of Cattaraugus, daughter of Abner Babcock. Mr. Willson has identified himself with the educational interests of his village and in April, 1891, was appointed examiner for the Cattaraugus Union School by the Regents of the University of the State of New York.

Udolph V. Sage is a native of Rochester, N. Y., and was born May 25, 1856. He is the son of Edwin S. and Mary P. (Nichols) Sage. In 1859 his parents removed to Olean, where he has since resided. He attended the public schools of Olean and graduated from Ten Broeck Free Academy at Franklinville in 1876. He entered the office of the late Enos C. Brooks, of Olean, as a law student, and remained there until Mr. Brooks's death. He afterwards read law with Thomas Storrs and was admitted to practice in June, 1890. He at once opened an office in Olean, where he has since practiced. February 8, 1879, he married Catherine E. Storrs, a sister of Thomas Storrs.

William Cobb is a son of John and Elizabeth (Duncan) Cobb. He was born on the 10th of April, 1870, at Brechin, County Forfar, Scotland. When five years of age his father removed with his family to the United States and they have since resided in this county. Mr. Cobb received his education at the Olean Academy, of which institution he is a graduate. In the fall of 1889 he began the study of law in the office of W. V. & J. E. Smith at Olean, where he remained until he was admitted to the bar in October, 1892, at Rochester. January 1, 1893, he began the practice of law at Olean, where he now resides.

Manley E. King was born in Yorkshire, May 18, 1866, and is a son of Seymour and Ann Eliza (Steele) King. His father is now living on his farm in the northeast part of the town; his mother died when he was five years of age. He attended the district schools of his native town until about fifteen years old, when he entered the graded school at Yorkshire, and afterwards attended school at Sardinia, N. Y., winters, in the meantime working by the month on the farm during the summer. He had some experience in teaching district schools. When he was about nineteen he entered Griffith Institute, Springville, N. Y., as a student, and continued there altogether about three years, teaching district schools a part of the time during that period.

He graduated at this institution and completed a preparatory college course. He began the study of law in the office of Edwin A. Scott, of Springville, N. Y., and pursued his studies with some interruption while occupied in teaching until he was admitted to the bar at the General term in Buffalo in January, 1893. He immediately opened an office at Yorkshire for the practice of law, where he now resides.

Peter B. Tarr was born near Petroleum Center, Venango county, Pa., November 7, 1866, and is a son of George A. W. and Nancy (Benninghoof) Tarr. In 1870 the family removed to Titusville, Pa., where Peter attended the public schools. When he was twenty-one years old he determined to become a New York lawyer. He accordingly came to Olean and began the preparatory course required by the rules of the court and obtained a Regents' certificate. In February, 1890, he entered Columbia Law School in New York and remained there one collegiate year. In February, 1891, he entered the office of Cary, Rumsey & Hastings at Olean, as a student, and completed his legal studies. He was admitted to the bar at Rochester, March 30, 1893. At the first election in the city of Olean, held May 11, 1893, he was elected a justice of the peace. He is now engaged in general practice.

Charles W. Terry, of Randolph, was also admitted March 30, 1893. Mr. Terry is a prominent citizen of the county and has held several important official positions, including county clerk, deputy collector of internal revenue, journal clerk of the Board of Supervisors, supervisor of Randolph, etc. A more complete sketch of his career appears in the history of the town of Randolph. He is not engaged in legal practice.

Justus White* was a brother of Roderick White and came from Springville, N. Y., to Olean. He studied law with Charles S. Cary, and was admitted to the bar about 1858. Afterwards, about 1864 or 1865, he formed a partnership with Mr. Cary, which continued several years, under the name of Cary & White, until Mr. White's death. Mr. White is described as a candid, careful lawyer whose tastes led him to prefer the work of the office rather than the turmoil of court practice. He was greatly respected in Olean and was considered one of her most reliable citizens.

This completes the list of members of our bar as far as I have been able to ascertain their names.

A meeting of members of the bar of Cattaraugus county was held at the court house in Little Valley on the 4th of June, 1877, for the purpose of organizing a County Bar Association. Hon. Allen D. Scott was chosen chairman and E. D. Northrup secretary; Hon. D. H. Bolles, a committee appointed for that purpose, submitted a draft of a proposed constitution, which, on motion of J. R. Jewell, was adopted as the constitution of the association. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, David H. Bolles; vice-president, Norman M. Allen; secretary, Frank W. Stevens; treasurer, Eugene A. Nash. The president appointed the following standing committees: Executive Committee, E. D. Northrup, James D. McVey, J. R. Jewell, E. A. Nash, ex-officio, D. H. Bolles, ex-officio; on Admission, F. W. Stevens, ex-officio, W. G. Laidlaw, W. S. Thrasher; on Legal History and Biography, William Manley, J. M. Congdon, C. Z. Lincoln. An annual meeting of the association was held in June, 1878, but since then no regular meetings have been held. An attempt was made in 1892 to re-organize, but without success.

Five lawyers—Asa Hazen, Zephaniah Z. Caswell, David Higgins, Jr., Alvan Burr, and Daniel Cruger—attended the first court held at the house of William Baker in the village of Hamilton (now Olean), July 1, 1817, only one of whom, Mr. Hazen, became a resident of the county. The number of lawyers has increased to eighty-four, seventy-five of whom are in active practice. The following are the resident members of the Cattaraugus county bar, June, 1893, with their business addresses:

Allegany.—William C. Overton. Cattaraugus.—Eugene A. Nash, John M. Willson, Daniel E. Powell. Dayton.—Norman M. Allen, Winfield S. Thrasher, James E. Bixby, Elijah Cook. Delevan.—Manley E. King. East Randolph.—Johnson V. Goodwill, Martin V. Benson. Ellicottville.—William G. Laidlaw, Edwin D. Northrup, George M. Rider, Arunah Ward, John K. Ward, William Manley, Samuel R. McNair, James O. Clark, Commodore P. Vedder. Franklinville.—Alfred Spring, George E. Spring, Charles D. Van Aernam, Henry R. Curtis, William W. Waring. Gowanda.—Joseph M. Congdon, William Woodbury, Irving R. Leonard. Hinsdale.—William E. Gould, Edgar N. Yates. Limestone.—W. Hutchison Gibbs. Little Valley.—John F. Mosher, Stanley N. Wheaton, Charles Z. Lincoln. Machias.—Myron B. Field. Olean.—David H. Bolles, Charles S. Cary, Joseph R. Jewell, Marcus B. Jewell, Frederick W. Kruse, Ernest F. Kruse, James H. Waring, Charles S. Dwinnells, William V. Smith, Jasper E. Smith, Linus T. Mudge, Udolph V. Sage, Willis D. Parker, Thomas Storrs, Charles P. Moulton, Horace A. L. Beardsley, Allen J. Hastings, John T. Baxter, Henry Donnelly, William Cobb, Fred L. Eaton, William H. Nourse, Peter B. Tarr. Otto.—Dan B. Allen, George Straight. Perrysburg.—Oliver D. Sprague. Randolph.—Joseph E. Weeden, William H. Henderson, Alexander Wentworth, Rodney R. Crowley, Elias L. Matteson, Benjamin F. Congdon, Dewitt C. Reilly, Daniel A. Sackrider, Joseph E. Hazard, Merrill T. Jenkins, Charles W. Terry. Salamanca.—Oliver S. Vreeland, Hudson Ansley, James G. Johnson, Carey D. Davie, John J. Inman, Vedder C. Reynolds, George W. Cole, William R. Pindar, Thomas H. Dowd, James S. Whipple, Edward B. Vreeland. South Dayton.—W. Darwin Phelps.

From small beginnings the county has grown in population, resources, and material strength until it ranks with the best of the agricultural counties of the State. The bar has kept pace with the general prosperity, and has made itself felt in all departments of the county government and in all the interests which affect the welfare of our people. The legal profession has not only been patriotic at home, but it has shown its patriotism in the broader field of national affairs. The large number of lawyers who were engaged in the service of their country during the late war testifies to the patriotism of the profession and illustrates the broad public spirit which has always animated our bar.

Ralph Waldo Emerson wrote an essay on "Uses of Great Men," in which he says that "the search after the great man is the dream of youth and the most serious occupation of manhood." In my search after the beginnings of our history and in the study of its development I have not had in view the discovery of greatness, but rather the discovery of those persons who are part and parcel of the very warp and woof of our history. But greatness has been thrust upon my attention, for the men who planted and nurtured the institutions of our county were indeed great: great in native ability and acquired powers; great in perseverance and industry; great in the capacity for self-government; great in their power to conquer adverse circumstances; and great in their conception of the breadth, the strength, and the growth of our institutions. As I have patiently turned the pages of our early public records, yellow and dusty with age, I have seemed to meet face to face the men whose work is there spread out before us, and I could almost talk with them as I read the history they made.

This chapter embraces the first seventy-six years of our separate judicial history, from 1817 to 1893, and they have been years of rapid growth and wonderful development. Our population has grown from 458 in 1810 to 61,774 in 1892. The assessed valuation of taxable property has increased from $1,786,217 in 1820 to $23,105,992.09 in 1892. This great increase in power and material strength has been stimulated by the enterprise and broad public spirit of the bar. In every community the lawyers have been consulted and their opinions sought in every public movement, and they have thus been able to exert a powerful influence in shaping public policy. Their conservatism as a profession is proverbial, yet they have shown themselves sufficiently radical on every question involving the public good. The people of the county have no occasion to apologize for the bench and bar, but on the contrary should feel a pride in our history as they read the annals of the courts and the biographies of the men who have honored the county by their ability, their learning, and their patriotism.

David Dudley Field, himself the Nestor of the American bar, said to a class of law students in Buffalo a few years ago: "If I were to say all that I think of our profession I should say nothing else in the course of this address. They who are best acquainted with the history of civilization, or have studied most the sources of government, know very well that no truer measure can be found in either than the influence which the legal profession exerts or the respect which it receives." Readers of this chapter will willingly concede that the bar has been a great power in the history and growth of our county. This is manifest from the number and character of the men engaged in legal practice, the official positions held by them, and the inevitable influence exerted by a class of men who deal with every characteristic of human nature and who learn the personal and business secrets of the active members of the community. A review of the bench and bar of our county from the records here given may well inspire the pride of our people. This part of the machinery of our local government has done its work with only the welfare of the people in view; and the capacity and beneficence of free institutions are here illustrated in a manner to justify the hope of our fathers that the foundations of good government which they so carefully laid will be enduring.

An eminent jurist says that "every lawyer owes something to his profession." He certainly owes it his loyalty and faithfulness, his industry and the best use of his talents, his integrity, his highest energy, and a sincere determination to make it the noblest profession among men. The opportunities for growth, fortune, fame, and usefulness are almost immeasurable if the law shall receive from her devotees the service which this "jealous mistress" absolutely requires. We need only consider the lawyers at our bar who have given their lives to the profession to be convinced that the law is a faithful friend, but one who will suffer no division of interest or affection.

By the preparation of this chapter I have endeavored to discharge, in some measure, my obligations to the profession of which I am proud to be a member; and the work is submitted to the public with the hope that not only the legal profession, but the mass of our people, may be led to appreciate more fully the meaning of our history and the value of our institutions.

CHAPTER XVIII.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF ALLEGANY.

A LLEGANY, the largest town in area in Cattaraugus county, contains the whole of townships one and two, in the fifth range, of the Holland Company's survey, and has an area of 44,989 acres. It is bounded on the north by Humphrey, on the east by Hinsdale and Olean, on the south by the State of Pennsylvania, and on the west by Carrolton and Great Valley. The town is noted for its high hills and its broad, deep, and fertile lowlands. The hills tower abruptly to the height of from 700 to 900 feet above the valleys. The principal water-course is the Allegheny river, which flows nearly west through the central part of the town and receives the waters of Five Mile and Nine Mile runs on the north and Four Mile, Two Mile, and Trout runs on the south. The soil is clayey loam on the highlands and gravelly loam in the valleys. The valleys were originally covered with a magnificent growth of towering pines and the hills with deciduous trees, hemlock, and a few pines.

A notable freak of nature is a peculiar upheaval of the conglomerate sand rock in the southeast part of the town known as Rock City. The location is within the oil belt, and on the height of land between the Allegheny river and Tuna creek. The rocks have been thrown up above the general surface from thirty to fifty feet, and masses of rock stand out in bold relief as high and as large as an immense three-story business block, with fissures between them varying from a few inches to the width of a street. Many of them are at right angles with each other. These immense regular blocks of conglomerate rock impress the beholder with the fact that he is in a deserted city. The fissures run in straight lines and form streets and alleys. In other parts the rocks are irregular and angular, and form grottos or caves, the largest of which it is said is capacious enough to shelter twenty-five or thirty people. The whole covers an area of several acres. Possibly this wonderful record of immense power is the result of an explosion of natural gas, which is known to underlie the location.

Ebenezer Reed, a native of Connecticut who settled on the west side of Five Mile creek in 1820, was the first actual settler in the town of Allegany. In the same year Amos B. Orton and his brother David settled on what is now the Jewell farm on Five Mile run, Isaac Eggleston on the Horton farm, and Andrew Allen on the Robert Wilber farm. Amos and David Orton joined the Mormons at Nauvoo, Ill., in 1823. From 1821 to 1828 the settlement was increased by the arrival of Hiram Wood, Elias Fish, James Strong, Sr., Abiathar Phillips, Sr., William Morgan, Deacon Thompson, Deacon Warren, and Messrs. Kenyon, Hall, and Wilber, all of whom located along the Five Mile run.

In the thirtieth and fortieth decades the settlement was further augmented by the settlement of John Palmer, William Wright, John and Henry Altenburg, John Norris, Lewis Pierce, James R., Barak, Sanford, Raynor, and Alfred Clark (brothers), Jabez Chapin, Sr., and his sons Jabez and William, Isaac, James, and Andrew Freeland, Abel Burdick, G. C. Sheldon, Amos Scofield (1839), Franklin Smith, Jason Blair, H. W. McClure (of Franklinville, the first white child born in the county), Freeman Kenyon, Isaac Wright (recently deceased), John and William Ellis, Joseph Goodwin, Deacon Hubbard, George Bascom (recently deceased), and many others.

Allegany, including Humphrey, was formed from Great Valley as the town of Burton on April 18, 1831. The name was changed to Allegany on March 28, 1851. Humphrey was taken off May 12, 1836. On February 25, 1854, all the books, records, and papers belonging to the town were destroyed by fire and on this account it is impossible to give a complete list of the town clerks and justices of the peace prior to that date. The appended list of supervisors is accurate, inasmuch as it was obtained from the board's official records, and the names of the other officers have been gleaned from reliable but incomplete sources:

Supervisors.—Ebenezer Jones, 1832-35, 1837; Richard Wright, 1836; S. I. Horton, 1838-39; Jedediah Lathrop, 1840-42; Edwin H. Blackmore, 1843-44, 1852; Abiathar Phillips, Jr., 1845-46; Sherlock B. Willard, 1847; A. O. Smith, 1848-49, 1856; Erastus Willard, 1850, 1865-67; Hiram W. McClure, 1851, 1873; James Freeland, 1853, 1863-64, 1875; Caleb Jewett, 1854; James G. Johnson, 1855; Edward S. Mills, 1857, 1861; Hiram Couchman, 1858; David Austin, 1859; Gilbert Palen, 1860, 1862; Andrew Mead, 1863; J. B. Strong, 1869-70; Asa Haskell, 1871-72, 1877; E. C. Howard, 1874; Zenas G. Bullock, 1876; J. H. Farquharson, 1878; C. J. Hickey, 1879-84; Charles Spraker, 1885; Mason M. Dye, 1886-89; Sanford B. McClure, 1890-93.

Town Clerks.—Jedediah Lathrop, 1832-37; record destroyed, 1838-40; William Wales, 1841-43; record destroyed, 1844-47; C. S. Trivitt, 1848; record destroyed, 1849-50; A. L. Simmonds, 1851; William H. Smith, 1852; record destroyed, 1853; Edgar Shaw, 1854-55; Luther P. Forbes, 1856; Albert J. Scofield, 1857; William B. Evans, 1858; J. H. Farquharson, 1859; A. H. Marsh, 1860; J. R. McConnell, 1861; Dudley Phelps, 1862, 1867, 1874-75, 1879-84, 1886-93; J. P. Colgrove, 1863-64; Nathan A. Dye, 1865; Charles Dolan, 1866; Frederick Smith, 1868-70; Charles Spraker, 1871; E. R. McClure, 1872-73, 1878; C. J. Hickey, 1876; L. S. Corthell, 1877; Alfred Keyes, 1885.

Justices of the Peace.—1832, record destroyed; 1833, John Palmer, Abiathar Phillips; 1834, Seth Cole, A. Phillips, John Palmer; 1835, A. Phillips, John Palmer; 1836, Christopher Whitney, Joseph Symonds; 1837, Stephen S. Cole, Christopher Whitney; 1838-39, record destroyed; 1840, Christopher Whitney, Ebenezer Jones; 1841, record destroyed; 1842, Ebenezer Jones; 1843, E. H. Blackmore, Isaac Freeland, E. Jones; 1844, E. Jones, I. Freeland, E. H. Blackmore, G. C. Sheldon; 1845, G. C. Sheldon, George Bascom, E. Jones, I. Freeland; 1846, S. B. Willard, G. C. Sheldon, I. Freeland, George Bascom; 1847, George Bascom, G. C. Sheldon, S. B. Willard; 1848, Erastus Willard, George Bascom, A. O. Smith; 1849, Erastus Willard; 1850, George Bascom; 1851, James Freeland, George Bascom, E. H. Blackmore; 1852, Warren Onan, Seth Allen, E. H. Blackmore; 1853, Warren Onan, Erastus Willard, George Bascom; 1854, Cornell Wiltse, Andrew Mead, Erastus Willard; 1855, James Freeland; 1856, Warren Onan; 1857, Erastus Willard; 1858, A. C. Keyes; 1859, A. Mead; 1860, W. H. Phillips; 1861, Cyrus G. McKay; 1862, E. Willard; 1863, Edgar Shaw; 1864, W. H. Phillips; 1865, C. Wiltse; 1866, H. Couchman; 1867, Balthaser Witman; 1868, N. A. Dye, M. Thornton; 1869, J. B. Wilkins; 1870, Michael Thornton; 1871, E. C. Howard, John Collins; 1872, Erastus Willard; 1873, J. B. Strong; 1874, A. Haskell; 1875, E. C. Howard; 1876, E. Willard; 1877, N. A. Dye; 1878, D. Thurber; 1879, E. C. Howard, G. L. Sheldon; 1880, E. Willard; 1881, N. A. Dye, A. G. Harter; 1882, C. J. Cronin, L. S. Corthell; 1883, L. S. Corthell, M. M. Dye, Joseph Martin; 1884, E. Willard, H. W. McClure; 1885, M. M. Whitney, J. B. Abbey, N. A. Dye; 1886, Michael O'Brien, J. L. Welsh, A. Griffin; 1887, L. S. Corthell, Robert Fitzgerald; 1888, James McAuliffe, Edwin E. Guthrie; 1889, J. A. Ten Eyck, E. Willard, R. Fitzgerald; 1890, Michael O'Brien, W. J. Shultz, Frederick Smith, P. H. Sullivan; 1891, Frederick Smith; 1892, James McAuliffe; 1893, Martin Link, L. M. Chase.

The first Board of Excise Commissioners was elected in February, 1874, and consisted of Charles Tousey, John Laubenthal, and Michael Collins. The present commissioners are John Collins, Fred Furnace, and William Weinaug.

The valleys of the Allegheny river and Four Mile and Five Mile creeks were covered with a dense forest, mainly of towering pine trees. The river, being in close proximity to where this fine timber grew, offered a cheap and an easy thoroughfare to float it to market. These were the inducements that decided the pioneer settlers to build mills and give their attention to the manufacture of those great trees into lumber and shingles. They became a community of lumbermen, and continued the business until the available timber was nearly exhausted before much attention was given to tilling the soil in these fertile valleys. The quantity of lumber manufactured and rafted to market is estimated at 125,000,000 feet. The pine forests and much of the hemlock have disappeared. What yet remains is mainly on the hills.

Of the numerous saw and shingle-mills erected at various times within the limits of the town of Allegany space forbids the mention of all but a limited number. Along Five Mile run Anson King built one in 1827, and three years later Reuben Lamberton put up another. From 1840 until recently this latter mill was owned by Jacob M. Park. Charles Chamberlain erected a saw-mill in 1850 and a grist-mill in 1874. In 1845 S. B. Willard put up a saw-mill and in 1848 William B. Fox built another, while in 1856 Freeman Wilber began the operation of one, which was finally abandoned. On the banks of the Allegheny several mills have been constructed. About 1831 a dam was thrown across a mile or so above the mouth of Nine Mile creek by William Forbes, Jedediah Budlong, Guy C. Irvine, and William Clark, who erected a large saw-mill on the south side of the river. This mill went down in 1852. Gen. C. T. Chamberlain put up another on the north side which was discontinued soon afterward. On Nine Mile creek, near Vandalia, David Chamberlain started a saw-mill in 1840 and in 1858 William Grimes erected another. In 1866 R. Stone & Co. built a steam saw-mill three miles from the river capable of sawing daily 25,000 feet of lumber. This mill was burned in 1868, was rebuilt, and was later owned by Erastus Willard. The settlement here was known as Stone's Camp. The Four Mile creek was utilized in 1832 by Dr. Andrew Mead and in 1848 by Levi McNall, who in 1863 erected a steam mill which was burned in 1874. George Van Campen, Joseph Nessel, Col. J. G. Johnson, and A. O. & W. H. Smith were also millowners here. An overshoot saw-mill was built on Two Mile run in 1868 by William Stephan at a locality subsequently called Stephansburg. D. & J. Hall and Rufus Austin also erected saw-mills on this stream. On Three Mile creek Paul Reed put up a mill in 1833, and in 1848 J. C. Devereux & Co. built one in which steam-power was used and which contained also a run of stone for grinding. It was burned in 1860. C. J. & D. Soule and Joseph Richler & Son were owners of steam saw-mills near the Allegheny, as were also Charles Soule & Son. Hiram Wheaton and J. H. Farquharson erected a large steam saw and grist-mill in Allegany village in 1873. William Morgan in 1848 put up a saw-mill in Morgan hollow, and in 1856 Patrick McMahan erected another, operated by steam, on Chipmunk creek, which employed from thirty to forty men. Some of the machinery in this mill was used in sawing the timber employed in the construction of the great Portage bridge across the Genesee river.

The largest lumbering mills in the town at present are, on Chipmunk or Trout run, near the Carrolton line, and are operated by a Buffalo firm. Other saw-mills now in operation are the steam mills of Wm. Chamberlin on Five Mile run, with an output of 400,000 feet of lumber per year; Gilbert Soule's near the village; and George Nessel's on Four Mile creek.

About the time that successful farming had been fairly established the oil excitement swept through Pennsylvania and reached the town of Allegany. Boring for oil was begun near the village in 1875, but not until 1877, after several unsuccessful experiments had been made, were the seekers rewarded for their labors. Many good wells have been put down, but no phenomenal "gushers" have resulted. Oil producing was for several years a prominent industry of Allegany and employed a small army of men. It is estimated that now there are over 1,000 producing wells in the town. Besides these a large number have been abandoned.

Agriculture has come to the front, with dairying as the leading industry. The soil is peculiarly adapted to the growing of fine grasses, and also to the production of grain and fruit in considerable quantities. In 1867 an important organization was effected called the Allegany Cheese Factory Association, which erected a factory on Five Mile creek. Other cheese manufacturing have been established in convenient parts of the town.

As early as 1814 or '15, five or six years before the first settler came to Allegany, a road was marked and used along the north bank of the river connecting Olean with the wilderness in Allegany. In 1810 a road from Buffalo passing through Springville, Erie county, and Franklinville by way of Allegany to Olean was opened, but was hardly passable for many years. This became the old Buffalo and Olean stage road. It entered the town over Chapell hill, followed down Five Mile creek to the Chapin farm, and thence ran by way of the Jones and Johnson farms to Olean. About 1822 Peter Sampson carried the mail from Buffalo to Olean on horseback and later by stage, continuing until the close of his life in 1836. The route was continued until it was superseded by the Erie railroad and was abandoned in 1852. Stages for several years passed daily both ways over this road, and history says "it was one of the most useful and stirring thoroughfares in western New York." Five Mile run was then the leading community in Allegany, and where the village now stands was a wilderness. The first postoffice was established in the Five Mile neighborhood, on the Freeman Kenyon farm, in 1828. Conditions have changed. The office was long since discontinued and the thoroughfare is now familiarly known as "the back road." The town maintains good highways on both sides of the river, both sides of Five Mile run, and along the valleys of the other streams in the town.

The first bridge to span the Allegheny river in this town was a frame structure erected in 1846, near the village. With two others subsequently built elsewhere it was swept away in the flood of 1872, which caused the erection of the present handsome and substantial iron bridge, near Allegany village, three spans of which were completed in 1873 at a cost of $8,765. The remaining span was a temporary wooden structure, which was replaced in 1880 with an iron span corresponding with the others, the cost being $1,725, making a total expenditure for this durable structure of $10,490, all of which was defrayed by the town of Allegany.

The New York, Lake Erie & Western and the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroads extend across the town along the valley of the river, and afford the people good facilities for travel and transportation. The Olean, Bradford & Warren narrow gauge railroad traverses the south part of the town with stations at Four Mile, Rock City, Knapp's Creek, and State Line.

Alfred Clark had a grocery in 1843 in the north part of the village. The first general store was opened in what was then Burton in 1844 by S. B. & E. Willard. The leading merchants from that date to 1860 have been: George Bascom in 1848, whose large building was converted into a public hall in 1875 and christened "Bascom hall"; David Chase (early); Erastus Willard in 1846; James G. Johnson and George Van Campen in 1854; S. K. Hale in 1858; Forbes & Smead, grocers, in 1850; Butterworth & Fox, in 1844, in the building that was converted into Zink's brewery; A. O. & W. H. Smith, with Harmon, Brother & Co., in 1858; Nathan Dye, grocer, in 1853; and Charles Dolan in 1860.

The first birth in the town was that of Nathan Reed on October 2, 1820, and the first deaths were the children of Isaac Eggleston in 1823. William B. Fox and Sally Strong were the principals in the first marriage ceremony, which occurred in 1825 at the house of James Strong. October 19, 1835, the river was suddenly swollen by a heavy rain and caused considerable damage on the adjacent flats.

Ebenezer Reed opened the first tavern in town in 1820. It was located near the mouth of Five Mile run. Raynor Clark opened another shortly afterward in the north part. Ira Washburn, who subsequently settled in Hinsdale, became an innkeeper about 1834 on the David Chamberlain property. He was succeeded by Robert Patterson and he by R. H. McCoy in 1847. It was afterward metamorphosed into a dwelling by the latter's son. Barak E. Clark opened an inn in the village in 1838 and Raynor Clark another in 1840. The present Park Hotel was built as the Devereux House in 1852, and the same year a hotel and store building, called "The Block," was erected in front of the depot. It was burned in 1861.

A burial place was designated in 1820 near the school house in district No. 4, and was used for interment for a long series of years. A cemetery in the north part of the town, near the Five Mile Baptist church, was first used for burials in 1826. Both have been well fenced and kept in good condition. About 1830, and from then down to 1860, several interments were made on a lot selected on the Clark farm, about a half-mile west of Allegany village, and on a portion of the James Freeland farm south of the river. Those buried on the latter place were subsequently removed. The Allegany cemetery is the property of the town. It is situated on high ground near the eastern part of the village and contains five acres of land. It is managed by a board of three trustees, whose duty it is to see that it is well cared for. The grounds are well drained and neatly fenced, properly laid out, and kept in excellent order. Its first Board of Trustees was composed of James G. Johnson, Edgar Shaw, and Abiathar Phillips, who were elected at the organization of the association in 1855. The trustees in 1893 are L. L. Burr, Charles Spraker, and Dr. S. B. McClure.

The first school in the town of Allegany was taught in the winter of 1825-26 by Leonard Cronkhite, in the north part of the town, in the house of James Strong. Other schools were opened from time to time to meet the wants of the increasing population, which by the State enumeration taken in 1892 gives Allegany 3,705.

The town is divided into fourteen school districts with a school house in each of them. The schools the past year were attended by 902 scholars, taught by twenty-four teachers. The entire expense of maintenance was $11,254.01. The valuation of property taxable for school purposes within the town is $1,334,417. The school houses and sites are valued at $17,661.

In 1837 Nicholas Devereux, of Utica, who, by purchase of the Holland Land Company, had become an extensive proprietor of wild land, conceived the idea that Allegany would be an important point on the Erie railroad, which was then in process of construction. Mr. Devereux gave tangible form to his idea by selecting his farm of 300 acres situated on the north side of Allegheny river, about a mile southeast of the village, as a site on which to build a city. The first survey of a line for the railroad ran through these grounds, which he surveyed into streets and lots and named Allegany City. He had his city platted in 1842 and a splendid map printed, which made a beautiful appearance on paper. Soon after work was suspended on the Erie railroad and Allegany City waited for time to develop its feasibility. When work was again resumed on the railroad in 1848 a new survey located it a half-mile north of the paper city, and the project was abandoned. Several buildings had been erected on the property, among them being a large structure designed as a hotel.

The first postoffice in town was established in 1828 on what is now known as the Freeman Kenyon farm, and was named Five Mile. Josiah Hall was the first postmaster. Later Elias Fish held the position. About 1850 William Wiltse was postmaster and he was succeeded by his son, Cornell Wiltse, who held the office until it was discontinued in 1866.

The first Burton postoffice was established in the Chamberlin neighborhood, about a mile north of the village, with Jedediah Lathrop as postmaster. Lathrop was also prominent in the early affairs of the town. The office was discontinued in 1856.

Allegany postoffice was established in 1851 as "Burton," and was changed to its present name in 1852, when the name of the town was likewise changed. The postmasters have been successively David Chase, Dr. A. P. Phillips, Erastus Willard, James Freeland, Patrick McMahan, Warren Onan, A. C. Keyes, William Spraker, Jr., Lewis S. Corthell, and Warren Onan again in 1868 for six years. William Spraker was again appointed in April, 1875, and held until March 24, 1887, when he was succeeded by William P. McCarty, who was the incumbent until April 14, 1891, when William Spraker, the present postmaster, was once more appointed. July 1, 1876, the office was made a money-order office.

Allegany village is situated in the central part of the town, in a beautiful valley on the north side of Allegheny river, three or four miles northwesterly from Olean. The village is sufficiently elevated to afford good drainage, and is also above the overflow of the river in high water. This location as well as the whole township is distinguished for its pure, bracing, and health-giving atmosphere. The village has a population of 1,000 inhabitants, but is not incorporated. It is the seat of St. Bonaventure's College, and contains a Union Free School, five church edifices, two public halls, three physicians, one dentist, one lawyer, five general stores, two hardware stores, two drug stores, four groceries, one banking firm, three hotels, two furniture stores, one liquor store, two marble and granite shops, a lumber yard, a sash, door, and blind factory, a grist-mill, and a tannery, besides a full complement of mechanics' shops and artisans. The village has an efficient Board of Health, a registrar of vital statistics, and an organized hook and ladder company. A street railroad, constructed the present year, connects it with the city of Olean.

The first village school house was built of slabs in 1830, between Five Mile run and Sheldon's mill-race, west of the village, and on the south side of the highway. At that time there were only three small log houses at the mouth of the run, and no buildings where the village has since been built. Miss Faritta Chapin, who is still living at the age of more than eighty years, was one of the first teachers. In 1834 a school house was erected on what is now the Norwood farm and is now used for a store room. Many of the older residents now living received their rudimentary education in that building, and religious instruction, too, as it was used for "meetings" by all denominations until 1852.

Allegheny Union Free School, district No. 3, was organized on Wednesday, June 18, 1884, with Dr. S. B. McClure, L. L. Burr, Stephen Welch, M. O'Brien, Joseph Presack, Charles Spraker, Morris McAuliffe, Mrs. Byron Norwood, and Mrs. John Eggleston, trustees. Dr. S. B. McClure was elected president of the board and Morris McAuliffe secretary. In 1885 the sites for their two school buildings were purchased and the present school houses were built. The main building is a two-story brick structure, divided into four rooms, with seats in each for sixty pupils, and cost $10,000. The branch building is also two stories high and divided into two rooms, with seats for sixty pupils in each, and was constructed at the expense of $2,500. These buildings, with the grounds and all other school property, are estimated to be worth $15,000. In 1892 the Union Free School was attended by 323 scholars with an average attendance of 216. Six teachers are employed, viz.: G. J. Dykeman, principal, Jennie Burr, Franc Soule, Lotta Bascom, Rose Crandall, and J. Mitchell. The present officers of the Board of Education are L. L. Burr, president; Dr. E. Torrey, vice-president; C. G. Wright, secretary. L. L. Burr, Dr. E. Torrey, C. G. Wright, George A. Hall, William Keim, T. Smith, B. H. Green, and M. J. Culligan compose the present Board of Trustees. The school has recently been placed under the supervision of the Regents of the University of the State of New York.

Knapp's Creek, situated in the extreme south part of the town on the height of land, on the narrow gauge railroad, is a railroad station and hamlet containing a postoffice, one or two stores, a school house, some shops, and about fifty families. This little village owes its existence to the oil interests in its neighborhood. The postoffice was established about 1876 or 1877 with George F. Curtis as postmaster. Mr. Curtis had one successor, was re-appointed, and is the present incumbent. It was made a money-order post-office in 1892.

Four Mile is a small hamlet, a railroad station, and a postoffice on the narrow gauge railroad between Knapp's Creek and Olean. The present postmaster is P. H. Sullivan.

A postoffice was formerly kept at Chipmunk. It was discontinued in January of the present year.

About one mile west of Allegany village, on the banks of the river, is the "Willard Stock Farm" of 230 acres owned by Clare Willard, son of Erastus. The business was started in 1892 and consists of breeding high-blooded trotting horses.

Previous to January 2, 1890, business men were compelled to go to Olean or to Salamanca to transact banking business. On that date Dye Brothers (M. M. and W. H.) opened their present banking house, the first regular establishment for transacting a general banking business in Allegany. They are organized as individual bankers, and are personally responsible to such as do business at their bank. M. M. Dye is cashier and W. H. Dye is assistant cashier.

A. Healy & Sons' tannery in Allegany village was built in 1852 by Col. J. G. Johnson, Gilbert Palen, and Caleb Jewett. In 1857 it was sold to Palen & Strong. Some years later Mr. Strong became the owner and conveyed the property to his son, Jairus B., who conducted it until his death. It was destroyed by fire in 1876 and rebuilt the same year. The tannery, together with the large estate left by Mr. Strong, was for a time under the management of E. C. Howard and his sister, Mrs. Strong. In the winter of 1880 the property was bought by A. R. Hills, who conducted it until his death in 1885. It then came into the possession of the present owners, A. Healy & Sons, who have doubled its capacity. They now turn out 600 sides of leather and consume fifty cords of bark daily. They employ from eighty to one hundred men.

Edwin R. McClure began tanning leather in Allegany in 1849, and continued up to a few years ago. In 1868 he erected and put in operation a small upper-leather tannery in the west part of the village. A. B. Canfield & Co. built another at Vandalia in 1876 which was finally discontinued.

George A. Hall's sash and door factory in Allegany was established by Couchman & Byran in 1853. They carried on business until about 1859, when Mr. Byran sold his interest to E. C. Mills, the firm being Mills & Couchman, which existed for two years and failed. About 1863 the business was purchased by Lewis S. Hall, who carried it on until his death in 1876, when his son, George A. Hall, assumed the proprietorship. He employs fifteen men. The great flood in 1865 destroyed the mill, carrying off all the lumber, about 75,000 feet of saw-logs, and 3,000,000 shingles. It was also twice destroyed by fire—in 1877 and 1879.

The Crescent Milling Company, of Allegany, was established in 1882 by William Keim and O. J. Lewis, the present proprietors. In 1887 they built the present three-story frame mill building. It has a brick boiler house supplied with a fifty horse-power boiler and a forty horse-power engine. The capacity is forty tons of grain per day. Employment is given to six men. A warehouse is connected in which is handled lime, cement, plaster, and salt.

The lumber mill of F. H. & C. P. Stephan was established by James Johnson in 1848. In 1856 William Stephan, the father of the present proprietors, assumed control and conducted it until 1877. The mill was operated by steam-power and had a capacity of cutting 10,000 feet of lumber daily.

In 1847, when the late Rt. Rev. John Timon was appointed bishop of the See of Buffalo, including as now the territory of Cattaraugus county, he found within this county very few Catholics and no organized parishes or missions. In 1850 the building of the Erie railroad offered profitable employment to laborers, and an army of Irish Catholics came into Cattaraugus county. Nicholas Devereux, a zealous Catholic who owned an extensive tract of wild land, offered these laborers such generous inducements to settle upon his lands and make themselves homes that many of them accepted his terms gladly. Here then was a ready field opened to Bishop Timon and the Catholic church. Mr. Devereux was not only interested in the temporal, but also in the spiritual, welfare of his protégés. He conceived the project of bringing to this field some missionaries of the Order of St. Francis, and communicated his desires to Bishop Timon. This met the worthy bishop's own desires. In 1854 the Pope assembled all the prelates of the Catholic church. This was the favorable opportunity for Mr. Devereux to accompany his bishop to the Vatican at Rome. The journey was made under auspicious circumstances; the petition for missionary aid was granted; three priests and one lay brother of the Order of St. Francis willingly offered their services for the new field of labor in the uncultivated regions of western New York. The names of these self-devoted pioneers of the Gospel were Rev. Father Pamfilio, O. S. F., Rev. Father Samuel, O. S. F., Rev. Father Sextus, O. S. F., and Venerable Brother Salvador, O. S. F. The first named was commissioned warden or supervisor of this band of the Franciscan Order, constituting a mission of Franciscans established in Cattaraugus county thirty-five years ago. Nor is this the only Franciscan mission to which the American Catholics are indebted. There was another of the same order in Canada 150 years prior to the date of this, and it is an historical fact that it was a Franciscan priest who first celebrated mass in the city of Monterey, California. In the southwest and the southeast parts of the United States this order existed in the intermediate centuries after the discovery of America, and were the pioneers to carry the banner of the Cross of Christ.

Father Pamfilio and his coadjutors remained in Ellicottville three years, spending the time in incessant missionary labor, and then settled in Allegany on a beautiful tract of land, the munificent bequest of Mr. Devereux, where with his aid and with the aid of other friends of the project they opened to the public in 1859 that famous institution, St. Bonaventure's College. The college buildings are situated on a fine plateau near the north bank of the beautiful Allegheny. The natural elevation gives the locality all the advantages of pure, bracing air and fresh mountain water. Students at this well-conducted college have a home in the institution, and also the advantages of extensive and well laid out grounds, a large and well-selected library, a complete set of philosophical and surveying instruments, and every opportunity for recreation and proficiency in their studies. This institution, founded in 1859, was chartered March 1, 1875, and empowered to confer the academic and honorary degrees usually conferred by universities. The course of studies is ecclesiastical, classical, scientific, and commercial. All the usual college chairs are filled with competent professors. The scholastic year commences on the second Monday of September and ends about the last of June. The college has a usual attendance of 200 students, with very moderate expenses. The buildings, grounds, and all other property has a valuation of $200,000. The institution has no endowments. It is under the supervision of the Regents of the University of the State of New York.

St. Elizabeth's Academy of Allegany is a Catholic institution conducted by the Franciscan Sisters. It is pleasantly situated on the brow of a hill, and overlooks the Allegheny river. It commands a view of one of the most picturesque valleys in western New York. The academy was organized in 1859 by the Rev. Father Pamfilio for the higher education of young ladies. At first the building consisted of a plain, substantial brick square, but the number of pupils increased so rapidly that within six years an addition was necessary, and in 1882 the Sisters had to erect the large and handsome building now called the "academy." Students come here from Massachusetts, Connecticut, Ohio, New York, and Pennsylvania for instruction. The course consists of all the higher English branches, book-keeping, typewriting, stenography, languages, painting, drawing, and needlework. The number of students is increasing and now averages ninety. The institution receives no endowment and is supported by the tuition of the students. It is connected with St. Bonaventure's College.

The first religious services in Allegany occurred in 1823 at the dwelling of James Strong, Sr. Rev. Benjamin Cole had charge and Jabez Chapin was the first class-leader. The first religious society and church organization (Presbyterian) was formed in May, 1827, with twenty-seven members, by the Rev.

Mr. Orton, an evangelist, at the house now occupied by Anson Chapin. Rev. Silas Hubbard was pastor, and was celebrated for having been the husband of five wives. In warm weather the congregation worshipped in a barn. Fortunately a school house was erected in the vicinity in the summer of 1827, and on the approach of cold weather the congregation repaired thither. The society existed and prospered for five years, when the members quarreled and the organization went down.

The Methodist Episcopal church of Allegany is located in the village and was organized in 1829 by Rev. Jonathan Benson, who was its first pastor. Mr. Benson was succeeded successively by Revs. W. D. Buck, William McKinstry, A. C. Dubois, Francis Strang, Horatio N. Seaver, O. F. Comfort, D. V. B. Hoyt, Carlton Fuller, F. B. Hudson, Milo Scott, John Kennard, Schuyler Parker, B. F. McNeal, A. C. Curry, C. P. Clark, John Worthington, William Jennings, John Ready, J. B. Countryman, H. Butlin, C. S. Daley, William Mayovern, J. C. Whiteside, N. N. Beers, N. B. Congdon, J. D. Monroe, John R. Catham, James Davis, Woodruff Post, William McGarren, Waterbury Miller, J. D. Holland, John Harlman, W. H. Kellogg, and John F. Bennett, the present pastor. At its organization the church had seven or eight members. John Chapin was the first class-leader. The society was without a house of worship until 1855, when their present church edifice was erected at an expense of $2,500. The building was repaired and a bell placed in the belfry in 1865-66 at a cost of $1,407, was rededicated by Rev. C. D. Burlingame, and will now seat 300 people. The present value of all church property is $4,000. The membership is forty. In 1865 the society was re-organized by Thomas D. Wilson. The Sunday school, organized in 1866, has an average attendance of ninety scholars and twenty teachers with B. H. Green superintendent. The present class-leader is Charles W. Alexander. The Epworth League has forty members with C. G. Wright president.

The First Presbyterian church of Allegany village is the successor of the First Congregational church, which was organized October 2, 1852. That society built the present church edifice in 1853 at a cost of $2,200. Three men erected the house and were reimbursed by the sale or rent of the pews. In 1858 the church organization was changed to Presbyterian and has so continued. In 1858 the new society had but thirteen members, and Rev. I. G. Ogden was their first pastor. The present membership is sixty, and they are without a pastor. The present value of the church property is $4,000. The edifice has seats for 250 people. The Sunday school is attended by 125 scholars and teachers.

St. John's Evangelical Lutheran church is located in the village of Allegany. It was organized in 1856 by Rev. E. F. Strauss, who was its first pastor. In 1861 the present church edifice was erected and was enlarged and repaired in 1888. This society now has two hundred and fifty members. Rev. A. T. Pechtold is the present pastor. The original cost of the present church edifice was $1,000, which with the grounds and all other church property is now worth $4,000. The church has seats for 220 persons. The Sunday school is attended by forty-five scholars and five teachers.

The Free Methodist church of Allegany was organized by Rev. A. F. Curry, October 2, 1860, with two hundred members. The present house of worship was erected in 1870, at the cost of $1,800, and has seats for an audience of three hundred. The present value of church property is $2,000. The society now has sixty-one members with Rev. William Manning pastor. It also has a Sunday school connected.

St. Bonaventure's church was founded about 1858 by the missionary Franciscan Father Pamfilio assisted by two other priests of the Order of St. Francis. The first house of worship was a little chapel which is still in existence. About 1867 the present elegant brick church edifice, connected with St. Bonaventure's College, was erected at a cost of $40,000, including furniture, decorations, and all appurtenances. This church is attended by about 1,500 members under the pastoral care of the Franciscan Fathers.

A Baptist society was formed by Rev. E. F. Crane, at a meeting held in Willard hall April 3, 1854, with the title of the "First Baptist Society of Allegany." J. G. Thompson, Dr. A. P. Phillips, John Ellis, S. J. Horton, L. P. Forbes, and Andrew Mead were elected trustees. Their meetings were held in the village school house. Rev. Dexter S. Morris was one of the earliest preachers. This society has long since passed into history.

The First Universalist Society of Allegany was organized February 10, 1872, with Nathan A. Dye, Charles Soule, and David Thurber trustees. Rev. Isaac George gave them a stated supply for a year and in 1875 Rev. Benjamin Brunning was their pastor for the same period, the latter residing in Allegany and preaching there half the time. No regular meetings of the society have been held since he left.

The First Methodist Episcopal church of Knapp's Creek was organized by Rev. T. J. Bissell in 1885, with thirty-two members. Rev. C. M. Buck was the first pastor. The society now has a membership of twenty-five with Rev. John F. Bennett, pastor. A house of worship was built at a cost of $300 and has a seating capacity of one hundred and fifty. Their Union Sunday school is attended by seventy-five scholars.

Allegany Lodge, No. 50, A. O. U. W., was organized December 27, 1876, with twenty-one charter members, who elected the following officers: Asa Haskell, P. M. W.; S. B. McClure, M. W.; C. G. Wright, G. F.; C. H. Tousey, O.; E. D. Mixer, recorder; C. B. Smith, financier; A. G. Burlingame, receiver; Z. G. Bullock, G.; W. W. Campbell, J. W.; A. B. Scofield, O. W. The lodge now has forty-seven members. George Strohuber is the present M. W.

The Woman's Literary Club was organized in December, 1888, with thirty-two members and meets weekly. Mrs. J. A. Freeland is president and Mrs. George Hall is secretary.

Branch 41, C. M. B. A., was organized December 28, 1878, with twelve members. The first officers were C. J. Hickey, president; M. R. Collins, vice-president; E. P. Collins, R. S.; W. P. McCarty, F. S.; James McAuliffe, T. The present membership is sixty-six. The president for 1893 is George Brenner.

St. Bonaventure's Branch, No. 21, L. C. B. A., was organized with about thirty members July 21, 1890. It now has a membership of sixty. The first officers were Mrs. Elizabeth McAuliffe, president; Miss. Ellen M. Carmody, first vice-president; Mrs. Hannah Hewitt, second vice-president; Miss Catherine McAuliffe, R. S.; Miss Mary Nenno, F. S.; Mrs. Mary Wheeler, treasurer.

River Union E. A. U. was instituted February 18, 1881, with about fifteen members. Dr. E. W. Dutcher was president; Gaius Wheaton, vice-president; John E. Barnes, secretary; and Homer H. Jones, treasurer. The union now has 125 members with Gilbert Soule president and Mrs. M. J. Blair secretary.

The Allegany W. C. T. U. was organized June 29, 1881, with forty-two members, by F. W. Crossfield. Mrs. William Manning, Sr., was president; Miss Z. Keyes, secretary; and Mrs. N. T. Sheldon, treasurer.

Allegany Council, No. 153, Royal Templars of Temperance, was instituted in 1884, and had at one time fifty names on its roll. J. H. Williamson is counselor; Mrs. J. C. Stonerod, secretary; and Mrs. N. T. Sheldon, treasurer.

A number of temperance organizations have had more or less successful careers in the town from time to time, one of the earliest being a society of the Sons of Temperance instituted in 1840 with about thirty-five members. George C. Sheldon and Ebenezer Grover were presiding officers. The society erected a hall in 1853 which was burned in 1854, when the organization was merged into a Good Templars lodge with Warren Onan as W. C. T. After a few years the lodge was disbanded and soon afterward another was organized, which likewise went down. A third was formed in January, 1868, which four years later surrendered its charter. The next one had its birth in April, 1875. This slumbered after a brief life and the cause was not revived until October 18, 1878, when still another lodge of Good Templars was organized, but this, like its predecessors, died after a short career.

Allegany Council, No. 1334, Royal Arcanum, was instituted in December, 1889, with twenty-five members, and with W. J. Scofield, R.; C. M. Soule, V. R.; E. Torrey, P. R.; W. H. Dye, T.; F. F. Spraker, collector; and William Keim, secretary. The present membership is thirty with F. F. Spraker, R.

Ira Thurber Post, No. 584, G. A. R., was organized March 27, 1886, with A. G. Burlingame, commander. Those who have successively filled that office are William Spraker, Joseph Presack, Jordan McIntyre, A. G. Burlingame, and George Strohuber. The post numbers thirty-four members.

The Woman's Relief Corps, No. 92, auxiliary to Ira Thurber Post, was organized May 10, 1892, with Mrs. Alice McClure, treasurer; Mrs. A. Strohuber, vice-president; Mrs. A. F. Corthell, secretary; and Mrs. M. Moyer, treasurer. The officers for 1893 are the same except Miss Marie Strohuber is treasurer. The corps has nineteen members.

Col. George Bascom was one of the pioneer settlers of Cattaraugus county, and was prominently known in this town, where the most of his life was spent. In the days of general trainings he was closely connected with the State militia, whence he obtained his title of colonel. He died in Allegany village April 11, 1893, in his eighty-fourth year.

Jason Blair, a native of Massachusetts, was born September 12, 1810. November 13, 1835, he married Miss Graves, of Lisle, N. Y. Shortly afterward he came to Allegany and settled near Olean, where he remained for two years. His next home was at the mouth of Five Mile creek. He was a lumberman and cut the pine timber off 700 acres of land which he bought at from $1.00 to $2.50 per acre. They were early settlers and most of their provisions were brought from Buffalo by teams. There were times when roads were so bad that it was hardly possible to make the trips. Then provisions were exhausted. The little that was left the neighbors would divide and help each other out until their supplies came. Mr. Blair survived his wife, who died September 14, 1887. He died June 3, 1893. They had seven children, two of whom died in infancy.

Lieut. William C. Bockoven was born in New Jersey, July 18, 1824. He came to Allegany in 1848, remained about a year, and went to Fishkill, N. Y., where he married Maria Van Vlack, July 22, 1850. The same year they moved to Allegany village. By trade he was a blacksmith. He was a partner with Dennis Lamberton four years, when Lamberton died, and Mr. Bockoven continued the business alone until the breaking out of the Rebellion, when he went out as lieutenant of Co. I, 64th N. Y. Vols. Capt. Robert Renwick was wounded and Lieutenant Bockoven took command of Co. I as captain. After the close of the war he followed his trade until his death, which occurred January 13, 1890. He was a member of the River Union, No. 240, E. A. U. He left a wife, two sons, and three daughters. The children were Eleanor N. (Mrs. Hyde Rice); Dewitt C.; Jessie (Mrs. William H. Hayes); Minor; and Estella (Mrs. Clare Willard).

Edward Booth was born in England, December 11, 1844, and in 1851 came to America with his parents, Joseph and Susan Booth, who reside in Humphrey. They reared twelve children, eight of whom are living. Mr. Booth is a farmer in Allegany. He enlisted February 2, 1862, in Co. C, 105th N. Y. Vols., and served until the close of the war. He married, March 5, 1866, Mary D. Slocum, who was born in Herkimer county, July 5, 1844. They have one child, Charles M., born July 15, 1867, married Flora Heald, January 16, 1887, and has two children.

Harry Bostwick was born in Vermont, Oct. 17, 1793, married Annie Meeker in 1825, and came to Allegany in 1852. He was a tailor by trade. His wife died June 6, 1881; he died June 12, 1883. Their children were Charles H., who was born in Vermont, April 11, 1826, and Martha M., who was born in July, 1827, and resides in Franklinville. Charles H. Bostwick married Lydia L. Brooks, of Bethel, Vt., Aug. 18, 1852, and came to Allegany when about twenty-two years of age. His wife died July 28, 1888. His death occurred very suddenly July 27, 1890. Their children were Charles H., Jr., and Annice. The latter was born June 21, 1860, and resides on the homestead, where four generations have lived and where three were born, the house being one of the oldest in town.

John B. Bucher, a weaver by trade, with his wife, Mary Ann Sutter, and their two daughters and one son, emigrated to America in 1851, landing in New York city on June 24th. The family came from Ober Schneisingen, Canton Argau, Switzerland, where the son, William Bucher, was born on July 19, 1839. The daughters' names were Helen and Lenna. The mother was a member of a prominent family in Switzerland. John Bucher first settled near Buffalo, but soon moved to Transit, N. Y., and in 1852 located near Lockport. In 1853 he purchased a few acres of wild land in Amherst, Erie county, which he sold in March, 1859, and removed to Allegany, settling on the Four Mile, where the parents died at the age of seventy-seven years. William Bucher's education was nearly all in German, which he judiciously combined with the practical knowledge he was forced to secure. Leaving home in April, 1858, he preceded the family to this town, where he worked by the month and finally purchased forty acres of land. By an accident he lost his right arm and then began peddling, but money was scarce and this proved unprofitable. In 1862 he secured a permit to enter the 154th Regiment and followed that organization through its campaigns, supplying the soldiers with tobacco, notions, etc. He returned home in June, 1865, and with the profits accumulated in the army he was enabled to pay for his farm. July 12, 1868, Mr. Bucher married Mary Krein, of Buffalo, and their children are William F., John P., Joseph A., Henry F., Christian A., George, Jacob, Albert, Mary A., Katie A., Clara E., and a daughter deceased. Mr. Bucher is the owner of the celebrated Rock City in this town, a place fully described on a preceding page. He has always been a Republican in politics, but not an office-seeker.

Ira Burlingame, the father of Mrs. Cordelia C. Jones, was born in Weathersfield, Vt., November 5, 1778, and before attaining his majority went to Oxford, Chenango county, where he married Elizabeth Lyon. He experienced religion in 1818 and united with the Baptist church. In 1827 he removed to Cattaraugus county, where he spent the remainder of his days. Here he soon identified himself with the Baptist church and labored to promote its interests until his death, which occurred November 29, 1846. His wife died at Franklinville in 1864. Only four of their twelve children are now living: Leroy, Elizabeth, Cordelia C., and A. Haynes.

John C. Calkins, born in Ballston, Saratoga county, October 30, 1815, came to Great Valley about 1852. After the war he removed to Allegany and engaged in farming. He married, first, Abigail Mack, June 30, 1849, and by her he had three children: Foreman R., John E., and Commerce C. January 1, 1862, he married, second, Mary E., daughter of David P. and Hannah (Way) Simmons, of Great Valley, and their children are David P., Lillian H., Charles F., Mary E. (deceased), and Adna D.

John H. Carls was born in Germany, October 5, 1835, and in 1844 emigrated to America with his parents, who settled in Buffalo. At the age of eighteen he began life in the lumber woods of Northern Wisconsin, where he was engaged thirteen months. He was next employed by Joseph Story, of Buffalo, in his sheep-skin tannery. In 1855 he came to Allegany and settled on a farm on the Four Mile, where he still resides, and near where he owns a steam shingle-mill and cider-mill. November 20, 1860, he married Magdalene Heit, who has borne him twelve children, viz.: Lewis J. (who died March 26, 1872), John J., Magdalene, Andrew A., George I. (who died June 30, 1870), Rosie, Henry F., Barbara A. (who died October 10, 1881), Joseph F., Francis A., Edward, and Marcus J. His father, Henry, born in 1810, died May 7, 1882.

Charles Chamberlin, son of Moses and Anna (Platt) Chamberlin, was born December 11, 1818, and married Caroline Becker, of Chautauqua county, Nov. 12, 1848. She was born March 9, 1829. Mr. Chamberlin came to Allegany over forty years ago and settled on a farm about one mile north of the village. He also owned a saw-mill on Five Mile creek. Feb. 16, 1880, while superintending the manufacture of lumber at the mill, the circular saw caught a board from the carriage which it severed in an instant and one of the pieces, thrown with great velocity, struck Mr. Chamberlin on the left temple, causing instant death. He was an earnest member of the M. E. church. His widow resides on the homestead. Their children are William M., born April 22, 1850; G. Frank, born Nov. 3, 1853, married Kate Gooden, December 1, 1880, and has three children, Lewis M., Florence B., and Willard A.; Charles E., born August 3, 1856; Frederick E., born September 12, 1859; Anna P., born April 27, 1862, married Frank Parks, of Allegany, and has three children, Grace, Sadie, and Clara; John, born June 10, 1865; and Jennie, born October 4, 1868. William M. Chamberlin is a farmer and owns the mill where his father met his death. He married Miss Roslia Covell, March 24, 1875. She was born September 16, 1850. Their children are Mabel C., Carrie J., Lewis S., Roy P. (deceased); and Edna R.

The Chapin family has long been well known in Allegany. The first representative who came here was Jabez Chapin, Sr., from Massachusetts. His son Roswell settled in Buffalo in 1815 and became the first village surveyor there. Two daughters of Jabez, Mary and Faritta, joined their brother in Buffalo, but removed to Allegany soon after their father settled here. Another daughter, Lucy, suggested the name Springville for that village in Erie county. Jabez Chapin, Sr., had a family of three sons and four daughters, and it is said that in none of their homes was ever found a lamp or a stove. At least this is true of those who settled in Allegany. They used candles for lighting, and did their cooking and warmed their houses with fires on the hearth of the fireplace. Only one—a maiden daughter—of this generation survives. Her nephew, however, lives in town. They have all lived to extreme old age and attribute their great longevity to never employing a physician. Their lives were full of history. Their house is a veritable museum of curiosities. Mary and Faritta for many years wove carpets for the neighbors. The former was an expert in needlework, especially in making fine embroidered lace, pieces of which are still extant and valued for their superior quality.

Alfred Clark, born in Claremont, N. H., November 15, 1808, married, November 3, 1833, Elizabeth H. Jones, and came to Allegany in 1841, where he conducted a tavern for nine years. He then opened a grocery store, which he ran until June, 1859; in 1864 his son Calvin G. succeeded to this business and continued it until 1890, when he sold out on account of poor health. Alfred Clark died August 16, 1864; his wife's death occurred August 15, 1871. Calvin G. Clark, their only child, was born December 30, 1834, and October 28, 1862, married Harriet L. Loomis, who was a daughter of William Loomis, and who was born in Machias, January 1, 1836. Mr. Loomis settled in Machias when he was seventeen years old and died there September 8, 1865; his wife was Emma Tyrrell, who survived him until May 22, 1890.

Henry Clark, born in Franklin, N. Y., September 3, 1830, came to this town with his parents when nine years of age. He served three years in the late war in Co. D, 154th N. Y. Vols. He is now engaged in lumbering and farming. He married Mary J. Preston, December 12, 1854, who was born in Hingsdale, December 2, 1836. They have six children, viz.: Staley A. (died July 29, 1861), Ida J. (died Jan. 16, 1887), Harriet A., Lewis G., Anna E., and Gracie M.

Lewis S. Corthell was born in Lima, Livingston county, in 1837, and in 1840 or 1841 came with his parents, Daniel and Sally (Fitch) Corthell, to Allegany (then Burton). His father and mother dying when he was very young he was early in life thrown upon his own resources for support, and in 1851 he began to learn the trade of harness maker, which has been his life vocation. May 5, 1859, Mr. Corthell married Annette F., daughter of Rev. J. M. Field, of Machias; they have an adopted daughter, Gertrude S. It is not in a business capacity only that Mr. Corthell is known to his townsmen. In 1862 he entered Co. C, 154th N. Y. Vols., and was postmaster of Allegany from 1866 to 1869 (through Johnson's administration). He was also justice of the peace for eight years from April, 1882, until he was compelled to resign in 1890 by reason of deafness, has served as town clerk, and for twenty-three consecutive years was clerk of the School Board. Mr. Corthell is a member of the Presbyterian church and is at all times deeply interested in the success of the Democratic party. He is widely known and much esteemed.

Michael Donahue, who was born in Ireland, September 25, 1820, came to America in the fall of 1850. After residing six years in Buffalo he came to Allegany, where he is said to have cleared a piece of land by moonlight, his days being occupied in the employ of others. He was one of the pioneer farmers of the town and as a man has always been much respected. In the fall of 1852 he married Mary Fitzgerald, who died March 26, 1883. Their children were Ellen (Mrs. William Burns), Bridget (Mrs. John Cronyn), Thomas, Michael P. (born March 1, 1865, died February 22, 1885), John, Mary, Mattie, and Maggie.

Dennis Dye was born in Litchfield, N. Y., March 15, 1805. In 1830 he removed to western New York, and from then until his death lived much of the time in Cattaraugus county. In April, 1852, he settled in Allegany as a farmer and died here February 23, 1872. His wife, Minerva Merrill, who was born in Johnstown, N. Y., September 27, 1808, died here September 27, 1887. Their son Nathan A. was born in Litchfield, August 22, 1829, came to Freedom, and thence on March 7, 1852, to this town, where he became a merchant, dying December 5, 1882. A Democrat in politics Mr. Dye was elected to many town offices and in 1871 became justice of sessions of the county. Jan. 26, 1851, he married Rosaline, daughter of Oliver Moore, a farmer and an early settler of Freedom and subsequently (in 1869) a resident of Allegany, where he died March 2, 1877. Mr. Moore was born in Vermont, April 6, 1804, and his wife, Judith Pixley, Jan. 12, 1796. Mr. and Mrs. Dye had born to them these children: Charles O., born May 18, 1852, died December 29, 1887; Mason M., born May 6, 1854; Jennie R., Sept. 23, 1858; Edwina M., July 11, 1860; William H., Nov. 19, 1862; Nellie B., Sept. 3, 1868; and Nathan E., October 14, 1870, died Sept. 14, 1871. Mrs. Dye died Dec. 22, 1892. Mason M. and William H. are bankers in Allegany village. Mason M. was supervisor of Allegany from 1886 to 1889 inclusive.

Isaac Eggleston, born in Vermont, February 13, 1792, came with his brother to Onondaga county about 1808, where in 1819 he married Rebecca Hopping. In 1820 they settled in Olean and finally removed to Allegany, locating on Five Mile creek and subsequently on Nine Mile run, where Mr. Eggleston died May 17, 1872. His wife died February 15, 1872. They had eight children, three of whom died in infancy; the others are Eliza A. (Mrs. Jeremiah Atwood), Clarissa A. (Mrs. Cornelius Gillett), deceased, John W., Almira B. (Mrs. Horace O. Spicer), and Rev. Charles C. John W. Eggleston married, first, Lydia L. Bliss, Dec. 2, 1858, by whom he had three children, Cora, Charles L., and William F. He married, second, August 27, 1873, Euphonia A., daughter of Abel and Lucy (Hadsell) Burdick.

George Eisert was born in Buffalo on the 7th of February, 1860, and came to Allegany in 1874 and engaged in peeling bark, beginning his present business in 1880. September 2, 1884, he was married to Anna Fick, who has borne him three children: Frank J., James W., and Lena. Mr. Eisert is a respected citizen and a prominent factor in the German population of the town.

John C. Emmons was born in Corning, June 13, 1856. There he received his education. He married Ella Born, of Cuba, Sept. 15, 1880, and came to Allegany in 1883. Mr. Emmons is an experienced and reliable pharmacist. His is the leading drug store in Allegany village.

James Henry Farquharson, son of Francis and Margaret A. Farquharson, was born in East Pike, Wyoming county, March 23, 1837. He became a telegraph operator in 1854 and performed the duties of that avocation in several stations in Cattaraugus county, receiving the appointment at Allegany on May 1, 1856. His wife, Marion J. Hale, of Hinsdale, whom he married August 19, 1856, bore him six children: Francis H., Fred H., William L., Millie J., Charles B., and Van Deusen. Mr. Farquharson held many offices of trust, including that of supervisor on the Greenback ticket in 1878, and was prominently connected with the business, religious, and educational interests of the town and county.

Nicholas Felt, a native of Germany, was born May 3, 1823, and came to America in 1849. His first home was in Buffalo, from whence he moved to this town about 1861 with his brother-in-law. Three years prior to this, however, he had purchased his present home. His wife was Margaret Lichten-thal, who was born in Germany, December 31, 1827, and whom he married September 14, 1849. Children: Mary (Mrs. Joseph Karl), Magdalena (Mrs. Louis Colt), Katie (Mrs. Albert Karl), Margaret (Mrs. Andrew Rehler), Joseph, John (who married Angie Clark), Nicholas, and Annie. The family are all exemplary, industrious citizens and are counted among the town's representative settlers.

James Freeland was born in Caroline, N. Y., May 11, 1810. His father, Robert Freeland, born in the North of Ireland about 1773, came to America in 1798 and settled in Tompkins county, where he married Catharine Robinson in 1800. He was a farmer and mechanic. James Freeland attended the common schools and worked on his father's farm. May 23, 1833, he married Lucinda, daughter of Jonathan Norwood, Esq., of Caroline, and in 1836 removed to Allegany with his wife and two children. He soon became an expert river pilot, which occupation he followed for thirty years and never had a "break-up," but always landed his rafts safely at their place of destination. He was prominent and popular, and constantly in town offices until his retirement on account of old age. He successfully filled the offices of highway commissioner, justice of the peace, assessor, and postmaster. In 1876 he was the Democratic nominee for member of Congress. The characteristics that distinguish his life are enterprise, perseverance, honesty, and integrity. Mr. and Mrs. Freeland's children are Dolphus S., who married Fannie E. Norwood in October, 1868, and now resides in Maywood, Neb., where he is postmaster;

Jonathan B., who married Mariette Hardy, November 2, 1859, and is a minister of the Free Methodist church; Ruvena, who married Rev. Randolph Worthington, October 30, 1873; James A., who married Lottie E. Soule, November 27, 1870, resides in Allegany; and Mabel L., who married Rev. H. H. Loomis.

Jacob Gallets, Sr., was born in 1815 in Germany, where he married Susan, daughter of Jacob Mohr. With an only son they came to Allegany in the spring of 1853. Jacob Mohr had contracted for 250 acres of wild land on Four Mile creek, which was worked by himself and three sons, Henry, Joseph, and Peter, and John Blazur and Jacob Gallets. These pioneers cleared their tract, and in winter were jobbers in cutting logs, spending their evenings in shaving pine shingles, which their wives packed into bunches for market. Upon the division of the 250-acre tract Jacob Gallets received thirty-seven and one-half acres as his share. He added to this from time to time and at his death, February 10, 1879, had a farm of 360 acres. His widow survives him. Their children were Henry, Marcus, Mary, Joseph A., Jacob, Jr., Henry, Anna, and Barbara. Henry died in infancy. Marcus Gallets was born in Germany, October 4, 1852, married Lucy Brand, of Allegany, and resides in Pennsylvania. Mary was born here May 7, 1854, married Philip Geiser, and lives in Olean. Joseph A. In that year he located on his present farm. Dec. 27, 1880, he married Mary Noonan and their children are Celia, Fred, Clara (deceased), Albert, Agnes, and Eddie.

James Strong, son of Solomon and Mary (White) Strong, born in Vermont, May 3, 1868, married Catharine Clifford, of New Hampshire, in 1799, came to Olean in 1819, and two years later removed to Allegany, settling where the widow of his son James, Jr., now resides. The first marriage in Allegany occurred at his house, being that of his daughter Sally to William B. Fox in 1825. James Strong died April 20, 1839, and his wife, Catharine, Aug. 16, 1852. Their children were Almeda, Solomon, Sally, Emily, Luthera, James, Jr., Catharine, Adeline, William, and Jame A., all deceased. James Strong, Jr., married Carmale, daughter of Rhody (Andrews) May, of Hinsdale, April 25, 1857, and died in June, 1882. His widow survives him and lives on the old homestead. Their children were Eola and Lew J. Eola, born Oct. 30, 1858, married Frank Lemon and has two children, Lew S. and Fred H. Lew J., born Nov. 22, 1864, is a farmer and resides on the homestead. William May, father of Mrs. James Strong, Jr., died in 1840 and his wife Rhody in 1844.

Davis Thornton, born in Allegany county, July 2, 1828, came to this town when eighteen years of age and followed lumbering and rafting on the Allegheny river until 1889. In the spring of 1890 he built the Allegheny River House near the Indian reservation. He married, first, Abigail, daughter of Richard H. McCoy, who was the mother of his son David. Mrs. Thornton died May 27, 1856. His second wife was Lydia A. Frank, by whom he has three daughters, Katie, Mary, and Abbie.

William H. Wheeler was born in Washington county, January 1, 1824. He married Rebecca Lindsley, July 4, 1845, who was born October 15, 1826. Mr. Wheeler came to this county when about ten years of age, with his parents, who settled in Yorkshire. He now resides in Allegany and is a farmer. He has two brothers, Charles M. and Joseph A. Wheeler, and one sister, Mrs. Helen M. Spalding, who reside in this town. William H. Wheeler has eleven children: Devillow, born in Yorkshire, October 4, 1846, enlisted in the late war at the age of sixteen in Co. I, 154th N. Y. Vols., and starved to death at Andersonville prison; William W., born at Yorkshire, August 26, 1848, served in the late war in Co. A, 188th N. Y. Vols., married Julia H., daughter of Marshall and Emma Hatch, April 23, 1874, who was born November 1, 1856, and has six children, Jennie R., Alice A., J. Russell, George P., William W., Jr., and Matie E.; Myron Devereux, born in Allegany, December 8, 1850, married Emeline Redout, and resides in South Saginaw, Mich.; George C., who died in infancy; Caroline H., born May 9, 1855, married John Curtiss, Jr.; Halsey A., born June 28, 1858, married Emelia Redout; Hannah L., born June 25, 1860, married Russell Haynes; Nancy, born February 7, 1863, married Theodore Peterson, and died in 1879; Guy I., born October 15, 1866, in Allegany; John H., born September 18, 1869, died in infancy; and Ada, born February 1, 1872, married John Kahn.

Dwight W. Ward, second son of Robert D. and Mary A. (Haney) Ward, was born in Jamestown, N. Y. Robert D. was an only son and was born in Ireland, October 20, 1812, emigrating thence to America in 1828, the voyage lasting three months. Learning the cabinet maker's trade in Bath, N. Y., where he married Mary A. Haney on September 24, 1833, he removed to Jamestown, where he ran a foundry for fourteen years, when he engaged in hotel keeping until his death in 1857. His widow with her family removed to Allegany in 1859 and resides with her daughter, Mrs. William H. Smith. Their children were Elida S. (Mrs. W. H. Smith), Hibbard P., Dwight W., John D. (deceased), and Mary E. (deceased). Dwight W. Ward was born February 12, 1849. Coming to this town in 1859 he subsequently purchased what was known as Ward's Hotel, now called Park Hotel, which he conducted until 1883, when he engaged in the business of developing the oil fields and producing oil, in which he has been one of the most extensive operators in town.

Henry Wilber was born in the town of Humphrey, and has one child, Henry S., who was born in Allegany, Jan. 21, 1884. Mr. Wilber is manager of Sheldon's Allegany cheese factory. His father, Philo C. Wilber, came from Onondaga county to this county when about nine years of age. He married Catherine Palmer.

Erastus Willard, son of Sherlock and Elizabeth (Reynolds) Willard, was born in Lisle, N. Y., March 23, 1823, while his parents were moving from Fort Edward to Cattaraugus county. The family settled in Franklinville.

In the fall of 1843 he came to Allegany (then Burton) and taught a district school, which closed in March, 1844. In December of this year he began his mercantile life in this town. Mr. Willard began a small business with small means, and constantly increased both until he finally had one of the largest and best stores in western New York. He took an active interest in local Democratic politics, and was supervisor in 1850 and from 1865 to 1867 inclusive, and served his town as justice of the peace about forty years. In 1877 he was his party's candidate for member of Assembly, but his district being overwhelmingly Republican he was defeated. He was loyal and true during the Rebellion, and although he was not drafted he nevertheless, in accordance with his convictions of duty, placed a substitute in the army. April 26, 1848, he married Harriet A., daughter of Henry Huntley and a native of Herkimer, N. Y., and granddaughter of Abner Huntley, who was born near Bunker Hill, Mass., in 1767. Her father was born in 1804 and she was born in Cuba, N. Y., Dec. 25, 1828. Mr. Willard's children were Charles, born in Allegany, March 11, 1849, died Nov. 10, 1865; Clare, born July 28, 1870, who is his father's successor in business and the proprietor of Willard's Stock Farm; and Hattie, born Aug. 5, 1872, died Sept. 7th following. Mr. Willard died Dec. 31, 1889. Mr. and Mrs. Willard were active members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Allegany and he was one of its liberal supporters.

William Wiltse was a native of Marcellus, Onondaga county, and was born April 2, 1802. On the 26th of April, 1821, he married Sophia Hall, who was born in Connecticut on March 10, 1800. They came to Allegany in the spring of 1848 and the next year built a hotel, which they kept until 1859, when they engaged in farming, continuing in it until his death Oct. 7, 1865, her death occurring June 5, 1874. Their children were Cornell, Charles C., and Danford W. Cornell Wiltse, born May 16, 1824, came to this town with his parents, and married Electa Jones, of Hinsdale; they have one child, Wesley C., a Baptist preacher who married Louisa Wilber, of Allegany. Charles C. Wiltse was born December 19, 1827, and died May 28, 1866. Dec. 7, 1847, he married Abigail Kenyon, who survives him and resides in this town; their daughter Orcelia is the wife of Orran Van Brunt. Danford W. Wiltse was born Aug. 17, 1833; he resides in Springville, N. Y. Amos Jones, the father of Mrs. Cornell Wiltse, came with his wife Eliza to Allegany in 1841 and in 1867 removed to Minnesota. They had eleven children.

Asa S. Wing was born in Oneida county, March 7, 1837. He came to East Otto with his parents when twelve years of age. He was a soldier in the late war in Co. G, 154th N. Y. Vols., and was taken prisoner at Gettysburg and confined in Libby prison. He came to Allegany in 1865. Mr. Wing married, first, Louisa Blower, of Oneida county; their three children died in infancy. His second wife, Catharine Connhaiser, whom he married in June, 1862, was born in Germany, March 9, 1837. Their children were Eliza L. (Mrs. Thomas A. Barnes), Nelson, Julia, Edward, Emma, Georgie Anna, Charles E., Elizabeth C., and Samuel.

Frederick J. Woodard, born in Bolivar, Allegany county, July 16, 1859, learned the printer's trade at Wellsville in the office of the Allegany County Reporter, and was employed three years in the Herald office in Olean. In 1885 he came to Allegany and purchased the farm where he now lives. He married Anna Franklin, of Portround, Ontario, Canada, Oct. 26, 1881, and by her has had two children: George and Artiemarie.

William F. Zink, born in Germany, Feb. 3, 1828, emigrated to Buffalo with his parents in 1831. He came to this town in 1855 and is engaged in farming. Mr. Zink married, Feb. 3, 1851, May C. Crique, who was born in Buffalo, Oct. 9, 1829. She is said to have been the first German child born in that city. Their children were William, Jr., born Nov. 23, 1851, married Rickey Kenoch; Minnie, born Feb. 3, 1853, married John W. Robinson; Frank, born June 8, 1856, married Rosa Multus; Libbie, born April 15, 1859, married, first, April 24, 1877, Sebastian Smith, who died Sept. 13, 1880, and second, Sept. 18, 1883, Joseph H. Multus, and their children are Mary, Libbie, and Joseph, Jr., Mrs. Multus's first children being Frank and Nellie Smith; John F., born May 5, 1861, married Lizzie Linehart; George H., born June 6, 1865, married Mary Reitz; Mary Z., born Aug. 7, 1870, died Sept. 28, 1870; and Mary M., born June 29, 1872. Francis Zink, father of William F. Zink, was born in Germany in 1800. He there married Bridget Britchel, who with him came to America in 1831, settling at Eden Corners, Erie county. He died May 29, 1855, in Allegany, at the residence of his son. His wife survived him until April 9, 1880.

Michael Zister, born in Germany about 1818, came to Buffalo about 1850, and a few years later settled in Allegany. He had thirteen children, of whom seven are living. His wife was Louisa A. Weaver, who died in 1888. Michael Zister died in 1867. John Zister, son of Michael, was born in Buffalo, Jan. 3, 1856. He came to Allegany with his parents and married Elizabeth, daughter of Sebastian Hyde, Aug. 16, 1880. They have had born to them five children, viz.: Edna C., Alice L., Clara E., Clarence, and Laura A.

CHAPTER XIX.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF ASHFORD.

WHEN the territory embraced in the county of Cattaraugus was set off from Genesee county in 1808 Ashford formed a part of the immense town of Olean. In 1812 it was embraced in the new town of Ischua; in 1820 it was included in Ellicottville, and remained the northern part of that town until set off February 16, 1824, when it became a separate municipality by the election of a full set of town officers on the first Tuesday in March, 1824, viz.: Johnson Bensley, supervisor; Seth Allen, town clerk; Ebenezer C. Sherman, Truman Bensley, and Isaac Woodruff, assessors; Avery Smith, David Oyer, and Peter Sampson, commissioners of highways; Nathan Saunders and David Oyer, overseers of the poor; David Oyer, constable and collector; and Norman B. Carter, George Arnold, and Daniel Thomas, school commissioners.

This town is situated in the northern tier of townships, and is bounded on the north by Cattaraugus creek, which separates it from Erie county, on the east by Yorkshire and Machias, on the south by Ellicottville and a part of East

Otto, and on the west by East Otto. A part of Otto was annexed April 13, 1835, and Ashford now has an area of 33,779 acres. The southern part of the town lies on the dividing height of land in the county. The water from the northern portions finds its way to the sea through the St. Lawrence river and that from the south part flows into the Allegheny. The town has an uneven, broken surface, with hills 300 feet above the valleys, the highest of which are in the south part. The principal streams are Cattaraugus, Buttermilk, and Connoirtoirauley creeks. Cattaraugus creek, the northern boundary of the town, flows with numerous bends and takes a southwesterly course. Buttermilk creek rises in the south part of the town and flows north into Cattaraugus creek. It derives its name from the whitish color of its waters. Connoirtoirauley creek rises in the southwestern part of the town, flows in a northwesterly direction, forms the northern part of the western boundary, and is tributary to Cattaraugus creek. Its ugly name signifies to the Indians "an ugly stream." The soil is a clayey loam on the uplands and a gravelly loam in the valleys.

It is not positively known who was the first actual settler in Ashford. It is quite probable that several families came nearly simultaneously and made settlements in and near Ashford Hollow about 1817. Among the very early pioneers were William and George Shultis from Columbia county; Henry Frank and two sons, Andrew and Jacob H., and Augustus Van Slyke from Herkimer county; and Nathan Saunders, a native of Massachusetts. The latter was a man of some prominence in the new town and was elected one of the overseers of the poor at the first meeting in 1824. On the Shultis farm was an old beaver dam and an open space of some thirty acres, on which they erected a log house, which for many years was a halting-place for emigrants. The brothers opened for the Holland Land Company what in early years was called the Shultis road, which was little used and finally abandoned. Andrew Frank served in the War of 1812, and his daughter Phebe died August 30, 1818, which was the first death in Ashford. Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob H. Frank, was the first white child born in town, her birth occurring in the fall of 1817. Van Slyke married a daughter of Andrew Frank and was prominent in the organization of the first religious society in Ashford. David and John Oyer settled in 1818 or '19. The latter cleared the farm now owned by A. B. Neff. In 1828 he built the first saw-mill erected in Ashford Hollow. David Oyer married another daughter of Andrew Frank. He erected the first saw-mill in town and held several offices. About 1833 Abel French and David B. Jewett built the first grist-mill at Ashford Hollow. The building has since been converted into a dwelling and is now the house of Simon Oyer. Very soon after these came Jacob Bargy, a son-in-law of Henry Frank, a soldier in the War of 1812, and a justice of the peace in 1830. Another early settler was John Goodemote, who was interested in building a school house and possibly more interested in who should erect the building and have the money for the job. On this question he approached Nathan Saunders and said:

"Meesder Saunders, ve must puilt a school houdst ver de childers! You oppinate me for drusdee, I oppinate you! Den ve puilt de school houdst and have de monies!" In 1822 he traded farms with Peter Sampson and moved across Cattaraugus creek, erected a distillery, and made whisky.

Jacob Hufstader came from Herkimer county in 1818. Peter Quackenbush came in 1819 and his father John H. in 1821. The latter built the first tavern in town. John Holdridge, Elijah Parmeter, Tristram Dodge, and Asahel Nye came here about the year 1819. Philip Bonsteel, who came about the same time, held several town offices before Ashford was set off from Ellicottville. In 1823 he removed with his son Henry to Otto. Isaac Woodruff, who settled in the town in 1820, was one of the first assessors. Amos and David Thomas made the first settlement in the neighborhood of Thomas's Corners about 1822. Here was built and kept the first school in town this same year, the same winter another being taught by N. B. Carter in the southern part. At the house of Amos Thomas was held the first town meeting. Henry Frank, Sr., and Griffin and David Wildey came about 1821. Seth Allen settled in Ashford Hollow in 1822 and opened a grocery store, the first in the town. He also built an ashery and manufactured pearlash, and was the first town clerk. Abram Laing at one time conducted a brewery about a mile and a half east of Ashford Hollow. French & Jewett bought the saw-mill at Ashford Hollow of John Oyer and constructed in separate buildings a saw-mill and a grist-mill. Isaac Bellows, from Montgomery county, was a prominent settler and liked by all his neighbors. He served nine years as assessor.

Other settlers in Ashford between 1820 and 1830 were Michael C. Hufstader, Austin Pratt, Anderson Rowland, Joseph T., Norman B., and Russell M. Carter, Jacob and Frederick Frank, sons of Henry Frank, Jr., John D. Quackenbush, Peter Sampson and family, Ebenezer C. Sherman, George Arnold, Jeremiah Wilcox, Timothy Stevens, James Flagg, Amos B. Fuller, Job Bigelow, John Bond, Alexander Scobey, David R. Upson, Daniel M. Cole, Freeborn Joslyn, Solomon Day, Albert Williams, William Rice, Nathaniel Hurd, Truman, Johnson, and David Bensley, Truman Crummell, and William Wait and sons. Joseph and Norman Carter lived bachelor lives for many years. The latter, in 1823, built the first frame barn and was one of the first school teachers in town. Jacob Frank opened the first blacksmith shop. Peter Sampson was prominent in town affairs, held several offices and positions of trust, was for many years mail carrier on the route from Buffalo to Olean, and died December 8, 1836. Alexander Scobey was another eminent settler, became interested largely in mills, erected a bridge one hundred and eighty-five feet long across Cattaraugus creek in 1862, and finally removed to Freedom. The hamlet long known as Riceville was named in honor of William M. Rice, who built a saw-mill soon after he settled there.

Ashford is an agricultural town whose grass is king, and dairying is the leading industry. The early settlers were fortunately men of great physical powers and resolution, and most of them had abundant energy and stability of purpose. As a class they came to the wilderness empty-handed, filled with the enterprise of hewing comfortable homes out of the forest by long-continued toil. They were men of good morals, honest, persevering, and industrious—most of them strong and stalwart, and came to stay, and several of the farms of these original settlers are now owned by their descendants. They commenced an active onslaught on the heavy forest, carefully saved the ashes from the burned timber converted them into black-salts, saved the money to pay taxes and to buy positive necessities, and kept their wants within what they could supply. The quick virgin soil produced excellent crops and in time they were abundantly rewarded for their toil and privations.

The principal town officers from 1824 to the present time are as follows:

Supervisors.—Johnson Bensley, 1824; Peter Sampson, 1825-30, 1832-33; Arnold Holden, 1831; Jeremiah Wilcox, 1834-36, 1838; David R. Upson, 1837; David B. Jewett, 1839-40, 1843-45; David Pierce, 1841; Thomas Pierce, Jr., 1842; J. J. Frank, 1846-47; Alexander Scobey, 1848, 1850-53; Alanson King, 1849; A. B. Wilson, 1854-55, 1866; Joseph Hammond, 1856; Copeland Remington, 1857-58; Boutelle A. Lowe, 1859-60, 1863-64; Francis P. Rice, 1861-62, 1865, 1873; George N. West, 1867-68, 1877; Andrew B. Neff, 1869, 1871-72, 1875-76, 1887, 1889-91, 1893; John Quackenbush, 1870; George W. Oyer, 1874; Asher C. Porter, 1878; William C. Kruse, 1879-80; John L. Murphy, 1881-82; George H. Hughey, 1883, 1885, 1892; A. O. Tillinghast, 1884; John L. Oyer, 1886, 1888.

Clark, 1833; Henry House, 1836; Warner Frank, 1846; Jeremiah Frank, 1847; David Ward, 1848-51; Francis P. Rice, 1852, 1854, 1859, 1871-72; John Reed, 1853; Orange Hammond, 1855; John Multer, 1856; James J. Bargy, 1857; Francis J. Kine, 1858; Alonzo Wiltse, 1860, 1863; John Ellis, 1861; Seward Robbins, 1862; Frederick A. Clark, 1864-65; J. B. Larabee, 1868; Charles N. Sherman, 1867-68; George W. Oyer, 1869-70; Charles F. Ballou, 1873; Clark K. Day, 1874; Charles Holden, 1875-76; William Kruse, 1877-78; J. Eugene Williams, 1879; A. H. Murphy, 1880; William H. Proctor, 1881; Alanson King, 1882-84; C. B. Pettengill, 1885-87, 1889; Grant Smith, 1888; Robert Hughey, 1890-91; Leonard Proctor, 1892-93.

Justices of the Peace.—1830, Jacob P. Bargy; 1831, David R. Upson, Arnold Holden; 1832, Seth Allen; 1833, William M. Rice; 1834, Norman B. Carter; 1835, D. K. Upson; 1836, S. Allen; 1837, W. M. Rice; 1838, A. Holden; 1839, John W. Crosby; 1840, Thomas Pierce; 1841, Joseph Remington; 1842, A. Holden; 1843, Sylvester Fitch; 1844, Alexander Scobey, Charles C. Bigelow; 1845, J. Remington; 1846, A. Holden, Andrew Stevens; 1847, C. C. Bigelow; 1848, J. J. Frank; 1849, A. Stevens; 1850, A. Holden; 1851, C. C. Bigelow; 1852, J. J. Frank; 1853, Albert Holland; 1854, A. Holden; 1855, C. C. Bigelow; 1856, Thomas Pierce; 1857, John L. Murphy; 1858, Jacob Multer; 1859, Ambrose Upson; 1860, George C. McKay; 1861, J. L. Murphy; 1862, J. Multer; 1863, A. R. Upson; 1864, G. C. Parmenter; 1865, J. L. Murphy; 1866, J. Multer, T. Pierce; 1867, Paul H. Wiedrig; 1868, Bela Remington, Chester J. Lowe; 1869, J. L. Murphy; 1870, J. Multer, J. B. Weber; 1871, William Pierce; 1872, P. S. Aldrich; 1873, J. L. Murphy; 1874, L. C. Robbins; 1875, J. Multer, W. Pierce; 1876, J. S. Aldrich; 1877, J. L. Murphy; 1878, J. Multer; 1879, J. B. Weber; 1880, C. D. Day; 1881, C. O. Holden; 1882, Jacob Hanson, W. H. Proctor; 1883, George Wrangle, Alanson King; 1884, C. D. Day, J. L. Murphy; 1885, W. H. Proctor; 1886, A. King; 1887, J. Multer; 1888, Charles Williams; 1889, W. H. Proctor, A. H. Murphy; 1890, A. H. Murphy; 1891, J. Multer; 1892, Charles A. Williams; 1893, W. H. Proctor.

Ashford has never been a manufacturing town. What is now done is limited to grinding feed, sawing lumber and shingles, cooperage, and preparing building materials. David Oyer contracted for his lands in 1816, but did not settle upon them until 1819. He built the first saw-mill in town in 1826 on Connoirtorauley creek. A saw-mill was built by William M. Rice at Riceville in 1834. Samuel Hanan built another soon after at West Valley. The present mills of Samuel Oyer, situated at Ashford Hollow, are furnished with water-power with steam as auxiliary. Mr. Oyer manufactures lumber, shingles, and cheese-boxes and grinds feed. The motive power for the sawmill of E. F. Reynolds is furnished by a thirty horse-power engine. The mill has a capacity of 10,000 feet of lumber a day.

A. Ehman & Company's mills at West Valley are operated by a forty-five horse-power engine and will saw 8,000 feet of lumber, 8,000 shingles, and 5,000 lath and grind four tons of feed daily.

The West Valley Manufacturing Company was incorporated in 1889. The officers are George N. Waite, president; John L. Oyer, vice-president; and G. W. Oyer, secretary and treasurer. The company manufactures 100,000 feet of building materials, 100,000 sets of heading, and large numbers of barrels, tubs, etc., per annum. The motive power is a forty-five horse-power engine.

Ashford, or Ashford Hollow, is a small village on Connoirtoirauley creek near the southwest corner of the town. It contains a postoffice and hotel, two stores, a physician's office, one church edifice, a public school, one saw-mill, a harness shop, two blacksmith shops, two wagon shops, a furniture store, and about 150 inhabitants.

West Valley is a thrifty post village located in the southeast part of Ashford on the Buffalo branch of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad. The village contains one hotel, three churches (Freewill Baptist, German Lutheran, and Evangelical Association), a doctor's office, seven stores, one public school building, one furniture store, two blacksmith shops, a harness shop, a woodworking manufactory, one saw and shingle-mill, several societies and orders, and a population of about 200.

East Ashford (formerly Riceville) is a small post village situated on the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad and on Buttermilk creek, about two and one-half miles north of West Valley. It contains two churches (Methodist and Congregational), a public school, two stores, a blacksmith shop, a saw-mill, and about seventy-five inhabitants.

The West Valley Literary Institute was organized in December, 1889, by A. O. Tillinghast and ten associates. It now has thirty-two members. The officers are J. C. West, Jr., president, and Mrs. J. C. Holden, secretary. Regular meetings are held every Thursday evening from December to May, and are open to the public one each month.

The Lively Times Library was organized February 17, 1887, with A. O. Tillinghast librarian. This association consists of twenty members and the library contains fifty volumes.

The Ashford Mutual Fire Insurance Company was organized in 1877 and re-organized in 1880. The towns representing the association are Ashford, East Otto, Ellicottville, Farmersville, Franklinville, Freedom, Machias, Mansfield, Otto, and Yorkshire. The business of the company is conducted by a board of twelve directors, who are elected annually. The directors elect a president and a secretary. At the annual meeting held January 10, 1893, the secretary reported $1,100,000 of property insured at a cost of less than one-third of any of the regular companies. The basis of insurance is a bonded mutuality, and all losses are paid within sixty days after adjustment by the Board of Directors.

Norman B. Carter and Daniel Thomas were the first to teach schools in the town, the first school houses being erected in 1822, one at Thomas's Corners, the other at or near Ashford Hollow. George Arnold with Messrs. Carter and Thomas, who composed the first Board of School Commissioners, divided the town into two school districts in 1824. The census of 1890 shows that Ashford had a population of 1,710 inhabitants; the State enumeration of 1892 gives only 1,662. The town is divided into thirteen school districts. In 1892 fourteen teachers were employed and schools were maintained in all the districts at a cost of $3,355.31, giving instruction to 399 pupils. The total valuation of taxable property for school purposes is $633,246; the value of the school buildings and sites is $4,875.

Religious services were first held in town at the house of Isaac Woodruff, but of what denomination it is impossible to ascertain. The earliest church organization occurred at Ashford Hollow on October 27, 1821, at the dwelling of Henry Frank, and was known as the First Freewill Baptist Society. Rev. Richard M. Cary came from Erie county a little prior to this and conducted a meeting at Augustus Van Slyke's residence, and organized and became the first pastor of the society above mentioned. Until 1847 meetings were held in the school houses and private dwellings, but that year a church edifice was erected. This was superseded in 1852 by another structure, costing about $1,500, and capable of seating three hundred persons. On September 1, 1828, the Holland Land Company deeded the society fifty acres of land as the first religious organization in town, and on February 20, 1857, this lot was exchanged to furnish means for the completion of the church and parsonage. The society finally disbanded and their house of worship was used for a time by the Church of the United Brethren. The pastors succeeding Rev. Mr. Cary were Revs. Chaffee, Jenkins, Tanner, Webb, Kellogg, Ensign, Parkyn, Flynn, Durfee, Moon, Cornell, Cook, McCoon, Howe, Harlan, Clancy, and Donaker.

The Church of the United Brethren at Ashford Hollow was organized December 17, 1872, by Rev. John H. Smith, the first pastor. The original membership was twenty-one. The society held services for a number of years in the Baptist church.

The Baptist church of Ashford Hollow was formed about 1843, with Asa and Anderson Rowland and wives, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Maybe, and Rev. and Mrs. Orasmus Tayntor as first members. An edifice was erected in 1851 and dedicated January 6, 1852. The first and only pastor was Rev. Mr. Tayntor. In February, 1865, their building was burned and the society shortly afterward disbanded.

An Anti-Slavery Church Society was organized in the Weber neighborhood about 1844, conducted services for a few years in the school house, and finally went down.

The First Congregational church of East Ashford was organized February 10, 1854, by its first pastor, Rev. C. B. Lord. Those who formed its first membership were Tracy and Harriet Ensworth, Elias and Laura Hopkins, J. S. and Cordelia H. Aldrich, Sulphina H. Remington, Judson Witse, Alonzo Hadley, Fessenden Hadley, and Nelson Hadley. The first house of worship, built in 1855, is a wooden structure still in use. It has seats for an audience of four hundred and originally cost $2,000. The entire church property is now valued at $2,800. The Sunday school has an average attendance of fifty members. The church membership is forty-six with Rev. W. H. Peck, pastor.

The Methodist Episcopal church of East Ashford was organized in 1855 with about sixty members, by Rev. C. P. Clark, who was its first pastor. As early as 1832 a Methodist class was formed at the school house in the neighborhood, Ebenezer C. Sherman and Rev. Mr. Proper being among the first members with the latter as the first preacher. The society was without a church edifice until 1856, when a neat building of wood was erected at a cost of $1,000. It has a seating capacity of 300 people and with the grounds is valued at $2,000. The membership is thirty with Rev. Hugh Boyd, pastor. The Sunday school has fifty scholars and six teachers.

In consequence of the decided opinions growing out of Masonic and slavery questions a number of the members of the East Ashford M. E. church severed their connection with that body and in 1845 organized the Wesleyan Methodist Society, which continued with irregular preaching until 1855, when it united with the Congregationalists and Baptists in the erection of a house of worship.

The East Ashford Baptist Society was organized with forty members June 12, 1833, the first preacher being Rev. Mr. Loomis. Its membership was small and services were held in connection with the Congregational and Wesleyan Methodist Societies.

In the spring of 1832 a Presbyterian church was formed in a log school house near East Ashford, with eight members, under the pastoral charge of Rev. William J. Wilcox. No regular preaching was sustained and the society after a brief existence disbanded.

St. John's church (Roman Catholic) is located at West Valley. It was organized in 1860 by Rev. John Ahrend with fifteen members. The first house of worship was built of wood the same year. Rev. Mr. Ahrend was the first pastor. In 1884 the present church edifice was erected at a cost of $3,500. It has a seating capacity of 200. The present value of the property is $4,200. The church has a membership of 200 with Rev. Charles Schillo, pastor. The Sunday school is attended by twenty scholars.

The First Freewill Baptist church of West Valley was organized by Rev.

H. H. Clancey, January 5, 1873, with twelve members. Rev. Mr. Clancey was the first pastor. The present house of worship was erected the same year at an expense of $1,600, the seating capacity being 225. The church now has seventeen members with Rev. D. W. Pierce, pastor. The present value of the church property is $1,600. The Sunday school is attended by thirty-five scholars and four teachers.

The Seventh Day Adventists formed an organization May 6, 1883, with a membership of six. Rev. F. Peabody, who was instrumental in bringing the society into existence, was the first pastor. This church has no house of worship and at present is without a pastor. Their Sabbath school has twenty-one scholars.

The German Lutheran Church and Society was organized in 1865 by Rev. John Bernreuther, who was the first pastor. It then consisted of thirty members. In 1866 the present church edifice was erected at a cost of $2,000. The society has about seventy members and Rev. Charles Peters is pastor.

West Valley church (Evangelical Association) was organized with twenty-one members by Rev. Fred Hehr in 1869. They erected their house of worship the same year, the cost being $2,000. It has seats for about two hundred people, and with the grounds and other church property is now valued at $3,500. Rev. Fred Hehr was the first pastor. The church now has fifty-two members with Rev. Conrad Pfeffer in charge. The Sunday school is attended by forty-five scholars and five teachers.

West Valley Lodge, No. 35, K. O. T. M., was organized by M. E. Barnes, of Carrollton, August 7, 1886, with fifteen members, the present number being seventy-six. Hazel Tent, L. O. T. M., was organized by Miss Lucy Osborn, of Buffalo, with twenty-one members.

Starks enlisted Sept. 17, 1861, in Co. A, 106th N. Y. Vols., and re-enlisted in February, 1864. He was wounded and captured at the battle of the Wilderness and died in Andersonville prison in September following.

Ebenezer Stowell, a native of Worcester, Mass., was born in 1782, married Hannah Meacham, who was born in New Salem, Mass., in 1787, and emigrated with his family to Ashford in 1836, where he died in 1845. They had born to them eight children. His son, Charles E. Stowell, married Susan, daughter of Joseph Weast. Their children now living are Haplona (Mrs. Daniel Wilcox), of Springville; Mary (Mrs. Edwin Scott), of Springville; Charles E. Stowell, Jr., of Ashford; and Luther M., of Springville.

Arthur O. Tillinghast was born in Sardinia, July 10, 1850, and came to West Valley in 1878, where he has since been engaged in mercantile business. He was supervisor in 1884 and in various ways has shown much enterprise.

Joseph Turner, son of Dyer, came to Ashford from Frankfort, N. Y., in 1835. He was a collier by trade. He married Ellen Kelch, and their surviving children are Harriet E., Horace M., and Jerome J., the latter a soldier for three years in Co. D, 154th N. Y. Vols., being wounded in his right shoulder. Horace M. Turner is a resident of this town and Jerome J. of Great Valley.

Dr. William Wait, born at White Plains, N. Y., in 1784, came from Darien, Genesee county, and made the first settlement in West Valley in 1829. With his sons he cut a road from Riceville to West Valley, and settled on the farm now owned by his grandson, Hudson Waite. He was for a long time the only doctor in the place. He died May 20, 1873. He had four sons and two daughters: Weston, Lorenzo D., Henry, Esek B., Fanny M., wife of Parmenus P. Barlow, and Melissa, who married Apollos Lincoln. Lorenzo D. Waite was born in January, 1807, and came to Ashford with his father. Like many other pioneers they had a hard struggle to live. Their homestead twice reverted to the Holland Land Company. It was finally reclaimed and paid for by Lorenzo D., who in 1849 built a saw-mill on the site of the old tannery which was the only saw-mill in the place for several years. Mr. Waite was a Baptist. He held several town offices, and in the State militia he attained the rank of captain. He died February 12, 1877. Mr. Waite married, first, Laney Quackenbush, of Ashford, who was the mother of Hudson, Charlotte, and Sarah A. (deceased). He married, second, Nancy M., daughter of James Leach, and their children were Lovinus B., a Union soldier who died in Lincoln hospital of fever contracted in front of Richmond; George N., of West Valley; and Ira, deceased. Hudson Waite was born December 16, 1834, and is a farmer and formerly a dealer in horses and cattle and breeder of fine Holstein cattle. With his son he is now breeding thorough blooded Shropshire sheep, their fine flock numbering 160 head. Mr. Waite married Lydia A., daughter of James Leach, and their children are James S., of Salamanca, and Bert L. George N. Waite, born January 26, 1847, was a farmer with his father until 1865, when he learned the carpenter's trade. For several years he has been a millwright and a contractor and builder. Since 1882 he has also been a dealer in lumber. He married Adelaide Hitchcock, of Ashford, who died and left one child, Thirza J. He married, second, Mary J. Scott, of North Collins, N. Y.

Conrad Weast came from Schenectady in 1829 and was the first settler on the farm where his grandson, George W. Weast, now lives. Mr. Weast married Anna, daughter of Martin Shultis. Their children were Stephen C., Sally, Francis, Susannah, Clark, and Lewis O. Stephen C. Weast, born in Schenectady, was six months of age when his parents came to Ashford. He married Sally, daughter of John Goodemote, and had five children: Augusta A., Julia E., Josephine (Mrs. William Vosburg), George W., and John L. George W. Weast, born in Ashford, November 12, 1859, married Edna O., daughter of Daniel Schoonover, of Tuscarora, N. Y. Their children are Myrtle, George L., and Anna.

Benjamin Weast was born in Schenectady and came to Ashford with his father. He married Olive, daughter of Amos V. Fuller, and has eight children: Mary A. (Mrs. Ozro Cole), of Ashford; Catherine, widow of A. R. Dillingham, of Arcade; Amos B.; Emeline (Mrs. L. F. Bowen); Louisa (Mrs. E. Lindsey), of Yorkshire; Franklin C., of Arcade; Sarah (Mrs. M. J. Lindsey), of Franklinville; and Adelle (Mrs. C. Whitney), of Franklinville.

Amos B. Weast was born in Ashford, and Aug. 8, 1862, enlisted in Co. D, 154th N. Y. Vols., serving to the close of the war. He was promoted corporal in May, 1864, sergeant April 1, 1865, and was honorably discharged June 11, 1865.

Joseph West, son of Jonathan, was born in Galway, Saratoga county, settled in Sempronius, Cayuga county, and a few years later removed to Darien, Genesee county. In 1839 he settled in this town on the farm now owned by Peter Dole and eventually removed to West Valley, where he died. He married Susan, daughter of Peter De Witt, who bore him eleven children. George N. West, second son of Joseph and Susan West, was born in Sempronius, September 25, 1820. He came to Ashford with his parents, but returned to Darien in 1842, where he married Mary A., daughter of Rufus and Jerusha Hall, in 1849. About 1844 he engaged in the sale of merchandise in Attica and in 1857 he settled permanently in Ashford. About 1854 he built the first store in West Valley. It was conducted by William C. West and now forms the rear part of the building occupied by the postoffice and harness shop. In 1858 he opened a store in West Valley, where he kept the first postoffice in 1860. He used his influence in securing the line of railroad through the town of Ashford and was the agent of the railroad company in procuring the right of way. In 1877 the company located a depot at Ashford Junction, which he had urged and recommended, and he was its station agent the ensuing five years, the postoffice there being named in his honor. Mr. West served as supervisor of Ashford in 1867-68 and again in 1877. In November, 1869, and in 1889 he was elected to the Assembly from his district. Mrs. West died January 6, 1890. By her he had these children: Clara A. (Mrs. G. W. Oyer), of West Valley; Leonidas D., a merchant of Dundee, N. Y.; and Ida M. (Mrs. C. D. Stickney), of Buffalo. Mr. West married Mrs. Mary C. Hitchcock, of Oakland, Cal., December 10, 1891.

Rev. James L. West, son of Joseph West, was born in Ashford, June 22, 1838. He began working for wages and supporting himself at thirteen years of age. He obtained a common school education and engaged in farming. He has also been a dealer in live stock for the past thirty years. In 1878 he was licensed as a clergyman of the Free Baptist church and is now the pastor of the church at Rawson. He married Christina, daughter of John D. Quackenbush; children: John E., Cora L. (Mrs. Charles G. Dox), and James C.

Lockward West came to Ashford in 1839. He married Mary, daughter of Joshua Pike, of Springville, who bore him two sons, Eugene and Charles. His second wife was Emeline Wemple, by whom he had seven children: Simon, James, Mina, Fred, Dewitt, Susan, and Eddie.

CHAPTER XX.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF CARROLTON.

CARROLTON lies near the center of the southern tier of townships of the county and is bounded on the north by Great Valley, on the east by Allegany, on the south by Pennsylvania, and on the west by Red House. It was formed from Great Valley on March 9, 1842, and was named in honor of Guy Carrolton Irvine, an early and extensive land proprietor of its territory. The town contains an area of 26,872 acres.

As a township it is decidedly rough and mountainous. Its highest eminence is Bald hill, 800 feet above the valley of the Allegheny, in the southeast part of the town. The finest farming lands are in the valley of the Allegheny river and remain mainly uncultivated, being a portion of the Alleghany Indian reservation. It was originally covered with a magnificent growth of valuable timber which the Indians have sold to their white neighbors. Along Tunaengwant creek (abbreviated Tuna) are fertile lands, and except the territory comprised in the neighborhood of New Ireland and along Nichols run and Trout or Chipmunk creek the remainder of the town is too rough and elevated to be fit for cultivation. Upon the uplands the soil is a clay and shaly loam and in the valleys a rich gravelly loam.

The principal water-course, the Allegheny river, enters the town from Allegany at the hamlet of Vandalia, flows a little south of west a trifle more than half-way across the town, then turns abruptly north and flows into the town of Great Valley. Its only affluent of much size is Tunaengwant creek, which in its course in this town receives the waters of Nichols run from the east, Limestone creek from the west, and several other small brooks. It enters the town from Pennsylvania and flows north with a very moderate descent through the middle of the town and empties into the Allegheny where that river turns to the north.

Carrolton was organized into a town by the election of town officers on the last Tuesday in May, 1842. The officers elected were Ferdinand D. Perkins, supervisor; John Palmer, town clerk; Ira Rice and George W. Farr, justices of the peace; Aaron Kellogg, William L. Wixon, and Ira Rice, assessors; George W. Farr, Peter Zelif, and Levi Leonard, commissioners of highways; John Palmer, William L. Wixon, and F. E. Perkins, commissioners of common schools; John Palmer, William L. Wixon, and Isaac Wright, inspectors of common schools; Lafayette Rose, collector; Isaac Wright, sealer of weights and measures; Lafayette Rose, Dearborn F. Fellows, and Loren E. Lewis, constables; Levi Leonard and George W. Farr, poormasters.

The town records for the years 1843, 1844, and 1845 are missing. The following list of supervisors is complete, as is also the lists of town clerks and justices of the peace excepting the three years mentioned:

Supervisors.—Ferdinand D. Perkins, 1842; L. E. Perkins, 1843; Chase Fuller, 1844-47, 1849, 1851-55; Ira Rice, 1848; Abner O. Hunt, 1850; William Beardsley, 1850-57; James Nichols, 1858-63, 1865, 1876-77; Daniel Smith, 1864, 1866; Felix Baillet, 1867; Nelson Parker, 1863-69; Job Moses, 1870-72; Harper G. Andrews, 1873, 1875; Shep. L. Vibbard, 1874; J. H. Beardsley, 1878-80; M. H. Paxton, 1881; George Paton, 1882; John Goodsell, 1883; E. M. Bell, 1884; E. R. Schoonmaker, 1885-90, 1893; R. J. Watson, 1891-92.

Justices of the Peace.—1842, Ira Rice, George W. Farr; 1846, Enos Parsons, William Grimes; 1847, William Beardsley, V. L. Lowe, Lafayette Rose; 1848, Isaac Freeland, W. Grimes; 1849, Isaac W. Hall, James Fuller; 1850, Chase Fuller, Daniel Warner, Abner O. Hunt; 1851, Eliphalet Roselle; 1852, Ira Rice; 1853, D. Warner; 1854, C. Fuller; 1855, Monroe Hayford, W. Beardsley; 1856, Ira Rice; 1857, D. Warner, Manley C. Fuller; 1858, Michael Wheeler; 1859, J. Baillet, J. A. Hazzard, W. Grimes; 1860, M. Wheeler; 1861, M. J. Titus, Patrick McMahon; 1862, M. C. Fuller, Ira Rice; 1863, James Zelif, John L. Baxter; 1864, Reuben Du Boise, Marshall D. Harris; 1865, Ira Rice; 1866, Shep. L. Vibbard, Isaac Adams; 1867, Job Moses, Charles H. Kellogg; 1868, Milton Westbrook, R. E. Fuller, A. B. Hunt; 1869, A. V. Hill, J. Zelif; 1870, Shep. L. Vibbard; 1871, R. E. Fuller, William J. Clark, Walter J. Wright; 1872, John F. Bassett; 1873, Giles M. Kellogg; 1874, Shep. L. Vibbard, Clark Frank; 1875, Levi H. Stephens; 1876, G. O. Cutler; 1877, Clark Frank; 1878, R. E. Fuller, E. C. Topliiff; 1879, L. H. Stephens; 1880, Shep. L. Vibbard; 1881, David Vannatta, Walter S. Rigdon; 1882, Allen Johnson; 1883, Erwin Davis; 1884, Shep. L. Vibbard, R. E. Fuller; 1885, Thomas Jordan, Allen Johnson; 1886, Allen Johnson, John B. Gasseple; 1887, R. E. Fuller, David Vannatta; 1888, Shep. L. Vibbard; 1889, J. B. Gasseple; 1890, Allen Johnson, John Beatty; 1891, W. H. Gibbs, C. E. Chapman; 1892, Shep. L. Vibbard; 1893, R. E. Fuller.

As near as can be ascertained Stephen and Jesse Morrison, brothers, made the first settlement in Carrolton, at Irvine's Mills, in 1828, where they built the first saw-mill in town. They removed to Pittsburg, Pa. Aaron Kellogg came the same year and remained. Some woodsmen were there earlier for the sole purpose of selecting the finest pine trees, cutting them into logs for sawing, and floating them to mills down the river. This work of devastation began as early as 1814. Jonathan Fuller settled at the mouth of Limestone creek soon after 1828, made a small clearing, and shortly afterward moved to the Moore place farther up the creek. Several settlers came in about 1831. Among them was Levi Leonard, who settled on the Indian reservation on the west bank of the Allegheny just below the mouth of Tuna creek. James O. Beardsley came in February of that year and located on the State line in Tuna valley. Peter Zelif came with his family in the year 1832 and settled on the west side of Tuna creek within the present limits of the village of Limestone. His daughter Harriet, born June 29, 1834, was the first white child born in the town. About the time that Zeliff settled at the village site Samuel Webber, a native of Maine, located on lot 41 and erected a frame house, the first of the kind in the town. Seth Wixon, who had been a soldier in the War of 1812, settled in the valley about a mile north of Limestone. He died in 1850, at the age of sixty-five years. He had nine children. His son Barnabas, with a wife and infant daughter, came about the same time and like his father was a farmer. He died August 1, 1889, aged seventy-nine years.

The first tavern in the town was opened about 1828 by Elias Stone, near the mouth of Tuna creek, and the first store in 1832 by Charles Lewis. The first marriage was that of a Mr. Brown and Emeline Fuller in 1828 and the first death occurred the same year, the deceased being Enoch Fuller. The town settled slowly. The census report of 1845 shows that Carrolton then had only 193 inhabitants; in 1850, 515; in 1860, 779; in 1870, 1,142; in 1880, 2,171; in 1890, 1,884; and by the State enumeration of 1892, 2,096.

The Allegheny river and Tuna creek formed the only thoroughfares of the early settlers, as they had neither roads nor bridges. Small flat-boats, scows, and canoes on these waterways answered a good purpose in lieu of roads and carriages. For a number of years Levi Leonard conducted a ferry at his place on the Allegheny, and not until 1849 was there any attempt made to bridge that stream. Carrolton then raised $1,500 and with the aid of subscriptions outside of the town a bridge was placed across the river near the mouth of Trout run. This site was abandoned after a bridge had been constructed across the river below the mouth of Tuna creek in 1868.

All parts of the town that are inhabited are now furnished with passably good roads. In the matter of railroad facilities Carrolton is especially fortunate. The main line of the Erie enters the town from Allegany at the hamlet of Vandalia, where there is a depot, and follows down the north side of Allegheny river to Carrolton junction, where there is a good depot; the road then turns north and follows the river into Great Valley. The Bradford branch of the Erie extends from Carrolton junction south to Bradford, Pa., along the east side of Tuna creek. There is a depot at Limestone and a place to take and leave passengers at Irvine's Mills. The Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad enters Carrolton from Great Valley with its tracts parallel with the main line of the Erie to Carrolton junction, and thence it runs to Bradford parallel with the Bradford branch of the Erie. It has depots at Carrolton and Limestone. The Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad enters the town opposite Vandalia on the south side of the Allegheny and follows the river across the town. This road has a station at South Carrolton opposite Carrolton junction.

The pioneers in the oil interest in Carrolton began operations as early as 1864, when Dr. James Nichols, Henry Renner, and Daniel Smith sunk a well to the depth of 570 feet near the village of Limestone. They discovered oil, and probably the only reason they did not find it in paying quantities was because they did not sink it deep enough. The Hall Farm Petroleum Company, Job Moses, and others put down several wells, but not until they learned to strike the oil-bearing strata, called the "third sand," at a depth of from 1,000 to 1,200 feet, were they rewarded with success. After that several good producing wells were sunk as early as 1875 and 1876, when farms lying in the supposed oil belt were rented very advantageously by their owners, the excitement grew to a craze, and oil derricks sprung up as if by magic. Some 250 paying wells were producing oil at the time the business was at its zenith. Convenient storage tanks were erected and numerous pipe lines were formed, and an attempt made at refining the crude oil. The largest producing wells gave a yield of about 175 barrels per day, but this amount gradually decreased to a few barrels. Only a few of the wells in Carrolton are now pumped regularly.

In 1828 Stephen and Jesse Morrison (brothers) erected a saw-mill on the site of the present Irvine's Mills, which was the first saw-mill in the town. This mill in time went down, and in 1840 Guy C. Irvine, who had long been the owner of the site, with F. D. Perkins and others built a mill on the opposite side of the stream. But not until 1857, when B. F. Irvine and Nelson Parker put up the present mills, which Mr. Irvine afterward improved, was lumber very extensively manufactured. For some years this firm manufactured from 4,000,000 to 5,000,000 feet of lumber and 2,000,000 shingles annually. They used both steam and water-power. The timber in the vicinity has nearly become exhausted. The mills are now owned by Plumer, Gilfillan, Steele & Co., who manufacture and deal in all kinds of rough and dressed hemlock, flooring, and shingles, making from 1,000,000 to 3,000,000 feet of lumber yearly and employing from ten to twelve men. James I. Wynn is general manager and superintendent.

James Nichols & Co. erected a steam saw-mill in 1856 which had a capacity of cutting 8,000 feet of lumber per day. This mill was built on lot 2, on Nichols run. In 1873 Dr. Nichols removed it to Limestone.

William Grimes, an enterprising lumberman, erected a steam saw-mill of good capacity in 1865 on a small brook about one and one-half miles west of Vandalia, where he did quite an extensive business. His mill was burned in 1874 and at once rebuilt. It is now owned and successfully operated by his son, James H. Grimes.

The Limestone tannery is located in the village of Limestone. The nucleus of this immense manufactory was built by Dodge & Smith in 1858. In 1863 the property was transferred to A. E. & G. W. Palen, who materially enlarged the works and increased the capacity by putting in new machinery. In 1875 F. H. Perry & Co. became the proprietors, and in 1877 they again went through the process of enlarging, renovating, and adding more new machinery. It is now the property of Hoyt Brothers, of New York, who have increased its capacity to such an extent that very few manufactories of the kind in the United States equal it.

Blaisdell Brothers' Wood Company is located near the Allegheny river in the village of Carrolton. The machinery of this manufactory is operated by the combined power of two fifty horse-power engines, to drive which and furnish heat for the drying kilns three eighty horse-power boilers are used. The bundling presses, ninety-six in number, and the cut-off machines are their own inventions. The output of the establishment is 50,000 bundles of kindling wood per day, which loads five cars. This requires a supply of 27,000 cords of wood yearly, which is first sawed lengthwise into strips about one and a half inches square. Thus prepared the material passes to the cut-off machine (a gang of eighteen saws), which cuts it into blocks three inches long, drops them into a screen where they are separated from sawdust, and passes them through a chute to the elevator, which carries them to the top of the drying kiln, which is forty-eight feet deep by one hundred and twenty feet long. This is kept full and constantly heated. The wood thus thoroughly dried is taken out at the bottom of the kiln and tied into bundles ready for market. The item for strings alone aggregates $100 per day. The company gives employment to 170 operatives and pays monthly for wages from $5,500 to $6,000. For the comfort and convenience of their employees a number of houses near the factory have been erected. The mill buildings are illuminated in every part by the company's own electric plant. A powerful pump which takes water from the Allegheny river is constantly in operation and ready in case of fire.

Milton Northrup, it is said, was the first school teacher in town. He taught in the winter of 1830-31 in a log house on the east side of Tuna creek. In 1892 the town had six school districts with schools maintained in all of them. Five hundred and eighteen children attended these schools and were taught by fifteen teachers. These schools were maintained at the cost of $6,952.93. The assessed valuation of the town for school purposes is $647,889. The value of school buildings, including sites, is estimated at $13,316.

Limestone, the largest village in Carrolton, is situated in a broad and beautiful valley on the east side of Tunaengwant creek, and on the New York, Lake Erie & Western and the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroads. It is in the south part of the town and three miles north of the city of Bradford, Pa. It is a post village and originally known as Fullersburg, named in honor of Chase Fuller, an early and a prominent citizen. This village now contains a population of about 700 and a fine academy and graded school building. There are two churches (Roman Catholic and Methodist Episcopal), four stores, several small dealers, four or five licensed hotels, and the usual trades and artisans. The first Limestone postoffice was established about 1840 at Irvine's Mills with F. D. Perkins as postmaster. For several years it was moved from one postmaster's residence to another's. The mammoth manufactory of the place is the Limestone tannery, one of the largest of its kind in the United States. The village had a rapid growth after the advent of the railroads and the erection of the tannery and a phenomenal growth at the time of the development of the oil interest. The first merchant of the place was Chase Fuller, who erected in 1847 a small store on the site of the Tuna valley store, now owned by Hoyt Brothers. The first drug store was opened by Dr. James Nichols in 1871 and is now conducted by Byron Bissell. In 1876 M. F. Higbee opened the first hardware store, which is now continued by Joseph Greenwood. William H. Cable conducted the first hotel, known as the Eagle House. Bell Brothers in 1877 organized the Limestone Bank, which since the decline of the oil business has been discontinued.

The village of Limestone was incorporated under the general laws of the State, December 7, 1877. The first officers of the village were E. R. Schoonmaker, president; George Paton, E. J. Knapp, M. G. Bell, trustees; Shep. L. Vibbard, clerk; James Zeliff, street commissioner; and J. W. Fritz, fire warden. The origin of the name Limestone is attributed to the exhumation of some skeletons in a prehistoric mound mentioned in a previous chapter by Dr. Larkin, of Randolph. The bones, when exposed to the air, crumbled to a dust, which fact caused the remark that they resembled limestone.

The Limestone Union Free School was organized in July, 1870, with the following composing its first Board of Trustees: Arthur Palen, president, Nelson Parker, John Hazzard, Eli Hooker, Dr. James Nichols, John McKenzie, James A. De Voe, Romanzo E. Fuller, and Henry Renner. An academic department was formed October 7, 1878, and on November 4th of that year the name became Limestone Academy and Union School and the institution placed under the supervision of the Regents of the University of the State of New York. The school has senior, junior, and primary departments with a principal and an assistant, six teachers, and an instructor in music. The building is a two-story wooden structure, the main part, fifty by sixty feet, being erected in 1871 and the wing, twenty-four by sixty, subsequently. The entire property is valued at $8,000.

Carrolton is a post village at the junction of the Bradford branch and main line of the Erie railroad and a station on the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad. The village contains a small Catholic church edifice, a large depot building with an express and telegraph office and an engine house, a store, a large kindling wood manufactory, two hotels, and quite a group of dwellings.

Vandalia is another small post village situated on the Erie railroad, on the north bank of the Allegheny river. It contains a postoffice, established in 1867 with William Soule postmaster, and a railroad station. The village is located on the line dividing Carrolton from the town of Allegany, and contains a population of about 150. Its only manufacturing interest is lumber.

Irvine's Mills, near the geographical center of the town, has a fine waterpower on Tunaengwant creek. This is one of the old settlements of the town and was named in honor of the Irvine family. Quite a little cluster of houses have been built up around the mills. It is a way station on the railroad midway between Limestone and Carrolton villages.

New Ireland is a neighborhood in school district No. 1 in the west part of Carrolton. The settlement was made soon after 1850 by Irish families, who were all natives of County Clare, Ireland. Its inhabitants are distinguished for their industry and economy and are generally prosperous.

The first religious services in Carrolton were held at the house of Aaron Kellogg in 1831 by a Baptist preacher named Glazier. A small band of Methodist worshipers was organized into a class in 1850 with J. O. Beardsley, leader, and attached to Rushford district, of which Rev. E. Thomas was the presiding elder. Rev. S. W. Eaton was the circuit preacher and about monthly ministered to this little flock, usually in the school house. This was the nucleus around which the First Methodist Episcopal church of Limestone was formed, the complete organization of which was effected May 21, 1872, with the following Board of Trustees: Dr. James Nichols, William McGill, Job Moses, Henry Wade, Cortes Harris, Israel Adams, Arthur Palen, George Higgs, and Ann Harris. Rev. B. Copeland was the first stationed pastor, in 1876, and under his administration the present neat and tasty church edifice was erected and dedicated August 26, 1877, by Presiding Elder L. F. Watson. The society has a membership of eighty-six with Rev. D. C. Nye, pastor. The church edifice is constructed of wood with seats for 300, and is valued at $4,000, including grounds, etc. The Sunday school, under the able management of J. G. Drehmer, who has been its superintendent several years, has a membership of 147 pupils.

St. Patrick's church (Roman Catholic) is located on Center street in Limestone, and owes its origin to the labors of the Franciscan Fathers of Allegany, who preached in the village once a month. In 1866 the church was organized with 130 members. In 1867 the church edifice, a wooden structure, was built, and in 1877 this house was enlarged and greatly improved. In 1878 Limestone became a parish and since that date St. Patrick's church has had a resident priest. Rev. John D. Biden, the present pastor (1892), was appointed in 1883. The church property, including grounds and buildings, is valued at $4,000. The Sunday school is attended by sixty pupils.

The Limestone Presbyterian church was organized June 19, 1877, with six members. Rev. R. G. Williams, from Bradford, supplied the society semi-monthly until May, 1878. The membership increased to eighteen; the congregation met in Nichols hall. No service has been held by the society in several years and at present not a single member resides in Limestone.

Henry Renner Lodge, No. 780, F. & A. M., was organized in 1877 with Warren Dow, W. M., and was chartered June 10, 1878. It meets every alternate Wednesday evening with Shep. L. Vibbard, W. M.

Limestone Lodge, No. 177, A. O. U. W., was organized October 18, 1878. It meets alternately on Fridays with S. M. Hyde, M. W.

Tuna Valley Union, No. 343, E. A. U., was organized in 1882. S. M. Hyde is president and J. G. Drehmer is secretary.

The W. C. T. U. of Limestone was organized January 31, 1888. Mrs. M. C. Bissell is president and Mrs. S. L. Vibbard is secretary.

Limestone Branch, No. 79, C. M. B. A., was organized February 28, 1885, with fifteen members, and with James Blackall, president, and H. J. Conners, recording secretary. The membership has increased to fifty-one. The present officers are Daniel McCarty, president, and John McCarty, recording secretary.

John Smith Adams, son of William and Magdelene (Wade) Adams, was born in Massachusetts, April 23, 1806. His ancestors came from England to America about 1630. In 1820, as near as can be ascertained, he came to Farmersville with his parents, where he married Theda Corkins, Jan. 17, 1831, who was born Oct. 18, 1811. In 1834 they emigrated to Ohio with a team and heavy wagon and settled in Lorain on a farm adjoining his brothers, W. H. H. and Lyman. He was there a farmer and a ship-carpenter, and returned to Cattaraugus county in 1883 and spent the remainder of his old age with his son, Albert Quincy Adams, in where he died March 21, 1889.

Albert Quincy Adams was born in Lorain, Ohio, July 14, 1844. With his father's consent he enlisted in the 55th Ohio Inf. and was mustered in Sept. 11, 1861, being honorably discharged Nov. 5, 1862, on account of a gun-shot wound in his left leg received at the second battle of Bull Run. He returned home and was employed to drive a team for the government in Kentucky in the winter of 1863-64. In the summer of 1864 he was employed on board a government tugboat on the Potomac and James rivers. In the fall of 1864 he came to Carrollton and ran a stationary engine in the steam saw-mill of Dr. J. Nichols for nine years. He settled on the place where he now resides in 1868, and has since been a farmer. Dec. 5, 1866, he married Euthenia Bosworth and they have two sons and two daughters. Their oldest child, May B., is a successful teacher.

Harper G. Andrews, son of Robert H. and Julia E. (Wilmot) Andrews, was born in Windsor, Broome county, February 3, 1845. He was educated in the common schools, at Rogers Seminary at Great Bend, Pa., and at Lowell's Business College in Binghamton. He was a farmer with his father until July 23, 1862, when, with his father's consent, he enlisted in Co. B, 137th N. Y. Vols., and returned at the close of the war with the rank of first lieutenant. He participated in all the events of his regiment, marched to the sea with Sherman, and returned by way of Richmond to Washington. He led a charmed life and only received one gun-shot wound in his right arm at the battle of Peach Tree Creek. He was honorably discharged June 20, 1865. He was again a farmer with his father the ensuing two years. In November, 1867, he settled in Limestone as a clerk and two years later engaged in the manufacture and sale of lumber, which he followed until 1881. He then conducted a hotel up to 1890. Mr. Andrews is a staunch Republican, and has been elected assessor and two times supervisor. May 5, 1869, he married Mary A. Irvine, of Carrollton. They have had three children, all of whom died in early childhood.

Felix Baillet, born Nov. 22, 1802, married Aff. Whitcomb, who was born April 11, 1807, and removed from Farmersville to Limestone in the fall of 1852. He built a small tannery, the first in town, and tanned leather and made boots and shoes. His brother, Francis E. Baillet, was clerk of Cattaraugus county for nine years. Felix Baillet was a great reader, well informed, was familiar with the Bible, and loved an argument, especially with the clergymen. He had a mind and will of his own. He was supervisor of this town in 1867. He removed with his family to Tullahoma, Tenn., in 1868, where he still resides. His father, Francis Baillet, was born in Rocheforte, France, in 1769, and died in Philadelphia in 1804. John W. Baillet, son of Felix, was born in Farmersville, March 12, 1837. January 31, 1864, he married Abigail, daughter of Levi Leonard. He was a railroad conductor and train dispatcher eighteen years. He was always affable and kind. He died in 1881. His only surviving child is a son, Frank, born July 26, 1871.

John Odell Beardsley was born in Dutchess county in 1779 and married Charity Bromley, of Delhi, N. Y. Being a lumberman and merchant with his father they used the Delaware river as a means of transportation to and from Philadelphia. Mr. Beardsley removed to near Seneca Lake and in 1813 or 1814 to Chautauqua county, where he was a successful lumberman until 1829, when he came to Tuna valley and purchased several hundred acres of pine land in the township of Bradford, Pa., and engaged extensively in manufacturing lumber. In February, 1831, he brought his family to his log cabin. In a few years he built a comfortable residence, the center of which was exactly on the State line. He claimed his residence in Pennsylvania. In 1836, with his sons John O. and William, he built a double mill on Foster brook, where they were engaged in manufacturing lumber to the time of his death, April 23, 1842. John O., William, and Hiram were all lumbermen. They had a tract of land along the State line in Carrolton which contained 2,000 acres, from which they cut the timber. J. O. Beardsley was the river pilot for the family from the age of fifteen years, and took millions of feet of lumber to market. He became a prominent man in society and the first leader of the M. E. class organized in Carrolton in 1830. He is now a farmer in Sardinia, Erie county. Mr. Beardsley married Alinda Whitaker and his children are Malvina, born Nov. 10, 1836, of Arcade, N. Y.; Louenza (Mrs. Richard Hazard), of Limestone; Lucy, born May 6, 1842, wife of Joseph Leonard, of Carrolton; Charles O., born May 10, 1844, of Duluth, Minn.; Louise J., born Oct. 27, 1846 (Mrs. M. W. Caffee), of Bradford; Millie A., born Nov. 14, 1850 (Mrs. Guy C. Irvine), of Irvine's Mills; Clinton J., born Sept. 18, 1853, a farmer on the homestead; and Wilbur G., born Nov. 18, 1858.

Hiram Beardsley, youngest son of John O., Sr., was born March 25, 1825. He married Mandana Hull, succeeded his father on the homestead, and gave his mother a home until she died in August, 1876, aged ninety-two years. He built his present fine residence in 1880, north of the State line. In 1865, Hiram and William Beardsley, with a company of capitalists, took the first leases of territory and made a test by drilling the first well in this region on land where the city of Bradford has since been built. Although this well was not a success, because it was not bored deep enough, it established two facts: that oil did exist in paying quantities, and that William and Hiram Beardsley were the pioneers in the discovery of petroleum in Tuna valley. On the farm of Hiram Beardsley is the first paying oil well in Carrolton. This was drilled in the winter of 1875-76 and is still yielding oil. William Beardsley died in October, 1885. He served the town as supervisor in 1855, 1856, and 1857.

Jacob Bedell, a native of Branchville, N. J., was born March 1, 1840. His parents removed to Owego in 1850, where he resided until 1860, when he joined them in Prompton, Pa. He then began business for himself as a jobber in lumbering. He has since been a jobber and overseer of lumbering and peeling bark, except three years and a half spent on contract work in the coal mines. In 1879 he began business as a jobber in peeling bark for Hoyt Brothers in Gouldsboro, Pa., which employed him there and in Hills Grove, Pa., about six years. Since then he has resided in Limestone and is the overseer for Hoyt Brothers in the business in which he has long been an expert. Mr. Bedell is efficient and trustworthy. In March, 1881, he married Emma Engler, of Gouldsboro, Pa. They have two daughters, Maud and Frances M.

Rev. J. D. Biden, born in Buffalo, Sept. 30, 1852, spent his boyhood in Cattaraugus county and acquired his early education in the common school on Whig street in Little Valley. After a short business career in Buffalo he entered Niagara University in 1874 and in Dec., 1879, received the degree of A.B. After a two years' course in theology he received in 1881 the degree of A.M. and was ordained to the priesthood of the Roman Catholic church June 3, 1882. He then spent one year as assistant at West Seneca. Aug. 1, 1883, he was appointed pastor of St. Patrick's church of Limestone, where he still officiates. Since coming to Limestone he has purchased a cemetery for the parish, enlarged and greatly improved the parsonage, has wrought many other necessary improvements, and has built a small but neat church edifice at Carrollton village. He has also started a fund to build a more commodious church at Limestone. He served a term on the Board of Education.

Byron Bissell, son of Aaron and Delilah (Pullen) Bissell, was born on the Bissell homestead in Lyndon, Nov. 5, 1849, and was educated in the common schools and Ten Broeck Academy. He was a farmer with his father until he attained his majority and the winter ensuing taught the district school where he had himself been taught. He spent two years of the ensuing ten as druggist's clerk with Dr. James Nichols in Limestone, two or three years on the home farm in Lyndon, where he held the offices of town clerk and justice of the peace, and the remainder of the period was engaged in the oil business in Pennsylvania. Aug. 26, 1880, he succeeded Dr. Nichols in the firm of Nichols & Paton, druggists, of Limestone. Since 1883, when he purchased Mr. Paton's interest, Mr. Bissell has conducted the business alone. He has held the positions of deputy postmaster and trustee and president of the village. October 10, 1875, he married Ella Beebe, of Carrollton. They have five children: Jennie H., Clara M., Maud, and Leon B. and Lena (twins).

Alonzo Bosworth was born in Marion, Wayne county, June 17, 1823, and moved with his parents to New Hudson, Allegany county, when about five years old, where his parents resided to the close of their lives. Alonzo Bosworth married, in November, 1854, in Allegany county, Amelia Page, who died in June, 1855, and in February, 1861, he married, second, Sarah Adams, who was born in Deerfield, Oneida county, in 1832. Her father, Israel Adams, was a native of New Hampshire and of English descent. Mr. Bosworth is a lumberman and has been employed as head sawyer and manager of the lumber firm of J. Nichols & Co. for more than twenty years. He now gives his attention to his farm.

Ansel J. Brown, youngest child of Erastus Brown, a pioneer of Mansfield, was born on the homestead Jan. 8, 1849, was reared a farmer, and was educated in the district school. His father died when he was only eleven years old.

At eighteen he and his brother Levi bought the homestead and together cultivated it about twenty years. In the spring of 1883 Mr. Brown opened a general store at Union Corners, near his old home, where he remained until the spring of 1887, when he purchased his present store in Limestone. In 1875 he made an extensive tour through California. April 6, 1870, Mr. Brown married Ellen L., daughter of Lorenzo H. Smith, of Mansfield. Their children are Harry, who married Miss Armstrong; Clara (Mrs. George Seymour); and Melva. Mr. Brown is a musician and Mrs. Brown conducts a millinery store.

John Carmody was born in County Clare, Ireland, in 1823. He resided in England three or four years, where he married Mary O'Day, a native of Ireland, and born in 1830. They came to New York city in 1853; he was engaged on the Erie and New York Central railroads until 1858, when he came to Limestone, where he was employed in the tannery until 1866. He then purchased a wood lot of fifty acres in the neighborhood known as New Ireland, where he resided about two years. In November, 1869, he settled on the farm where he now resides. This farm, with the aid of his industrious sons, he has converted into well-cultivated fields and a good home. In March, 1875, he leased fifty acres of his farm for oil purposes, with a royalty of one-eighth net to himself, and has an income from six producing wells. Mr. and Mrs. Carmody have had born to them eight children, three of whom died young. Those now living are Michael, Kate M., John F., Marv. and Ellen A. Michael and John are contractors and jobbers in drilling oil and gas wells; Kate M. and Ellen A. are teachers; Mary (Mrs. M. Scanlon) resides in Bradford, Pa.

Mason W. Cogswell, son of Samuel, was born in Warren, Pa., Nov. 4, 1822, and about 1847 came to Carrolton, where he began manufacturing square timber and pine shingles. With four or five others he lived in a shanty kept by a mulatto. When their raft of timber arrived at Warren Mr. Cogswell took charge of it and ran it down to Pittsburg. He was known as one of the most capable pilots on the river. Until 1882 or '83 he made dozens of trips a pilot and was successful with all but one. In 1853 he settled where he now resides and is engaged in farming. Aug. 1, 1851, he married Sarah Lawton, who bore him these children: Adelaide and Hannah, who died in childhood; Chloe A. (Mrs. W. Brooks), born April 3, 1857, died Feb. 10, 1877; John L., born Aug. 23, 1859, married Sylvia Tallman, of Minnesota, and resides on the homestead with his father; and Perry M., born Feb. 10, 1862, also with his father. Mrs. Cogswell died Feb. 10, 1863. Jan. 1, 1874, he married, second, Phebe Lawson.

George J. Cowen was born in Candor, Tioga county, in June, 1840. His father was a shoemaker and later a grocer in Limestone, where he died in 1873. Aug. 6, 1862, George J. enlisted in Co. C, 109th N. Y. Vols., and he participated in all the events of his regiment for two years, when he was sent to the hospital to recover from an amputated finger. He left before it was fairly healed and assisted in repelling the attempted assault on Washington. Soon afterward he was transferred to the 13th Veteran Reserve Corps, from which he was discharged July 13, 1865. He immediately settled in Limestone, where he was a groceryman with his father one year. Mr. Cowen has served as constable since 1885, and since 1882 he has been police constable of Limestone. Aug. 29, 1865, he married Anna A. Hill, and their children now living are Fred C., Georgiana N., and Luney M.

John J. Crowley, son of Dennis, was born in Cattaraugus, May 12, 1866, and attended the Union Free School of his native village. He began to learn telegraphy' at the age of fourteen and became an operator for the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh railroad at the age of sixteen. One year later he was operator and clerk at Mt. Jewett, Pa., and two years afterward was made station agent of Limestone, taking charge March 1, 1886. His is a family of railroad men.

Jacob G. Drehmer was born in Dansville, N. Y., Feb. 2, 1844, enlisted Aug. 1, 1862, in Co. B, 1st N. Y. Dragoons, and was honorably discharged June 10, 1865. Mr. Drehmer participated in the battle of Cold Harbor, where he received an injury in his left leg and was excused from duty in consequence for about a week, but did not leave his regiment. He was present also at the Wilderness, Winchester, Cedar Creek, Yellow Tavern, Fisher's Hill, the siege of Suffolk, and other battles and skirmishes. Since returning from the army he has pursued his trade as a manufacturer of boots and shoes. Mr. Drehmer married Julia L. Common, of Angelica, N. Y., and they have one son. Mr. Drehmer is a Republican. Both are members of the Methodist church, of which he is one of the trustees, having held the position the past fourteen years. He has also served as superintendent of the Sunday school.

Daniel Frank, son of Daniel, a pioneer of Ashford, married Catherine, daughter of Peter Multer, also a pioneer of Ashford. He was a farmer and blacksmith. He came to Vandalia and built the fences from Olean to Dunkirk for the Erie railroad by contract. He also carried on his trade of blacksmith, and was the superintendent in the construction of the State road from Vandalia to Great Valley. In 1861 he enlisted in the 64th N. Y. Inf. for three years. He stood six feet three and one-half inches in his stockings. The exposures of army life brought on inflammatory rheumatism, and after a period of treatment in the hospital he was discharged an invalid. He returned home about eleven months after he entered the service and died two years later. Mrs. Frank died October 25, 1888. Their son, Clark Frank, was born in Otto, March 27, 1844. Aug. 31, 1862, he enlisted in the 111th N. Y. Inf., participated in all the engagements of the Army of the Potomac, was never in the hospital nor away from his company until he received a wound from a minie-ball that struck him a little above the heart, passed through his left lung, and out at his back. By a strange coincidence his brother Sylvester, a soldier in the 61st Regiment, received precisely such a wound the same day and in the same battle. They were treated in the same ward of the hospital by the same surgeon, recovered at the same time, were honorably discharged June 14, 1865, and went home together. Nov. 7, 1868, Clark Frank married Lucina Waters, of Limestone. He conducted a grocery in Carrollton and was a lumberman until about 1870. He was successively baggage-master, telegraph operator, and three years station agent at Limestone. Since 1888 he has been a farmer. Mr. Frank has officiated as justice of the peace eight years, and has held several other town offices. He has five children. James D. Frank, son of Daniel, was born March 23, 1854. He learned telegraphy without a tutor, was assistant station agent at Carrollton, and for eight years was station agent at Great Valley. He is now the station agent and telegraph operator at Vandalia.

Chase Fuller, son of John and Betsey Fuller, was born in Piermont, N. H., April 18, 1797, received a good business education, and married Nancy Kenyon, of Holland, N. Y., May 5, 1822. She was born January 12, 1802, at Stanley, Conn. They came to Freedom in the winter of 1839-40. In Feb., 1844, they removed to Carrollton on lot 25, where the village of Limestone has since been built. His residence, a two-story log house, was located where the Bateman House now stands. Mr. Fuller was an extensive farmer and a manufacturer and dealer in pine lumber, which he rafted down the river to Cincinnati. In 1846 he opened a general mercantile establishment where the Tuna valley store now stands. Mr. Fuller was a man of good business ability, well informed, and a leading and prominent citizen. He was elected supervisor of Carrollton in 1844 and represented the town ten years and held the same office in Humphrey four years. He officiated as a magistrate over forty years and as associate judge of the county several terms. As magistrate he was the trial justice and officiated at nearly 200 weddings. Early in life he began practice in justice's courts and continued successfully until old age compelled him to relinquish the work. Mr. Chase was an honorable, upright citizen. In the spring of 1857 he removed to Humphrey, where he gave his attention to his farm, the various offices which he held, and his law practice. In 1868 he removed to Virginia, where he was postmaster, but five years later returned to Carrollton, where he died Jan. 25, 1880. Mrs. Fuller survived him until Dec. 24, 1887. Their children were Philetus M., born May 4, 1823, now of Smethport, Pa., a soldier in the Union army five years, a magistrate eight years, associate judge five years, county commissioner six years, and has been a heavy oil producer; Lafayette T., born March 25, 1825, living near Bradford, Pa.; Manley C., born April 3, 1827, a magistrate in Carrollton several years, removed to Rochester, Minn., in 1865, was elected to the Legislature in 1868 and in 1870; Dolly P., born May 8, 1829, widow of Marcus McMillen, of Olean; Romanzo E., born May 22, 1833, married Harriet, daughter of Calvin Leonard, Sept. 11, 1853, and their children are Herbert C., a railroad bridge builder in Nebraska, Jerome H., a farmer and oil-well driller near Limestone, and Sam R., an oil producer in Forest county, Pa.; Desire E., born Nov. 3, 1835, widow of Samuel Huntington, a soldier in the Union army who died of starvation in Andersonville prison; Velonia N. (Mrs. Samuel Leonard), of Limestone, born March 21, 1840; Zoroaster C., born Sept. 21, 1842, a farmer near Bradford, Pa., and a soldier in the Union army; Olivia A., born May 6, 1845, widow of Almanzer Jones, of Allegany; and Millard F., born Feb. 15, 1850, died at the age of fourteen years. Romanzo E. Fuller is a carpenter and builder by trade, which until recently has been his avocation. He was elected magistrate of Carrollton in 1866 and has served in that position twenty-four years. He has also held other important town offices.

Joseph Greenwood, son of Robert, was born in Manchester, England, in 1843, emigrated to America with his parents in 1848, and settled first in Massachusetts, where he resided until twelve years old. His mother died in 1855, and Joseph then had a home with his grandparents in Patterson, N. J., with whom he lived until 1859, when he became an apprentice to the trade of tinner in Orange, N. J., where he remained until 1862. He then enlisted in the 26th N. J. Vols. and was honorably discharged June 7, 1863. In March, 1864, he enlisted in the U. S. navy and was discharged in June, 1865. Mr. Greenwood settled on Oil creek in Aug., 1865, and was a tinner there until 1871, when he began dealing in hardware and oil supplies in Salem, Pa. In 1876 he came to Limestone and opened a general hardware store, which he still conducts. Mr. Greenwood is a staunch Republican, but is not an office-seeker. In 1868 he married Celestia A. Rockwell, of Summit, Pa., and they have had four children, of whom Joseph P. and John W. are now living.

William Grimes was born in New Hampshire, Feb. 2, 1804. In his childhood he removed to the eastern part of New York State, and finally married Margaret Dudley. He afterward resided a few years in Vermont and came thence to Essex county, N. Y., where he was a jobber in cutting and hauling lumber. He removed to Tiffanyville, Chautauqua county, where he stocked and ran the mills of Jehiel Tiffany. In the fall of 1840 or '41 he settled on the Nine Mile on the Allegheny river at what is now the village of Vandalia, and for about four years conducted the lumber mills of Guy C. Irvine and Judge Chamberlain. About 1845 he purchased 900 acres of timber lands and added to them from time to time till he had a tract of 2,000 acres. He began cutting and rafting square pine timber and shingles down the river to market, and continued to the close of his life, Jan. 26, 1877. Mr. Grimes was a man of more than medium height, broad-shouldered and muscular, and possessed great powers of endurance. He was ambitious, courageous, and industrious, and was known as the poor man's friend. He was a man of the old-school style, strictly honest and upright. His only son, James Henry Grimes, was born in Vermont, Feb. 10, 1829, received a common school education, and succeeded his father in 1877, continuing the business still and manufacturing an average of 1,000,000 feet of lumber annually. Mr. Grimes is also a farmer on a farm of one hundred acres. He employs from ten to twenty-two men. Sept. 25, 1882, he married Anna Horton, a native of England, and they have one son, William Henry, born Dec. 20, 1885.

John Hamm, a native of Darmstadt, Germany, came with his parents to New York in May, 1853. In 1864 his father removed to Allegany, where he still resides. He settled in Limestone in 1868 and opened a blacksmith shop. A year later he added a custom carriage and sleigh manufactory and gave employment to three men. This he still continues. June 21, 1874, he married Cynthia, daughter of Makerous and Mary Merkt, natives of Wurtemberg, Germany, who came to America in 1853. Children: Carl Joseph and Fred Andrew.

Sanford M. Hyde was born in Tolland, Conn., in 1840. He removed to Ellenville, Ulster county, in 1850, and began active business at thirteen years of age. At fifteen he was clerking in a general store. He was one of the firm of E. R. Schoonmaker & Co. and S. M. Hyde & Co. He conducted Tunaeng-want Hotel successfully for three years and was postmaster during Cleveland's first administration. He is now book-keeper for the Northern Tier Hemlock Company, Limited, with headquarters at Bradford, Pa. Mr. Hyde was a sergeant in the Union army in the Civil war three months. In Oct., 1862, he married Charlotte J., sister of Hon. E. R. Schoonmaker, of Limestone, and their children are George, who died at the age of twenty-four years; Charles L., a clerk for Stickney, Bell & Co. at Quaker, N. Y.; Robert; and Nellie.

Guy Carrolton Irvine, brother of Andrew and uncle of B. F., was born on the West branch of the Susquehanna river in Pennsylvania, the youngest son of a family of twenty-six children. His father died when he was a boy, and young Irvine was apprenticed to a blacksmith, whom not being a congenial spirit he soundly thrashed and ran away. In very early manhood he resided at Broken Straw, Warren county, Pa., and there began his active business life by jobbing in building roads and bridges. He had dealt in lumber and soon after his marriage with Polly Cotton he bought 2,000 acres of timber land on Conewango creek on credit, built mills also on credit, manufactured lumber, built up a small village which took the name of Irvinesburg, and was very successful. About 1837, in company with Judge Chamberlain and N. A. Lowrey, he purchased a tract of 25,000 acres of land lying in and adjacent to Tuna valley in Carrolton, which was divided among the proprietors. Mr. Irvine built the original Irvine mills in 1840, about half a mile below the site of the mills erected by Stephen and Jesse Morrison in 1828 and on the opposite side of the stream. He was succeeded in 1848 by his nephew, B. F. Irvine, who had for several years been engaged in business with him. He was an abrupt, fearless, able business man, possessed great energy, and was honest and true. The town named in honor of him took his second name, Carrolton.

Benjamin F. Irvine, son of Andrew, was born in Towanda, Pa., Aug. 12, 1819, and received a good business education. In the winter of 1841-42 he came to Irvine's Mills in the employ of his uncle, Guy C. Irvine, to haul logs. In drawing the logs to the chute at the top of the hill, where they were slid down into the pond, one of his horses slipped and fell into the chute, dragging his mate and the heavy load with him, and all went down together in a total wreck. This outfit was all Mr. Irvine had to carry on business. In 1843 he returned and got out square timber and pine shingles, which he rafted to Louisville, continuing until March, 1848, when he assumed the management of his uncle's large lumber business. In 1855 he bought his cousin's interest in 6,000 acres of land. In 1857 the firm of B. F. Irvine and Nelson Parker built the saw-mill on lot 29 on the site of Morrison's mill, where they manufactured lumber, which they rafted to the markets. In 1865 they sold their entire property to Job Moses, but in 1869 Mr. Irvine bought back the mills and 600 acres surrounding them, and enlarged the mills to a daily capacity of 50,000 feet, added a shingle-mill, a planer, and a flooring-mill, giving him a total capacity of 4,000,000 feet of lumber and 3,000,000 shingles annually. He continued this vast business until his death Sept. 10, 1878. January 1, 1847, he married Rebecca, eldest daughter of Levi Leonard. Mr. Irvine possessed many of the characteristics of his uncle, G. C. He had great energy, more than ordinary business ability, was quick to perceive, and bold and fearless to decide and act. While he did business on strict business principles he had a quick ear for the voice of the needy and was not slow to relieve their wants. While he could drive a good bargain he was tender to those in distress and dispensed charity unseen, but with an open hand. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Irvine were Mary A., born May 5, 1848, wife of H. G. Andrews; Guy C., born March 21, 1850; Andrew L., born May 29, 1854, died Nov. 26, 1855; Leonard C., born March 27, 1856; Jerome N., born Oct. 27, 1857, died April 12, 1859; Benjamin F., Jr., born September 30, 1859, now agent for his mother and manager of the estate; and De Witt C., born Feb. 24, 1866, died Feb. 4, 1867. June 26, 1872, Guy C. Irvine married Millie A., youngest daughter of J. O. Beardsley. Mr. Irvine learned his father's business as a lumberman, and with his brother Leonard C. succeeded him at his death in 1878, under the firm name of Irvine Brothers, who continued it until they sold the mills and fifty acres in 1882 to Plumer, Gilfillan, Steele & Co., the present proprietors. Mr. Irvine is now a farmer. Leonard C. Irvine is now book-keeper for Schoonmaker & Davis.

Allen Johnson was born in Monmouth county, N. J., June 6, 1832. Aug. 29, 1861, he enlisted in the 6th N. J. Inf. and served three years. He participated in seventeen general engagements, was never absent from roll call except when on detached service, was never in the guardhouse or hospital, and was never reprimanded by any officer. He was several times struck with spent balls and had two guns shot from his hands. He was honorably discharged in September, 1864. In January, 1880, he came to Carrolton from Pennsylvania and here he still resides. He is now engaged in selling groceries and stationery at the village of Carrollton. He is a pronounced Democrat, and holds the positions of postmaster, justice of the peace, and overseer of the poor. Mr. Johnson is the father of five sons and a daughter.

Levi Leonard, born in Pennsylvania, Feb. 22, 1809, married, April 15, 1828, Elizabeth Cargill, of Corydon, Pa., a native of Maine who was born Dec. 25, 1810. In 1832 he came to Carrollton as a lumberman and in 1834 he brought his wife to his log cabin which he had erected near the mouth of Tuna creek. At that time the vast unbroken forests were in their pristine glory. Mr. Leonard was a young man of fine physical development, broad shouldered, very muscular, and stood full six feet high. He was energetic and courageous. Lumbering was then, and for many years after, the leading industry of the country, and the river was the only highway to convey it to market. To accommodate the scores of rivermen and wood-choppers he built a large hotel at the mouth of Tuna creek, on the east side of the Allegheny on the Indian reservation, and opened it to the public in 1836. He also established a ferry across the river. This tavern was a favorite resort. Mr. Leonard also dealt extensively in lumber and was famous as a river pilot. He gave his attention mainly to what is known as square timber and hand-made pine shingles. His knowledge of the Allegheny was proverbial. He was credited with knowing every shallow and rock, and lumbermen claimed that "Leonard could sail the river on a dark night with as much safety as at mid-day." Food, clothing, etc., were brought up the stream in canoes and the last one now in the vicinity was constructed by Mr. Leonard and is still kept by his family as a relic of "ye olden time." To keep a supply of fresh fish with which the river and streams abounded he confined them in a skiff covered with boards and sunk in the water. He was a successful hunter. The city of Buffalo was then quite inaccessible. To make the trip Mr. Leonard shipped his team and load on his ferry boat to Great Valley, proceeded thence by highway, and returned as he went with provisions and groceries which he dealt out to his neighbors.

Mr. Leonard was always on the most amicable terms with the Seneca Indians, whom he uniformly treated kindly and with the strictest honesty. He thus gained their undying friendship and confidence. All matters of importance were submitted to him for his advice, and they never failed to act in accordance with his suggestions. So great was his influence over them that his friends in a facetious way spoke of him as the "God of the Senecas." The Indians acknowledged him as their superior, and were in awe of him. He was master of the Seneca dialect and spoke it fluently. In Nov., 1858, he removed to the farm about one mile north of Limestone, where he spent the remainder of his life in the pursuit of farming. He died September 10, 1879. Although he never held high office, nor wished to, he was as well and widely known as the proudest official and as much esteemed. His children were Rebecca, born July 12, 1830, widow of B. F. Irvine; Sabra, born Jan. 1, 1832; widow of Billings Lawton and proprietor of the Lawton House, Carrollton; Jerome B., born Dec. 15, 1835, died Jan. 15, 1859; Abigail, born March 22, 1837, widow of John W. Baillet, now residing with her aged mother; Joseph, born Sept. 4, 1839, a jobber, lumberman, and farmer; Mary A., born Nov. 24, 1842, widow of George Baker, a tanner who served three years in the late war and died of disability contracted in the army; Levi, Jr., born Dec. 20, 1844, died in early childhood; Frank A., born May 21, 1846, a traveling salesman from East Liverpool, Ohio; Robert, born April 2, 1848, drowned in the river at the homestead at the age of three and one-half years; Sarah J., born Oct. 3, 1850, wife of Hon. E. R. Schoonmaker; and Bradley R., born Feb. 28, 1853, died of an injury received while coupling cars, Nov. 15, 1875. The children of George Baker are Georgia (Mrs. John Goodsell) of Olean, and Clarence, a farmer on the Leonard homestead.

Calvin Leonard, brother of Levi Leonard, Sr., was born in August, 1801. He married Jemima Cogswell and came to Carrolton from Beaver county, Pa., in 1851, settling on the farm now owned by Hon. E. R. Schoonmaker. Mr. Leonard was a carpenter and one of the most skillful millwrights in the country. He built the Irvine mills, the first Union Free School building, the tannery erected by Dodge & Smith, and many other large structures. He was a Democrat, was well versed in the Scriptures, liberal in his religion, and believed in the ultimate salvation of the whole human race. He died Jan. 22, 1884. Only three of his children reside in Carrolton: Samuel J., who married Velonia N., daughter of Chase Fuller, and for sixteen years has been the carpenter and millwright of the Limestone tannery; Jackson L., who married Maggie Stevens; and Cynthia R. (Mrs. Shep. L. Vibbard).

Joseph F. McCahill was born in the city of New York, April 10, 1859, and Jan. 1, 1883, married Kate Dwyer. In 1884 they settled in Limestone, where Mr. McCahill is engaged as a jobber in the Limestone tannery. He also conducts cigar factory No. 1234.

Donald J. McDonell, of sturdy Scotch descent and cousin of Alexander McDonell, Bishop of Alexandria, Can., was born in Renfrew, Ontario, Can., Jan. 15, 1838. Nov. 1, 1864, he went to Buffalo as a journeyman blacksmith. From Jan., 1865, until 1876 he was engaged in the oil business in Pennsylvania. He then settled in Limestone, where he was an oil producer and a driller of oil wells, by contract, until 1886. He still owns his machinery and oil territory, and now has charge of the Manufacturers' Gas Company's business in Limestone. Jan. 24, 1875, he married Louisa, daughter of R. B. Barnes, a native of Massachusetts. Mrs. McDonell was born Dec. 15, 1839, in Wisconsin. Mr. Barnes resides with his daughter in Limestone.

John McKenzie was born in Rosshire, Scotland, June 12, 1836, and in 1854 settled in Forestville, N. Y. In 1856 he came to Carrolton and April 16, 1857, married Harriet H., daughter of Peter Zeliff, who was born June 29, 1834, being the first white child born in the town of Carrolton. Mr. McKenzie is a farmer. He was formerly engaged in lumbering. He is a Republican and has held the office of highway commissioner three years, assessor four years, and collector one year. Four of their seven sons and their only daughter are living.

George McNally, of Scotch-Irish descent, was born in County Cork, Ireland, July 9, 1845. He emigrated to America in 1862, spent a year in Massachusetts, three years in Cleveland, Ohio, was a hotel proprietor in Corry, Pa., ten years, and in 1876 came to Limestone, where he built the McNally House and has been its proprietor since. In 1878 he married Margaret McNamara, a native of County Clare, Ireland. Their children are Anna and George B.

John Miller, a native of Prussia, came with his family to Limestone in December, 1864. He was a worthy citizen, and for ten or eleven years was an employee in the tannery. Later he was a farmer. He died in April, 1876. On his farm the first paying oil well in the valley of Tuna creek was sunk. In 1875 his only son, John, Jr., was accidentally killed aged twenty-two years.

Charles Morse was born in Ontario county in 1832. He came from Alle-gany county to Carrollton in 1859, and here married Lois C. Wixon. He then returned to Allegany county and lived three years. In 1861 he enlisted in the 54th N. Y. Vols. and while at Elmira awaiting orders to move to the front he was attacked with lung trouble and was eventually discharged. Mr. Morse has a farm of ten acres. Of his eight children four are now living.

Rev. De Witt C. Nye, son of Nelson and Abigail (Mather) Nye, was born in Hume, Allegany county, N. Y., March 22, 1846. There he attended the district schools, and in Sept., 1862, with his father's consent, enlisted with an older brother in Co. F, 4th N. Y. H. A., and was honorably discharged at the close of the war. After General Grant assumed command his regiment joined the Army of the Potomac at Culpepper and participated in the battles of the Wilderness, Spotsylvania, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Ream's Station, and the siege of Petersburg. April 2, 1865, the regiment charged the enemy twice before Richmond and captured 1,800 prisoners, two stands of colors, and several pieces of artillery, and was the advance regiment at Lee's surrender. Mr. Nye was present at all these engagements. At the close of the war he learned his father's trade of shoemaker and followed it until he was thirty-six years old. He was converted at twenty-eight, licensed to exhort at thirty, and studied the English branches on his shoe-bench. He received a local preacher's license at thirty-four, began a four years' course in theology, and in Oct., 1882, received an appointment from the Genesee Conference as a supply for Farmersville, where he remained one year. In 1883 he supplied East Ashford and next Honeoye, Pa., for two years. In October, 1886, he joined the conference and was appointed to the charge of Portville. At the same time he commenced the regular conference course, which he completed in Oct., 1890. He remained at Portville until the fall of 1890, when he was appointed to the charge at Limestone. Mr. Nye married Isadore E. Stone, June 1, 1870. They have three children.

John E. O'Brien, a native of Cork, Ireland, was born in Nov., 1840, and reared and educated in England. In March, 1864, he emigrated to America and at once enlisted in the U. S. navy, serving a little more than two years. While sinking obstructions to the enemy across James river he was severely bruised by an explosion, from which he never fully recovered. Mr. O'Brien is a farmer in Carrollton and has been overseer of the poor for five years.

Nelson Parker, born Feb. 2, 1806, began business in Carrollton as a manufacturer and dealer in pine shingles and lumber. In 1853, with A. J. Irvine, he bought the Irvine mills and from 1856 to 1869 B. F. Irvine was his lumber partner. They then sold the mills and their large tract of land to Job Moses and Mr. Parker engaged in farming. Later he was a merchant. He was killed by the cars while crossing the track at Carrollton, Nov. 27, 1873. He was a capable business man, and was supervisor of Carrollton in 1868 and 1869. Jan. 19, 1847, he married Catherine B., daughter of Andrew Irvine, of Warren, Pa. Their children were Marion B. and Catherine.

William Paton, Sr., born in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, Dec. 31, 1838, received a good business education and in 1855 emigrated with his parents to the Genesee valley. They resided in Machias and in McKean county, Pa., where his father died in 1874. Since 1862 Mr. Paton has resided in Carrollton. He is a farmer. Jan. 1, 1868, he married Mary Lee, of Ellicottville, and in 1873 settled on the place where he now lives. Both are members of the M. E. church and interested in every good enterprise. He has served as overseer of the poor four terms and as highway commissioner one term.

William Paton, Jr., was born in Annan, Dumfrieshire, Scotland, Sept. 14, 1847. In 1864 he came to Limestone and at once commenced a clerkship with Dodge & Smith, remaining in their employ until they sold their property. He was engaged the ensuing year with A. E. & G. W. Palen. In the year 1869 he went to Wilcox, Pa., where he was a clerk in the tannery store of Jackson, Shultz & Co., and where he remained for three years. With his partner, Mr. Aldrich, he then opened a general store in that place under the firm name of Aldrich & Paton, which continued three years. Mr. Paton sold his interest to Mr. Aldrich in 1871 and removed to Louisville, Ky., where he was engaged with Mr. Smith, before mentioned, in building the manufactory of the Ohio Falls Coopers Company. The plant covered an area of two acres. As soon as the establishment was opened the company employed an average of 125 hands. Mr. Paton remained there as a partner with Mr. Smith the ensuing four years, when, on account of ill health, he sold his interest to his partner and returned to Limestone, where he opened a general country store, and where he is still selling goods. He also has two farms on which are five oil wells. Mr. Paton has been identified with the entire growth of Limestone, has aided in building its schools and churches, and has erected his store building and four dwelling houses. He married Harriet, daughter of Daniel Smith, in 1870. They are members of the M. E. church.

John Paton was born in Dumfrieshire, Scotland, April 24, 1849, and removed to Carlisle, England, in his childhood. His mother had died and in June, 1867, he came to Limestone, where he accepted a position with his uncle, Wm. Paton, Sr. He was next an employee of Daniel Smith in Wilcox, Pa., a year. He has since been an employee and jobber and dealer in bark, wood, and lumber. Since Hoyt Brothers became proprietors of the Limestone tannery Mr. Paton has been employed as a finisher of leather. Sept. 28, 1874, he married Georgiana Hapgood, also a native of England. They have an only son, Floyd, born in Jan., 1876. Mr. and Mrs. Paton are members of the M. E. church.

Myron H. Paxon was born in Aurora, Erie county, in 1840. In 1863 he assisted as a carpenter in building the tannery at Salamanca, the office and outside charge of which he assumed in 1864 and continued until 1873. In the fall of that year he accepted a similar position in Jewett & Keating's tannery at Olean. In the spring of 1874 this firm transferred Mr. Paton to their tannery in Port Allegany, McKean county, where he also had charge of the office and outside work. He remained there until the fall of 1877, when he came to Limestone, where he has since had control of the office, outside work, and financial interest of the concern. He represented Carrollton on the Board of Supervisors in 1881.

Harry Renner, born in Menze, Germany, June 6, 1826, emigrated in 1840 to Susquehanna county, Pa., where he engaged at his trade of journeyman tanner until Oct., 1860, when he came to Limestone and was employed in the Limestone tannery three years. In 1875 he erected the Limestone House and opened it to the public. Dec. 24, 1857, he married Mrs. Juliana Bell, widow of Worthy Bell, and to them was born one daughter, Maud R. (Mrs. M. W. Smith). Mr. Renner died April 19, 1878. His widow survives him.

Algernon Sidney Rigdon, son of Sidney, was born in Mentor, Ohio, July 4, 1828. The family emigrated with teams to Missouri when he was nine years of age. A year later they removed to Illinois, whence, after six years' residence, they settled in Pittsburg, Pa. A. S. came to Friendship, Allegany county, in 1847, and was employed on the Erie railroad from 1859 until 1874, when he removed from Cuba to Carrolton village and has since been the efficient agent of that station. Mr. Rigdon is a staunch Democrat, prominent in his party, a competent and popular citizen, but has constantly refused to accept town office. Oct. 19, 1854, he married Annis Bradley, of Cuba. They have two sons: Walter S., station agent at Dayton, and George R., manager for the Postal Telegraph Company at Scranton, Pa.

Hon. Elijah R. Schoonmaker, of Limestone, was born in Sullivan county, and is descended from solid Dutch stock. His father, a farmer and contractor, gave his son a common school education. At a very early age he was a clerk in a store in his native county for seven years. He next filled a like position in Ulster county several years more. He was a traveling salesman the next three years (until 1868) for a wholesale boot and shoe house at Kingston, and then settled in Limestone, where he has since led a very busy life. When he located here he formed a partnership with A. E. and G. W. Palen in mercantile business and was associated in trade with them for three years. The lumber firm of Schoonmaker & Nichols was then formed. About this time he also conducted a lumber business alone, and for many years he was one of the owners of the "tannery store." From 1875 to 1885 he operated in oil, largely in real estate, and heavily in bark, supplied the tanneries of Great Bend, Canistota, Hornellsville, and Limestone, and pulled bark from the trees on 10,000 acres. In addition to this he bought and handled from 5,000 to 10,000 cords of bark per year. He is now a member of the following firms: Northern Tier Hemlock Company, Limited, of which he is general manager; Bullis, Schoonmaker & McNeil, real estate and lumber; Schoonmaker & Sheldon, hardwood lumber; Schoonmaker & Davis, lumber; Hall, Schoonmaker & Co., lumber; and Stickney, Bell & Co., merchants.

He is also prominent in politics and decidedly popular with the people. He was postmaster of Limestone four years, station agent ten years, seven years president of the Board of Education, and supervisor of Carrolton six consecutive years ending with 1890, and was re-elected in 1893. In 1882-83 he represented the Second Assembly District of Cattaraugus county in the State Legislature. He has served as a member of the Republican State Committee for Chautauqua, Cattaraugus, and Allegany counties, has attended several times as a delegate the Republican State congressional and senatorial conventions, and is always a delegate to the Republican county conventions. Mr. Schoonmaker is a man of comprehensive business ability and has a ready knowledge of men. He is a bold speculator and apparently relies on his own judgment. He is affable and gentlemanly, and a pleasant companion. He is a good talker, a good listener, and fond of a good joke. Emphatically he is the poor man's friend, ready to aid the needy and help them to help themselves. Feb. 21, 1867, he married Eliza Palen, of Sullivan county, who died Aug. 4, 1870. She was the mother of his son Fred P., born March 11, 1870. Nov. 2, 1871, he married Sarah J., youngest daughter of Levi Leonard. Their children are Eliza W., born July 25, 1872; Alice, born Dec. 9, 1873; and Faith, born Oct. 12, 1881.

Charles E. Schrader, son of Edward, was born in Prussia in April, 1853. In October, 1870, his parents with their family of five sons and two daughters emigrated to America. In April, 1871, they settled in Limestone, where Mr. Schrader at once found employment in the tannery. Charles E. Schrader has spent his whole life as an employee in tanneries and is capable, industrious, and trustworthy. Dec. 8, 1881, he married Anna L. Miller, a native of Mecklenberg, Schewrin, Prussia, and a daughter of John Miller.

Bradner Scott was born in Wallkill, N. Y., in 1842. Losing both parents in early childhood he experienced a youth of severe hardship. In 1859 he came to Limestone with Mr. Smith, of the firm of Dodge & Smith, in whose employ he had been several years, remaining with them here until August, 1864, when he enlisted in the U. S. navy under Commodore Farragut in the Squadron of the Mississippi, and was honorably discharged in August, 1865. Returning to Limestone he continued in the employ of Dodge & Smith until they sold their tannery, and was an employee of the Limestone tannery nearly all the time until 1887. Since then he has been a farmer. Mr. Scott married, first, Eliza Wood, who was the mother of six children, five of whom are living. He married, second, Melinda Skinner.

Maurice Tuller, son of Alvah, was born in the town of North East, Pa., Nov. 4, 1861, and was reared and educated to railroad station work. His father, the present station agent at Cattaraugus, taught him both telegraphy and depot business. At the age of sixteen he began as telegraph operator and clerk at Cattaraugus. He accepted the position of station agent of the B., R. & P. R. R. at Limestone and took charge Aug. 4, 1890. Oct. 10, 1882, he married Elsie Pierce, of Cattaraugus, N. Y.

Shep. L. Vibbard, was born of English parentage in Ellicottville in 1838. His father, Chester Vibbard, came from Massachusetts at an early day. Shep. L. learned the printing business of the late Robert Shankland, and at the first call for troops enlisted in Co. I, 37th N. Y. Vols., leaving the service as corporal two years later. Soon afterward he settled in Limestone, where he has since been prominent in local Democratic politics. He was elected justice of the peace in 1866, 1870, 1874, 1880, 1884, 1888, and 1892, and is now serving his twentieth year as town clerk. In 1874 he served as supervisor. He is also clerk of the village of Limestone and of the Board of Education. He is a member of Henry Renner Lodge, No. 780, F. & A. M., is its present master, is a member of St. John's Commandery at Olean and of Olean Chapter, of Bradford Post, No. 141, G. A. R., of the A. O. U. W., being district deputy grand master of the latter order in 1889, and of the K. O. T. M. and the E. A. U. In 1868 Mr. Vibbard married Cynthia R., daughter of Calvin Leonard, and they have three children.

Marcus N. Wample, born in Montgomery county, N. Y., Nov. 1, 1824, came to Vandalia from Chautauqua county in 1850. He is a lumberman and was employed by William Grimes, and since his death in 1877 he has been engaged with J. H. Grimes. About 1855 he married Mary J., daughter of William Grimes. They have one daughter, Jessie, born July 22, 1858.

Robert J. Watson, son of James and Catherine (Hallock) Watson, was born in South Worcester, Schoharie county, Nov. 15, 1856. His father enlisted in the Union army, was captured, confined in Andersonville prison, and died of starvation. Robert J. Watson, being left at the age of six years without fatherly counsel, experienced a youth of severe hardship. He began chopping wood for J. H. & A. Kiersted, tanners of Hancock, N. Y., who soon gave him a clerkship in their office and store, where he remained five years, devoting the winters to attending school. He was their book-keeper and in 1881 accepted the position of agent for the Salamanca tannery. In 1884 he came to Limestone as book-keeper of the Limestone tannery, and in 1887 was made agent in place of Mr. Paxon for one year. Since Mr. Paxon's return Mr. Watson has been his assistant. Mr. Watson has served as treasurer of the village and as member of the Board of Education several years, being president one year. In Feb., 1891, he was elected supervisor of Carrollton and re-elected in 1892. April 24, 1881, he married Irena Knowles, of Delaware county. They have one son, Roy R., born Aug. 18, 1884.

William Whittaker, born in Darbyshire, England, May 9, 1821, emigrated with his wife and five children to Blair county, Pa., where Mrs. Whittaker died in 1858. In May, 1860, he married Jane E. Owen, of Colden, N. Y., and in the ensuing fall they settled in Limestone, where Mr. Whittaker found employment in the Limestone tannery. In April, 1861, he located on a wood lot of 100 acres, cleared a part of it, and remained there until 1875, when he removed to his present home. Mr. and Mrs. Whittaker have had five children.

Chauncey Willis, son of Isaac, was born in Conesus, N. Y., Dec. 18, 1818. His father settled in Machias in March, 1832, their log house having a dutch-back fireplace and a stick chimney plastered with mud. The doors were hung on wooden hinges and fastened with wooden latches. Their currency—black-salts—was at first the only commodity that would bring money. Isaac Willis died in 1837. Oct. 22, 1842, Chauncey Willis married Polly Phillips, who was born in Freedom, Oct. 5, 1822. They commenced housekeeping on the homestead, where he gave his mother a home until her decease. From 1862 or '63 until 1868 he was a farmer near Little Valley Center. Since then he has been a citizen of the town of Carrollton and has owned the Peter Zeliff homestead within the corporation of Limestone. He is a member of the village Board of Trustees. His children are Sarah J., born July 29, 1845, married Nathaniel Ethridge, Jan. 17, 1869, and died Oct. 3, 1872, leaving an only daughter, Cora, who was born April 8, 1870, and resides with her grandparents; Warren W., born April 9, 1846, died in Little Valley, March 22, 1866; and Daniel C., born Aug. 24, 1849, married Loretta Fisk, Aug. 24, 1876.

Barnabas Wixon and his wife Elsea, with an infant daughter, came to Carrollton from Allegany county in June, 1838. He was a farmer and died Aug. 1, 1889, aged seventy-nine years. His aged widow survives him. Seth Wixon came to Carrollton as early as 1836, was a farmer, and settled in the valley about a mile north of Limestone village. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. He died in 1850, aged sixty-five years. He had nine children.

James I. Wynn, born in Scottsville, Pa., Oct. 13, 1836, began business as a sawyer in his father's mill. In March, 1863, he came to Carrollton as superintendent of B. F. Irvine's mills, which position he filled until Mr. Irvine died, since which time Mr. Wynn has conducted them for Irvine Brothers and for Plumer, Gilfillan, Steele & Co. Mr. Wynn is a man of energy and good business ability. Nov. 24, 1859, he married Rachel Todd, a native of Jamestown, N. Y., and of sturdy Scotch descent. Their children are T. Adelaide, a graduate of Geneseo Normal School, a teacher in the city schools of Bradford, Pa., and her father's book-keeper, and Irvine L., his father's head sawyer.

Peter Zeliff was born in Northumberland county, Pa. He was a lumberman, and when a little less than twenty-one years of age he married Marvellous Hodge. In 1832 he settled in Carrollton, being the second family to locate where the village of Limestone has since been built. He cleared a small piece of ground and built a log cabin, which he covered with bark. His place was ten miles from Great Valley, the nearest white settlement, and no road the last six miles. He used Tuna creek for a highway and brought his wife and four children to his "lodge" in a canoe. He bought and paid for 200 acres. Eventually he started for the gold regions of Pike's Peak and was last heard from near his destination. It is supposed he was murdered. Mrs. Zeliff died in Carrollton in 1874. They had eleven children. A daughter, Harriet (Mrs. John McKenzie), born June 29, 1834, was the first white child born in Carrollton.

George Zeliff, oldest son of Peter, was born in Farmington, Pa., Sept. 19, 1825, came with his parents to Carrollton in 1832, and has since resided here. He began business for himself in cutting and hewing square timber, making pine shingles, and piloting rafts down the river. Later he has given his attention to his farm. April 14, 1853, he married Betsey Balman, of Lawrence, Pa., and they have had four children, two of whom died in infancy; the others are William A., born Feb. 28, 1854, married, first, Jennie Scott, and second Stella Duel; and Orinaldo, born February 5, 1865, married Hetty Ingler.

William E. Zeliff, son of Peter, was born on the homestead in Carrollton in 1835, and was educated in the common schools with a few terms at Chamberlain Institute. He commenced his business life by buying and selling lumber and shingles and running them to market down the river to Pittsburg, Cincinnati, and Louisville, which occupation he has followed to the present time. He was elected clerk of his town at the age of twenty-two years and soon after became constable and collector. At about the age of twenty-five he settled just across the State line, where he has resided about twenty years, but his business, home, and property has always been in his native town. In 1885 he returned to Carrollton and in 1886 was elected commissioner of highways, having been elected each year since. Mr. Zeliff has from time to time operated for oil. July 4, 1864, he married Marilla J. Glass, of Bradford, and their children are William H., a traveling salesman, and Fred R.

CHAPTER XXI.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF COLD SPRING.

COLD SPRING, the second township in range eight of the Holland survey, was formed from Napoli, March 20, 1837, embracing all the land south to the Pennsylvania line described by the Holland Land Company as towns one and two in that range. April 2, 1847, a part of town one was set off to South Valley and in 1848 another portion was annexed to the same town, leaving Cold Spring with its present area of 18,787 acres. The town is bounded on the south by Elko, on the west by Randolph, on the north by Napoli, and on the east by Salamanca and Red House. The Allegheny river, the largest stream in Cold Spring, flows southwesterly through the southeastern corner a distance of almost three miles, receiving the waters of Cold Spring creek about two miles above its entrance into Elko, and a little above that, still, the rivulet known as Robinson run. The other streams are Saw Mill run, rising in Napoli and flowing southeasterly and easterly through the northeast corner; Sunfish creek, rising in the eastern part and flowing southeasterly; and the Little Conewango, rising a short distance west of Steamburgh and flowing northwesterly. Cold Spring creek rises in Napoli and flows southerly nearly across the center of the town through what is locally termed "Hardscrabble" and "Lebanon," and its pure cold water suggested the town-ship's name. On the western edge of the town is also a small mill brook flowing southwesterly into Randolph. Nearly all of these streams afford excellent water-power, which was formerly utilized and improved, contributing materially to the prosperity of the town, but since the timber has been exhausted and steam has come into more general use these numerous mill privileges have been abandoned.

The surface is broken into summits and intervalles, some of the hills being 500 feet above the general level of the valleys. In the central, northeastern, and southwestern portions of the town the land is almost mountainous. The entire town was originally densely covered with pine and hemlock, some of the trees reaching a height of over 200 feet. These have been converted into lumber, of which millions of feet have been manufactured and shipped. Indeed lumbering at one time formed the chief occupation of the people. The soil in the valleys is a fertile, gravelly loam, while the uplands or hills are principally a slaty loam not well adapted to farming. The staple products are hay, grain, and potatoes, with fruit in limited quantities. Hunting is still a favorite sport, rabbits, fox, and partridges being the principal game, though ducks and some small fur-bearing animals are sometimes captured in considerable numbers.

In 1819, according to the books of the Holland Land Company, land was owned in town by Philip Tome, Artemas Houghton, Jesse Hotchkiss, Milton Helms, and Isaac Dow, some of whom became actual settlers. The early comers suffered all the privations incident to pioneer life, which tended to make them rugged and hardy, as indeed they must have been to master the huge forests and reclaim the land from a wilderness to a fine agricultural district. Many of their descendants are enjoying the fruits of their ancestors, axe and plow; others have moved westward; others still have passed away, forgotten in name but not in deeds. The first settlers were mainly from other portions of the State, though a few were emigrants from New England. They moved in by ox-teams, bringing their families and effects on sleds.

Philip Tome was doubtless the first settler in Cold Spring. He came about 1818 from Susquehanna, Pa., and was a hunter and trapper. He caught large numbers of elk, which were abundant then, and engaged extensively in lumbering, claiming to have run the first raft of lumber down the Allegheny river. For many years he was widely known as the owner of a tame bear which he taught many tricks. He died in South Valley. James and Robert Pease and a Mr. Conn settled here soon afterward, but removed. Jesse Hotchkiss came to what is now South Valley about 1819, where he died. Isaac Merrill, from Connecticut, moved onto lot 54 in 1822. He was born in April, 1779, and died in Randolph, October 17, 1858. Henry Washburn came in 1823. Marshall Marsh came about 1820. They built a saw-mill near the Annin fish hatchery, utilizing the springs there as a water-power.

Charles Crook came to Cold Spring in March, 1822, locating on lot 32. He was a soldier in the Revolution. He built a shanty, the roof and floor of which were of bark, and a saw-mill on Cold Spring creek the same season, having brought a millwright with him. Polly Chandler, his wife, born in 1759, died here in 1833. Frink and Erastus Crook, brothers, located on lot 31 also in 1822. They later moved away. Joshua Barnes, Alvah Rogers, and Horace Wait all came in 1822, the former settling on lot 32 and the latter on lot 30. Joel Hall located on lot 54 in 1823. Capt. Amos Hall, an ambitious, energetic man, moved here in 1825 and for many years was the town's most influential citizen. He died in Kansas in 1878. Erastus Hall, a life-long resident of the county, came to Napoli in 1820 and to Cold Spring in 1825. Philemon Hall, born August 27, 1792, came here about 1824, and died November 12, 1875. His son Joel served in the War of 1812.

Parley Marsh, born in 1796, settled in 1826 on lot 53, as did also Arba Marsh. The latter died here in January, 1839. Newton Marsh came this same year and died in January, 1836. Blakeley Ingalls, who settled in town in 1825, died here in 1838. Sylvester May was a settler in 1828 and William Earl, on lot 17, in 1832. The latter's father was killed by the falling of a tree in Genesee county. He died April 30, 1880, and his wife March 7, 1870. James Hackett came in 1831 and was killed by the cars at Marsh's crossing in March, 1891. Jonas Hubbard settled on lot 29 in 1830. Samuel Price "pitched his tent" on lot 50 in 1833, where his son Dorr now lives. He died there May 31, 1862.

Allen Campbell was a settler in 1835. He was a justice of the peace nearly his whole life here. He died in Iowa in 1864. For many years he was a lumber manufacturer and prominent in town affairs. Two of his sons enlisted in Co. A, 154th N. Y. Vols., in 1862, one serving through the war, the other taking a "French leave." Brazil Kent, now living in Steamburg, came in 1837 and has long been a hotel keeper, mail carrier, stage proprietor, postmaster, and farmer. For sixteen years he ran a stage from Steamburg to Warren, Pa. Isaiah W. Darling moved into the town in 1839. For over twenty-five years he served continuously as justice of the peace; he has been supervisor, justice of sessions, and held every town office. He is still a highly respected resident. His father John was a very early settler of Conewango. James M. Woodworth, still living, came here in 1851 and was for some time an extensive lumber manufacturer. He took contracts to build bridges and culverts for what is now the N. Y., P. & O. R.R. He says he owned and still has in his possession the first M. E. class-book ever brought into Cold Spring, and in it was probably first written the name Steamburg. Warren H. Reeves came to South Valley in 1837. This family, several representatives of whom still reside there and in Cold Spring and are mentioned at length elsewhere, has always been prominent in town and county affairs. Hezekiah Owen, whose father was an early settler of Conewango, came thence to Cold Spring in 1853, having served since then some twenty-four years as justice of the peace. He is a surveyor, the oldest living one probably in the county, and has assisted or himself laid lot lines in many surrounding towns.

To Charles Crook belongs the honor of planting, on lot 32, the first orchard in the town, in 1823, and erecting the first frame barn, in 1825. It is also said that he built the first private saw-mill, in 1822; the Halls put up one the same year. A saw-mill was put up by the government on Upper Saw Mill run for the Indians before this date, but the year can not be determined. The first grist-mill was located in what is now Elko, and was known as Quaker mill. The building is still standing. The first steam saw-mill in town was built by Curtis Harding on Sunfish run. Charles Morse, in 1855, put in the first sole circular saw in Cold Spring. The first steam shingle-mill was built by the late E. L. Lyon. Charles Crook and Sally Ballard were married in 1822 and the next year a daughter, Martha, was born; she was the first white child born in the town. A Mr. Prescott, father of Eastman, was the first adult to die in Cold Spring. The first frame school house was built in 1835 on a lot given by Nathan Crook. In 1831 and 1832 schools were taught by a Miss Noble and Miss E. Sanford. A log school house was erected near Price Corners in 1835, the first teacher there being Miss Ordella Gleason and the second one her sister, Louisa. The first tavern and store were kept by Philemon Hall. The first burials were made on lot 29, near the depot in Steamburgh, and on lot 32. Rev. William J. Wilcox, a Congregational minister, held, it is claimed, the first religious meetings in town in 1823.

The first roads in the town were opened in 1821. Previous to that year, however, some of the settlers farther north had underbrushed a few roads through the dense forests to enable them to get to the Quaker mill on the south side of Allegheny river. Little attempt had been made down to 1838 to improve the highways otherwise than to clear away the brush and stumps. At that date there were twelve road districts and in 1840 three more were formed. In 1842 the number was eighteen, and now there are twenty-seven. The "Old Indian Trail" ran through this town, following Cold Spring creek, and passing into Napoli on lot 41. Before the settlers came in it was merely a footpath. The present roads are well graded and kept in good condition, and bridged over the streams with substantial bridges, some of which are of iron.

The first town meeting was held March 6, 1838, at the house of Eastman Prescott, and these officers were elected: Supervisor, Stephen Aldrich, Jr.; town clerk, James Pease; justices of the peace, James Pease, Stephen Aldrich, Jr., and Samuel Price; assessors, Samuel Price, Samuel J. York, and Harper Bovee; collector, Ebenezer C. Price; commissioners of highways, John H. Godfrey, John Cook, Jr., and David Pease; poormasters, Samuel Price and David Pease; commissioners of common schools, Samuel J. York, John Timmerman, Jr., and John H. Godfrey; school inspectors, Joseph Batty, Harper Bovee, and John Timmerman, Jr.; constables, George W. Lewis, Hial Tanner, David Pease, and Ebenezer C. Price. Abial Relf was clerk of the meeting and Eastman Prescott was justice.

At a special town meeting held September 27, 1862, "for the purpose of deliberating in regard to compromising with the Erie & New York City railroad and others who claim to hold the bonds of said town [Cold Spring], and also for the purpose of considering the propriety of surrendering the stock of said town to the said railroad," the supervisor was authorized to pay $290, previously collected, and collect $350 more and pay the company, making altogether twelve per cent. of the amount of the bonds issued to the railroad. The supervisor was further authorized to surrender the railroad bonds, 140 in number of $50 each, subscribed for by the town October 23, 1855. E. C. Price and Freedom Jeffords were appointed to act in behalf of the town of Cold Spring, and the exchange was perfected and satisfactorily settled October 16, 1862. A special town meeting held April 5, 1864, voted to raise $1,500 to pay soldiers' bounties. A later meeting voted to levy a tax of $1,420.86 on all taxable property to procure volunteers to fill the town's quota. January 1, 1865, at a special meeting, a tax was authorized, enabling the town to pay bounties of "$600 for three years' men, $200 for two years' men, and $100 for one year's men." The supervisor was also authorized to issue bonds on the town for the amount of the bounties. It was also voted "that all men in this town who are liable to a draft and not on the assessment roll shall pay $10 or not be entitled to the town bounty." February 28, 1865, the town voted to pay a bounty of $100 "hard money" per man for soldiers to fill the quota under the president's call of December, 1864. William M. Brown and Samuel H. Barrett were appointed a committee to revise the military roll and do other business respecting the enlisting and recruiting of soldiers. At a town meeting held October 9, 1888, a board of health was duly organized and composed as follows: M. A. Jaquay, president; Dr. H. D. Snover, health officer; and Fred L. Lyon, W. H. H. Campbell, John Hackett, Ransom L. Reeves, and George W. Henninger. A special meeting was held March 18, 1891, to consider the question of building a town hall. The sum not to exceed $800, to include the cost of the lot, was voted and soon afterward a site adjoining the Union church property was purchased and a neat frame building, one story high, erected thereon. The present Board of Health consists of H. D. Snover, M.D., health officer, Daniel F. Reeves, Clifton M. Parks, D. M. Metcalf, John Hackett, and George W. Reeves. The principal town officers since 1838 are as follows:

Supervisors.—Stephen Aldrich, Jr., 1838; Horace D. Swan, 1839-42; Alson Leavenworth, 1843-46; John Crooks, 1847 (Parley Marsh was appointed to fill the vacancy; Crooks lived in the town of South Valley, which was formed this year); Howard Fuller, 1848-49; Thomas Higgins, 1850; John D. Wheat, 1851;

Howard Fuller, 1832; Thomas Higgins, 1833-55; Freedom Jeffords, 1856-57; Isaiah W. Darling, 1858-59; Freedom Jeffords, 1860; E. C. Price, 1861; Howard Fuller, 1862; Freedom Jeffords, 1863; William M. Brown, 1864-66; Henry C. Fuller, 1867; Samuel H. Barrett, 1868; Robert M. Patterson, 1869; G. A. Williams, 1870 (appointed, there being no election); Daniel F. Reeves, 1871-72; Clark McCollister, 1873-74; William M. Brown, 1875-77; H. A. Ostrander, 1878; George W. Van Syckle, 1879-83; Hiram K. Whelpley, 1884; Orson E. Helms, 1885-86; M. A. Jaquay, 1887-88; Albert Hale, 1889-91; Daniel F. Reeves, 1892-93.

Town Clerks.—James Pease, 1838; Eastman Prescott, 1839; James Pease, 1840-41; Robert Creighton, 1842; A. M. Casler, 1843; Frederick Aldrich, 1844-45; Howard Fuller, 1846; Frederick Aldrich, 1847-48; Thomas Higgins, 1849; William Wyman, 1850-51; James A. Swan, 1852-53; Samuel H. Barrett, 1854; Daniel S. Swan, 1855; James H. Swan, 1856; Daniel S. Swan, 1857-58; Augustus Payne, 1859-61; Orson B. Coe, 1862-63; A. V. Fuller, 1864-66; Austin B. Wells, 1867; William G. Ingraham, 1868; B. G. Casler, 1869; C. B. Sturdevant, 1870; M. W. Gibbs, 1871; C. S. Lyon, 1872; John W. Paisley, 1873; Frank E. Wells, 1874-77; M. A. Jaquay, 1878-84; E. Carlos Lyon, 1885; David G. Bliss, 1886; John F. Vail, 1887; George W. Henninger, 1888; John Hackett, 1889; John F. Vail, 1890-93.

Justices of the Peace.—1838, James Pease, Stephen Aldrich, Jr., Samuel Price; 1839, Abner P. Jones; 1840, Abraham M. Casler, Samuel J. York; 1841, Eastman Prescott; 1842, Abraham M. Casler; 1843, Samuel Price; 1844, Erastus Hall, Ariel Wellman, Jr.; 1845, Thomas Higgins, George Marsh; 1846, Thomas Higgins, Enoch Holdridge, Allen Campbell; 1847, Isaiah W. Darling, Thomas Higgins, A. M. Casler; 1848, Horace D. Swan; 1849, Noah Culver; 1850, Henry Whitmore; 1851, I. W. Darling, Ebenezer C. Price; 1852, Madison Woodworth; 1853, Howard Fuller; 1854, Anthony Covert, Alfred Fuller; 1855, Allen Campbell, Thomas Higgins, E. C. Price; 1856, James W. Woodworth; 1857, I. W. Darling, Howard Fuller; 1858, Allen Campbell, Freedom Jeffords; 1859, I. W. Darling; 1860, E. C. Price; 1861, Hezekiah Owen; 1862, Allen Campbell, Orson B. Coe; 1863, I. W. Darling; 1864, Franklin C. Hovey, James M. Woodworth; 1865, O. B. Coe; 1866, Stephen Cooper, Samuel H. Barrett; 1867, I. W. Darling; 1868, Hezekiah Owen, E. C. Price; 1869, Anson D. Burlingame; 1870, S. H. Barrett; 1871, I. W. Darling, E. C. Price; 1872, H. W. Burdick; 1873, Alpha Flagg, John W. Paisley; 1874, John W. Paisley; 1875, Frank E. Wells; 1876, Frank E. Wells, Hiram L. Saunders; 1877, Hezekiah Owen; 1878, John Hackett, L. Nutting; 1879, I. W. Darling, D. M. Metcalf; 1880, D. M. Metcalf; 1881, M. J. Welch; 1882, John Hackett, H. V. Nutting; 1883, Hezekiah Owen; 1884, W. H. H. Campbell; 1885, Albert Hale; 1886, John Hackett; 1887, R. L. Reeves; 1888, D. M. Metcalf; 1889, Edward V. Randall; 1890, Wilber Congleton, John Hackett; 1891, Clifton M. Parks; 1892, Ernest D. Holdridge, John Hackett; 1893, J. A. Covert.

The Allegany Indian reservation cuts into the eastern edge of the town nearly three miles, and an arm averaging about a mile in width extends up the valley of Cold Spring creek some two miles, taking in what is locally known as "Long Meadow," a narrow strip of land entirely free from timber or brush. The boundary lines of the reservation are marked by means of iron posts.

On the foggy morning of October 27, 1872, a collision occurred at the depot in Steamburg between a passenger and a freight train, killing Harrison Morrison and Uriah Rhodes and fatally injuring Edward Culver, who died five days later. Rhodes lived in Napoli and the others in Steamburg. On Sunday morning, February 5, 1888, an eastbound passenger train crashed into the rear end of a freight standing on the side track at the depot and instantly killed a brakeman and a seventeen-year-old girl named Hattie Abbott, and mortally wounding Freight Conductor Ellis, who died a few hours later. Four other persons were injured. A broken frog was the cause of the accident. Late in December, 1870, a sleigh-load of people was returning one foggy morning from a dancing party of the night before, and when crossing the railroad opposite the Indian cemetery at Robinson run they were struck by the westbound express and two or three killed and several injured. In 1864 an Irishman named Pat. McCool bought a pair of boots in Steamburg, remarking to the storekeeper: "They are the last pair I shall ever want." He started home on the railroad track, and arriving at the bridge over Cold Spring creek either purposely or accidentally stepped through and was drowned before help could reach him. James Hackett, father of John, was killed in March, 1891, at Marsh's crossing.

The most brutal murder ever perpetrated in the town of Cold Spring, and one that will long be remembered, was that of Caleb Omens by his stepson, William Bourne, in a house which stood on the lot now occupied by the Union church edifice in the village of Steamburg. The crime occurred in the evening of December 31, 1873, but was done so quietly that even some of the nearest neighbors were not aware of it until New Year's morning. It seems that Bourne had long before deliberately planned to murder his stepfather in some manner, but it was not until the festivities of a New Year's dance were at their height that he saw a good opportunity. The murderer was convicted and sentenced to Auburn prison, whence he was afterward pardoned. On account of this crime being committed on ground afterward bought and duly consecrated to the service of God some superstitious villagers and townspeople will not enter the neat Union church edifice to worship, evidently believing a dire evil would result should they pass over soil once dyed with human blood.

The New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio ("Nypano") railroad, one of the Erie lines, passes through Cold Spring from east to west, the only station in the town being Steamburg. The road was built under the name Atlantic & Great Western railway in 1860. The depot in Steamburg was burned with all its contents in May, 1881, and the present frame structure erected in the fall of 1882. The Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad crosses the southeast corner of the town, but has no station there. The Cold Spring Railroad Company was incorporated April 30, 1839, by Horace D. Swan, Charles Crook, Jr., Manly Healy, and others, for fifteen years, and was authorized to build a wooden railway from a point near Samuel Barrett's saw-mills to the Allegheny river at or near the mouth of Cold Spring creek. "Steam, animal, or mechanical power" could be used and "persons or property transported." The capital was $2,500 in twenty-five shares of $100 each. The road was never begun and the charter became void three years after the passage of the act.

In 1840 Cold Spring had a population of 602; in 1850, 591; in 1860, 667; in 1870, 835; in 1880, 860; in 1890, 892; in 1892, 912.

School districts were organized at a meeting of the commissioners of common schools held April 24, 1838. The town is divided into six school districts, and in 1892 schools were maintained in all of them with an aggregate attendance of 211 scholars taught by eight teachers. The amount expended for school purposes during the school year was $2,338.27. The valuation of the property of the town assessed for school purposes is $289,409. The school buildings and sites are valued at $3,200.

It is interesting to note the salaries of some of the town officers in 1838 and 1839. The supervisor received $8.13; town clerk, $10.41; assessors from $11.63 to $18.75; school commissioners about $3; commissioners of highways from $4 to $14. In 1841 John G. Bruce as assessor received $17; Howard Fuller as school commissioner and inspector, $4; James Pease as town clerk $26.18. The assessed valuation of the town has never exceeded $236,000. In 1892 it was $186,091.

The town of Cold Spring was originally covered with the finest growth of pine timber of any town in the county. It has been pre-eminently a lumber town, furnishing for shipment millions of feet, but the large number of mills have been moved away until now only one remains, that of Morse & Wyman's in Steamburg. The first saw-mill was built for the Indians by the government on Saw Mill run. Another was erected at the same time in South Valley, and the ruins of this can be seen today. The first individual saw-mill was probably put in by Charles Crook, in 1822, on Cold Spring creek, though the Halls built one on Spring brook the same year. In 1836 they erected one on the Little Conewango and in 1839 still another; in 1842 and in 1844 they built two on Spring brook. They put up a grist-mill with a single run of stone on the latter stream in 1824 and one in 1833 with three runs of stone. Price & Culver built a saw-mill on the Little Conewango in 1840. In 1870 this was rebuilt by Nathan Niles. Thomas Harvey and James Orton in 1835 erected one on Cold Spring creek; Thomas Harvey & Son put another in on the same stream in 1838; and Marvin Feary and Eben Sibley still another in 1840. Samuel Barrett, prominent also in town affairs, built two saw-mills on Cold Spring creek and Daniel Blood another a little below. Parley Marsh built a saw-mill on Trout Grove brook in 1827, which was since rebuilt. Amos Hall erected one on Spring brook in 1858 that was later owned by George W. Watkins. Mr. Hall in 1842 put up a shingle-mill on the same stream which afterward became the property of Lewis Morton. This mill was enlarged to include a grist-mill and cooperage.

Nye & White in 1846 erected at Cold Spring for Holt & Jeffords the first steam saw-mill built in Cattaraugus county. In 1848 it was purchased by E. L. Lyon and in 1854 it burned. Its capacity was 1,500,000 feet of lumber annually. Lyon & Vale built a steam saw-mill on Robinson run in 1847, which was burned in 1849, and rebuilt by Alonzo Woodford in 1850. It was moved in 1858 to the mouth of that stream, thence in 1862 to lot 30, and finally removed in 1868 to the Larkin tract. Curtis Harding in 1848 put up a steam saw-mill on lot 8 that was run some eight years. He built another on this lot in 1860 that cut about 3,000,000 feet of lumber annually. William M. Brown erected a steam saw-mill in Steamburg in 1858. In 1861 it was moved to Meeting House run and in 1864 to Robinson run, where it was purchased by Silas Harkness and removed to Cold Spring. It cut about 3,000,000 feet of lumber yearly. E. L. Lyon in 1851 built a steam saw-mill in Steamburg village. It was both burned and rebuilt in 1853 and again in 1854, and was later enlarged to a capacity of 2,000,000 shingles per annum. A stave and planing-mill was connected, the whole being driven by a thirty-five horse-power engine. In 1845 Samuel Price put in a saw-mill on the Little Conewango, twenty-five by forty feet, which was later rebuilt by his son, Joseph Price, who ran it until a few years ago. Mr. Lyon erected the first steam shingle-mill in the town. It was located in Steamburgh village where James Corbett now lives. Charles Morse in 1855 built the first sole circular saw-mill in Cold Spring. It was located in Steamburgh and operated by him and his brother Harmon about four years, when they sold to William M. Brown.

A wool-carding and cloth-dressing mill was erected by Enoch Holdridge on Spring brook at East Randolph in 1858. It was afterward owned by Frederick Butcher & Son in manufacturing yarns and flannels. Gideon Marsh in 1872 built a single-run-of-stone grist-mill on the Little Conewango, 30x36 feet, two stories high, with a wing 24x26. He also operated a turning lathe, scroll and slitting saws, etc. H. L. Sanders built a spoke and hub factory in Steamburgh about 1875. Another similar establishment was erected in 1870 on Trout Grove brook by A. & S. T. Stedman, who did a business of about $3,000 annually.

Morse & Wyman's steam saw and shingle-mill in Steamburgh was purchased by them of Joseph Leach in September, 1872. It was formerly owned by E. L. Lyon. Fred D. Williams's shingle and grist-mill, west of Steamburgh village, was erected by Gideon Marsh. Mr. Williams purchased it of Benjamin Taylor. It is run by water-power and is known as a freshet mill.

The Price creamery, located a little north of the railroad in the western part of the town, was built in the fall of 1874 by E. C. Price and G. A. Williams at a cost of over $4,000. It is thirty-six by fifty-six feet, three stories high, and run by steam-power. In 1875 Mr. Price died and Mr. Williams rented it for two years, when Mrs. E. C. Price and her daughter Emma (now Mrs. T. P. Butler) became proprietors. Mrs. Price died in February, 1890, and her son Elbert acquired her interest, thus making the present owners Elbert Price and Mrs. T. P. Butler. Cream separators are used and both butter and cheese are manufactured, the capacity being about 500 cows. The Rich creamery, located southeast of East Randolph village, forty by sixty feet in size and three stories high, was erected in 1874 by Edwin Stone, who later sold to Joshua Rich. It cost $5,180 and is operated by steam-power, having a capacity of over 400 cows.

The Annin fish hatchery, on lot 53, was started in 1868 by John B. Eddy as the Trout Grove fishery. It covers about fourteen acres of hillside land, from which a large number of pure soft-water springs gush forth in never varying quantities, which never freeze. Mr. Eddy with his son conducted and improved the hatchery, adding to their business a small summer resort, and finally admitted a Mr. Shelly to partnership. The latter soon sold his interest to a Mr. Thomas and the firm became Eddy & Thomas. Finally H. O. Burt acquired possession by mortgage and rented to Martin V. Mosher, who ran it on a small scale until July, 1890, when James Annin, Jr., of Caledonia, Livingston county, purchased the premises and installed his brother Herbert E. as general manager. There are some twenty ponds, affording a capacity of over 2,500,000 eggs annually. The present yearly output of small fish is about 500,000, requiring the care of two or three men. The food used is beef liver. Brook trout are bred principally, though brown or German and California mountain trout are produced in considerable quantities. Convenient buildings and breeding and rearing vats have been constructed, and the business is carried on in a thoroughly scientific manner.

It is quite certain that the first burials in town were made on lot 28, a short distance north of the depot in Steamburgh, whence their remains were never removed. Nathan Crook later donated a piece of land on lot 32 for this purpose, but from this a number have been taken up and interred elsewhere. It is now a cultivated field. Samuel Price, at an early day, started a burial ground on a portion of his farm since included in the farm of Daniel F. Reeves. Some of the remains have been removed, but many still rest there, their graves unmarked by stone or slab. The Steamburgh Cemetery Association was organized in 1863. Duane Marsh was killed in the Civil war and his remains were sent home for burial. They were interred by the roadside near the present grounds, and it was this incident that probably started the subject of establishing a cemetery. George Marsh and G. A. Williams each contributed a piece of land, to which additions were afterward made, making the present plat about two acres, neatly enclosed and well drained. The first officers were Ebenezer C. Price, president; Freedom Jeffords, secretary; G. A. Williams, treasurer; Sylvester A. May, William Earl, and E. L. Lyon, trustees. Unfortunately the organization has dwindled down so much that a list of the present officers can not be accurately obtained. The Bunker Hill Cemetery Association was organized with Isaiah W. Darling as the first president. It is a small plat of ground situated near the central part of the town, well fenced and cared for. Lyman Scott is president and Richard Langham, treasurer. The Indians have a cemetery on their reservation.

A pretty and romantic spot is Red pond, situated in the eastern-central part of Cold Spring, and covering an area of about two acres. The water is of a dark red color, which suggests its name.

A part of the village of East Randolph is situated in the northeast corner of the town, but as it will be fully noticed in the history of Randolph further mention of it here is omitted.

Steamburgh, a station and postoffice on the N. Y., P. & O. R. R., is a thriving village of over 150 inhabitants and contains two general stores, two hotels, a saw and planing-mill, a shoe shop, two blacksmith shops, a meat market, a Union church, town hall, and a physician's office. The first settler on the site was Eastman Prescott, who came at an early day, but no effort to found a village was made until after the completion of the railroad. Up to that time the village of Cold Spring had become famous as a lumbering center, but with the building of the railroad its principal business interests were diverted to Steamburg, which gradually assumed a position of considerable importance as a lumber town. The name Steamburg was applied to the village from the fact that a number of steam mills were situated here and in the vicinity. Meletiah Price erected, it is said, the first frame building in the village. The first blacksmith was probably a Mr. Geer. The first store in the town is claimed to have been built and kept by Horace Holt prior to 1837. It was in the upper part of "Lebanon" in the Barrett district. The first store in Steamburg was erected in 1856 by Freedom Jeffords and kept by Howard Fuller and B. G. Casler. The second one, built in 1871 by E. L. Lyon, was kept by Robert Carson, and the third was erected in 1873 by Franklin Jackson and occupied by Nutting Brothers. The first hotel, the A. & G. W. House, was built by Moses B. Wells in 1864. He was succeeded as landlord by Dana Grout. Mr. Wells a year later again took it and changed its name to the Travelers' Home. In 1867 he closed it and the next year it was re-opened by Alpha Flagg and Howard Wright as the Steamburg House, by which name it was afterward known. The succeeding proprietors have been Alpha Flagg, H. K. Whelpley, Mr. Flagg again, Horace S. Frederick, Chauncey Earl, Mr. Flagg again, Henry Staples, and finally Mr. Flagg, who closed it July 1, 1892, and now occupies it as a dwelling. The Union House was converted into a hotel from an old store by B. G. Casler in 1867 and opened that year by Brazil Kent. It has had several proprietors, among whom were H. S. Frederick, A. J. Hotchkiss, Gilbert O'Dell, White Williams, and W. P. Smith, the present landlord. The Earl House, a neat frame building, was formerly a dwelling and changed into a hostelry by Chauncey Earl, who conducted it about five years. In July, 1892, he sold to Timothy J. Brushingham, the present proprietor.

The Steamburg postoffice, the only one in town, was established in March, 1860, with Ethel L. Lyon as the first postmaster. His successors have been B. G. Casler, Maurice Gibbs, Robert Carson, F. L. Beyer, M. A. Jaquay, H. D. Nutting, Lucius Nutting, David Bliss, Brazil Kent, and H. G. Wyman, who has served since May 23, 1889. While Lucius Nutting was postmaster the office was burned. It became a money-order office July 16, 1892.

The only severe fire the village of Steamburg has ever suffered occurred a few years ago and caused a loss of between $7,000 and $8,000. The principal buildings burned were M. A. Jaquay's store, the meat market, and the Steamburg House barn. All were speedily rebuilt. The fine frame school building in Steamburg was erected in 1873 at a cost of about $1,800, including an addition to the old lot, on which stood the first school in the village. Both buildings were constructed under the supervision of Hezekiah Owen. The present structure is thirty by fifty feet in size, one story high, and surmounted by a bell and belfry, and will accommodate about eighty scholars. The Steamburgh free church edifice was commenced in 1884 and completed and dedicated by the residents of Cold Spring in the fall of 1886, being the first and only church building in the town. Prof. J. T. Edwards, of Randolph, preached the dedicatory sermon. The structure is of frame, will seat some 300 persons, and cost, including lot, about $2,000. In the belfry hangs a bell purchased by the Ladies' Bell Society and hung in 1891. The building is governed by a board of seven trustees selected from the citizens and the several denominations, and these elect a clerk, the present incumbent being George W. Reeves. The use of the building is given by appointment to any religious society desiring to hold services, all, however, contributing to its maintenance. The Union Sunday school was organized a number of years ago with Hezekiah Owen as superintendent. There are now about forty scholars with Mrs. Orange Gray as superintendent.

The James Randolph Post, No. 307, G. A. R., of Steamburgh, was organized with about forty members. H. V. Nutting was commander. Interest lagged somewhat and it was shortly afterward re-organized with W. H. H. Campbell, commander. It existed in all about two years.

Steamburgh Lodge, No. 813, I. O. G. T., was organized February 28, 1890. There were thirteen members with E. V. Randall, C. T. The present membership is forty-one and the officers are Ora Gates, C. T.; Miss Lottie Crain, V. T.; Sidney Gates, recording secretary.

Garland Grange, No. 546, P. of H., was organized in March, 1888, with about twenty-four charter members. This was the first subordinate lodge of the grange instituted in the county. The first master was the late Albert Hale and his successors were J. A. Covert, T. P. Butler, Daniel F. Reeves, H. C. Gates, and Alonzo Zimmer. There are now about thirty-five members.

Cold Spring was once a village famous along the Allegheny and Ohio rivers for its lumber interests, it being for many years the center of a great lumber trade. This business finally declined, the railroad through Steamburgh diverted its interests to that point, and the white settlers moved away, leaving it tenanted only by Indians. Excepting these dusky inhabitants and a few ruins of its old stores and taverns there is nothing left to remind the visitor of its former importance and activity. In 1839 there were three hotels kept respectively by Howard Fuller, Alonzo Woodford, and Abraham M. Casler. Fuller also kept a store. Other merchants and traders there were Benjamin Giles, Dewitt Wheat, Foster Barlow, Daniel Swan, William Brown, Howard Fuller, Jr., Alfred Fuller, B. G. Casler, and Stephen Aldrich, Jr. The last tavern keeper was Jesse Champlin. Jonathan Cricks was widely known as one of the postmasters. Mails were received on horseback once a week, and it is said that the postoffice was once officially designated "Ten Mile Spring," but the village was always known as Cold Spring.

Other localities in the town are "Hardscrabble," so-called from its high hills and deep valleys, in the northern part; "Lebanon," locally named from its being a fertile valley bounded on all sides by high elevations, in the central part; "Price Corners," named in honor of the Price families and having the only guide-board in town, in the western part; and "Bunker Hill." The latter was named from a remark made by Noah Culver, Sr., who one day witnessed a fight in the Eagle tavern between some men and facetiously exclaimed: "Gosh! That was a regular battle of Bunker Hill!"

Rev. William J. Wilcox, a Congregational minister, is claimed to have held the first religious services in the town of Cold Spring in 1823. Apparently no church organization was effected until 1851, although itinerant or circuit preachers held meetings occasionally in houses, barns, and school buildings. In 1851 a Methodist Episcopal Church Society was formed in what is now Steamburg by a Rev. Mr. Chesborough, the members being the Woodworth families, G. A. Williams and wife, W. D. Arrance and wife, and Jonathan J. Whipple. James M. Woodworth was class-leader. Among the earlier preachers were Revs. Blynn, Day, Moore, Barnhart, and Mead. The present minister in charge is Rev. Mr. Sartwell, of Randolph.

The Free Methodist Church Society of Cold Spring was organized at a camp meeting held at Gowanda by Rev. Levi Wood with four members—William Langham and wife and Foster Payne and wife. Services, however, were held in the town prior to the organization, which occurred, it is said, about 1880. The first pastor was Rev. Josiah Henning, since deceased. There are now about fourteen members, who meet for worship each week in the Steamburg Union church under the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Tuxford, of Ashville.

The Wesleyan Methodist Society was organized in the fall of 1891 by Rev. Edgar Fuller, of East Leon, with thirteen members, who have since decreased in number to about half a dozen. William A. Backus, a licensed minister, has pastoral charge and Merlin Blood is class-leader.

The United Brethren in Christ became a nominal organization in 1859 with about seven members, and was formally organized as a class in 1872. Services were held every two weeks in the "Lebanon" school house by circuit preachers. Later meetings, however, were called in the "Bunker Hill" school house, continuing there until 1891. A "split" occurred in the society in 1888 which finally caused its dissolution.

The Seventh Day Advent Society was formed in October, 1882, by J. E. Robinson, assisted by Rev. Frank Peabody. The original members numbered about fifteen. The first minister was J. P. Hayward and the present one is G. A. Williams. The deacons are L. F. Hovey and J. P. Winckie. Services are held every sabbath (Saturday) in the Union church in Steamburg. A sabbath school of about twenty scholars is under the superintendency of Mrs. B. W. Eastman. The Tract Missionary Society, organized in October, 1882, has some fifteen members who meet every four weeks, with Miss Nettie M. Hovey, librarian.

Elisha Brace was born Jan. 13, 1818, and came to Randolph about 1825. He married Mary E., daughter of John Angle, and she bore him four children: Sophronia (Mrs. D. F. Reeves, of Cold Spring), Russell, of Randolph, Annett, and Ernest. Mr. Brace died Sept. 9, 1861, on the farm in Cold Spring onto which he had moved in 1844, and which his widow still occupies.

Jeremiah Brushingham was born in Ireland and came to America in 1857, locating on a farm in the town of Hinsdale, where he died in 1872. His widow now lives in Allegany. His children were Timothy J., Mary, James, Ella (deceased), and Anna. Timothy J. Brushingham was born in Hinsdale, April 15, 1862. He was reared on the farm. His father dying when he was but ten years old the support of his mother and her younger children devolved upon his youthful shoulders. Upon reaching maturity he engaged in other business and in July, 1892, bought the Earl House in Steamburgh, converting it into the principal hotel in the village. In March, 1887, Mr. Brushingham married Mary, daughter of Martin Masoner, of Allegany, and they have three children: Leo, Lloyd, and Hazel. He was engaged for four years in lumbering at Onoville, where he served two years as constable.

Wilber Congleton, son of Phelps and Hannah (Beardsley) Congleton, was born in Ellicott, Chautauqua county, Oct. 11, 1842. Phelps Congleton came from Vermont to Chautauqua county about 1812. A brother John served in the Black Hawk wars and became a captain in the navy in the Civil war, where he died. Phelps came to Randolph in 1852, but in 1863 returned and died in April, 1888. His first wife, who died May 24, 1864, bore him nine children: Mary J., Sarah A., James B., Luther C., William, 1st, Laura S., William, 2d, and Wilber, twins, and Rebecca. By his second wife, Mrs. Tibbetts, he had no children. Mr. Congleton was fourteen years in the State militia and attained the rank of a non-commissioned officer.

Wilber Congleton was raised on a farm, came to the town of Randolph in the year 1852, and when fifteen years of age began life on the Allegheny river on a raft. In June, 1864, he enlisted in Co. C, 13th N. Y. H. A., at Steamburgh, and was honorably discharged in June, 1865. In 1867 he began rafting lumber down the Allegheny and Ohio rivers, which business he has continued more or less since. In Oct., 1873, Mr. Congleton came to Steamburgh, where he has become well known in political circles. A staunch Democrat in politics he is not an office-seeker; for one term, however, he accepted the position of justice of the peace. He is a member of D. T. Wiggins Post, G. A. R., Randolph. He is well known among the legal fraternity of western New York, having served them many times in important capacities. Jan. 14, 1879, Mr. Congleton married Jennie, daughter of Caleb Winn, of Sinclairville, Chautauqua county; children—James H. (deceased) and Jennie M. L.

Anthony Covert was born in Dryden, Tompkins county, Nov. 30, 1821, and came to Chautauqua county with his father in 1837. In 1843 he came to Randolph, where he married Almira A., daughter of John N. Angle, and their children are John Asher, William N., and Lydia E. (Mrs. L. Wilson), who died Nov. 25, 1889. Mr. Covert removed to his present farm in Cold Spring in 1846, and has since served as overseer of the poor and road commissioner. He has also carried on lumbering in connection with farming.

John Asher Covert, born Feb. 2, 1849, married, first, Addie Butler, of Randolph, by whom he had three children—Bessie, Herbert, and Glenn. Mrs. Covert died in July, 1890, and he married, second, Margaret, daughter of Joel Ewing, of Randolph. He is a farmer near his father.

William N. Covert was born in Cold Spring, Jan. 15, 1854, and married, Feb. 2, 1873, Sibbie J., daughter of Alden McMillan, and they have had two children: Cora Alma, born April 1, 1874, and Hart A., who died Aug. 26, 1886. Mr. Covert has served as excise commissioner and school trustee.

Noah Culver, a soldier of the War of 1812, came to Little Valley about 1817. His sons were Lyman, Eliphalet, Noah, Jr., Edward, and Charles and his daughters were Charlotte, Martha, Eletha, Louisa, and Sally. Edward Culver was fatally injured in the railroad accident in Steamburg on Oct. 28, 1872, and died Nov. 2d following. His widow, Matilda Price, and son Jerome reside in Cold Spring. Lyman Culver was a long time resident of this town and prominent and influential as a citizen. His daughter, Miss Helen Culver, resides in Chicago, Ill., and by her own industry has accumulated a fortune running into the millions.

Alpha Flagg was born in Canada West, July 31, 1841, and came to South Valley in 1855 to work for his uncle, Elzi Flagg. Later he engaged in farming there and in 1868 removed to Steamburg as proprietor, first with Howard Wright and afterward alone, of the Steamburg House, which he conducted until August 20, 1876, when he went to Salamanca as landlord of the Dudley House. He returned to Steamburg in 1877 to resume the proprietorship of his former hotel, running it until June 1, 1882, when he went to South Valley. There he remained until April 11, 1888, when he again returned to Steamburg as proprietor of the Steamburg House, which he conducted until July 1, 1892, when he converted it into his own dwelling and became assistant postmaster under H. G. Wyman, which position he now fills. Mr. Flagg married Laura, daughter of Nathan Crook, one of the first settlers in Cold Spring; children: Cleve M., Carl P., Ruth, and an infant deceased.

James Hacket, born in Ireland in 1809, came to America in 1829, locating in Cattaraugus county near Ellicottville. In 1831 he came to Cold Spring and was killed by the cars at Marsh's crossing in March, 1891. He was a farmer and a Catholic. His wife was Lucy, daughter of Samuel Price, who came to Cold Spring in 1832. Their children were Barney, Perry, Aurelia, John, Francis, and Susan, of whom John, born April 15, 1846, has been a life-long resident of Cold Spring and by occupation has been a farmer and lumberman. He studied law with Rodney R. Crowley, of Randolph, but was never admitted to the bar. August 8, 1863, he enlisted in Co. M, 13th N. Y. H. A., and served two years. His brother Perry enlisted in 1862 and served about three years in Co. A, 154th N. Y. Vols. John Hacket has been elected justice of the peace continuously since 1878, and has served as constable, school trustee, and justice of sessions two terms. He married, first, in 1873, Ellen, daughter of Thomas Turner, an early settler of Cold Spring. She died in 1874 and Mr. Hacket married, second, Feb. 28, 1877, Annett, daughter of Brazil Kent, of Steamburg, and their children are B. Grace, born Dec. 11, 1877, and Cary, born July 11, 1880.

Albert Hale was at one time a prominent resident and one of the leading farmers of Cold Spring. He was supervisor of the town in 1889 and 1890, and died a year or two ago. His widow resides on the homestead.

Milton Helms came to Cold Spring in 1826 and cleared the farm where his son Orson E. now lives, where he lived and died in November, 1873. His wife, Lorinda Kelley, died there in 1879. Mr. Helms was constable and collector and otherwise prominent in town affairs. His children were John (deceased), Julia A. (Mrs. George Champlin), deceased, Mary E. (Mrs. H. H.

Holt), Willard (deceased), Emeline (Mrs. G. W. Reeves), Elizabeth (Mrs. Nathan Eddy), Eliza (Mrs. A. Coy), and Orson E.

Ziba Hovey, born in 1788, came from Genesee county (now Wyoming) to Conewango in 1829, where he pursued farming. Shortly afterward he removed to Randolph and engaged in hotel keeping, following this business in both villages during a considerable portion of the remainder of his life. In 1836 he started west with his family, intending to go down the Allegheny and Ohio rivers on a raft. He embarked his effects at the confluence of Cold Spring creek with the Allegheny river, but navigation gave out and he landed there and built and started a hotel, which he kept two years, being succeeded by Howard Fuller, Sr. The building burned a few years ago. Mr. Hovey returned to Randolph, where he kept hotel, and eventually removed to Cold Spring, where he died at the residence of his son, La Fayette, Feb. 17, 1879, aged nearly ninety-one. His wife, born in 1789, was Sophia Metcalf, whom he married Dec. 25, 1810. Their children were Chauncey A. (deceased); Sophronia S. (deceased); Andrew J. (deceased); Ziba M., born July 1, 1816, of East Randolph; Emily A. (Mrs. D. B. Spaulding), born April 5, 1818, of Cold Spring; Alta M. (deceased), born Nov. 29, 1819; Laura P. (Mrs. C. A. Snow), born Oct. 20, 1821, of East Randolph; Franklin C., born Oct. 21, 1823; Clarissa H., of Iowa; Amelia A., born July 23, 1827; and La Fayette, born March 15, 1831. Mrs. Hovey died Feb. 17, 1873.

La Fayette Hovey came to Cold Spring in 1863 and to his present farm in 1866. He married, Oct. 13, 1858, Louisa T. Case, of Bergen, Genesee county, and their children are Fernando G., born Sept. 11, 1859; Carrie E., born June 20, 1862; and Nettie M., born July 14, 1865. Mr. Hovey is a carpenter and joiner by trade, and with his father and two brothers has assisted in the erection of almost every building in East Randolph village.

Franklin C. Hovey is also a carpenter and joiner by trade. From 1858 until 1865 he followed lumbering, and since then has been both a farmer and lumberman. He now lives in East Randolph. While residing in Cold Spring he served as assessor six years and justice of the peace one term. May 8, 1848, Mr. Hovey married Harriet H., daughter of Horace Hall, one of the pioneers of Randolph. Their children are De Ette (deceased); Edgar W. (deceased); Adelle (Mrs. W. G. Harmon), of Old Orchard Beach, Me.; Nellie F.; and Kittie M. (Mrs. F. Larkin, Jr.), of Randolph.

Ethel L. Lyon, for a long time a prominent resident of Steamburgh, was a lumberman and a farmer. He came into the town in the fall of 1847, and died here Dec. 19, 1889. His wife, Sophia, a daughter of Charles Wright, deceased, lives with her son in Steamburgh village. Their children were Ellen J., Clayton S., Manley S. (deceased), Maryette (Mrs. H. G. Wyman), Adella R. (deceased), Julia E., Herman A., and Fred L. Mr. Lyon organized the first school ever taught in Cold Spring and with Charles Morse named the village of Steamburgh.

Jotham Metcalf, born July 16, 1791, in Keene, N. H., came to Conewango in Feb., 1823, and settled on lot 2, being the first settler on Elm creek in that town. His wife, Sarah Ash, born in Rensselaer county in 1794, died March 22, 1883. Their children were Sarah H. (Mrs. T. Huntington), deceased; Jotham H., deceased; Henry L., of East Randolph; David M.; and Mary M. (Mrs. Zalmon Smith), of Napoli. Mr. Metcalf died at the home of his youngest daughter July 5, 1875. He was a life-long resident of Conewango, and both he and his wife were exemplary members of the Freewill Baptist church, uniting, however, with several others in 1826 in forming a Methodist class at their house, there being no services of their own faith then in the town. For many years Mr. Metcalf was a deacon of the church.

David M. Metcalf, born in Conewango, April 10, 1823, married, March 19, 1847, Jeannette, daughter of Ira Smith, and they have had two children, viz.: Mary Isabelle, who married W. D. Hevenor, of Salamanca, and is deceased, and Cora (Mrs. C. A. Huggins, of Salamanca). Mr. Metcalf has been justice of the peace many years, justice of sessions two terms, poormaster, and town auditor. He is a representative farmer and a public spirited citizen.

Harding Morse, born in Connecticut, Feb. 5, 1796, was a descendant of seven brothers, early settlers of New England, and his father, James, served seven years in the Revolutionary army. His mother was a Brewster, a family noted in New England history. Mr. Morse was a hatter by trade and worked in the first factory in the United States that employed machinery in the manufacture of hats, pursuing his avocation under lock and key, for the work then was a secret. His wife, Catherine Hartman, whom he married in Dansville, Livingston county, about 1820, bore him eight children, three of whom grew to maturity, viz.: Harman, Lovisa, and Charles. He removed finally to Perry, Wyoming county, after following his trade in nearly all the eastern States, and came thence in 1833 to Otto, where he was a farmer and lumberman, running a saw-mill there about two years. In 1842 he moved to Mansfield and thence in 1847 to Cold Spring, where he died Oct. 30, 1853. His wife died in Otto, April 10, 1840. He was a Royal Arch Mason.

Charles Morse, born in Perry, Wyoming county, Aug. 14, 1830, was reared on a farm and came to Steamburg with his father in 1847, when there was but one house in the place, and for four weeks saw no white man and but one Indian. He married, Jan. 15, 1854, Rachel, daughter of Rev. Thomas Arnold (see Napoli), and their only child, Charles Harding, was born Sept. 7, 1856. Mr. Morse has manufactured large quantities of lumber.

The Price family has long been prominent in the settlement of Cold Spring. Its members have always been public spirited, influential citizens, many of them holding offices of trust and responsibility. The first of the name to arrive was Meletiah Price, who came about 1827, settling where Steamburg now is. He later moved to Little Valley and thence to Conewango, where he died in 1850.

Samuel Price came from Otsego, Otsego county, to Cold Spring in 1833 and settled on the farm where his son Dorr now lives, and where he died May 31, 1862. His wife, Elizabeth Cheney, who died March 11, 1876, bore him these children: Ebenezer C. (deceased), James W. (deceased), Sarah (deceased), Matilda (Mrs. Edward Culver), of Steamburg, Lucy, Angeline (Mrs. Angel Pope), of Randolph, Jonathan (deceased), Joseph, Martin, and Dorr. Mr. Price was justice of the peace many years, poormaster, assessor, school trustee, and a lumberman and farmer.

Joseph Price was born March 10, 1832, married, Feb. 12, 1854, Diantha, daughter of William Earl, and they have had two children: Amanda (Mrs. John Crooks), of Corydon, Pa., and Elmer, of Waterford, Pa. Mr. Price built and for fifteen years ran a saw-mill. Aug. 13, 1862, he enlisted in Co. A, 154th N. Y. Vols., and served until the close of the war, being slightly wounded. Dorr Price enlisted at the same time and in the same company, and served nineteen months, being discharged for physical disability.

Ebenezer C. Price, born June 19, 1815, died in Cold Spring June 17, 1875.

He was prominent in political affairs, serving as supervisor, county excise commissioner, justice of the peace, justice of sessions, and coroner. His wife was Sally, daughter of Noah Culver, and their children were Ellen (de. eased), Emma (Mrs. T. P. Butler), of Cold Spring, Elbert, of Cold Spring, and Elsie.

George W. Reeves, son of Warren H. (see South Valley), was born Aug. 16, 1827, and came with his parents to South Valley in 1837. He married, June 51, 1849, Emeline, daughter of Milton Helms, of Cold Spring, and their children are Fayette W. (deceased); Delora R. (Mrs. D. J. Abbey), of Salamanca; Frank A., of Salamanca; Lizzie M. (Mrs. M. P. Prosser), of Buffalo; Lorenda A. (deceased); and Ernest G. and Darwin W., of Johnsonburg, Pa. Mr. Reeves has been a farmer, carpenter, and lumberman. He came to Cold Spring in 1849. While in South Valley he was town clerk one term. With his two brothers, William I. and Daniel F., he enlisted in Co. I, 9th N. Y. Cav., in 1864, serving until the war closed. He has retired from active life.

Daniel F. Reeves, another son of Warren H. Reeves, was born May 12, 1834, and married, March 31, 1866, Sophronia, daughter of Elisha Brace, and their children are Warren E., born Jan. 11, 1867; George R., born Feb. 5, 1869, of North Dakota; Ernest C., born Dec. 2, 1872; Daniel E., born Jan. 24, 1875; and J. Brace, born April 20, 1877. Mr. Reeves has been assistant clerk of the Board of Supervisors, town assessor, and for over thirty years a teacher in the public schools. He has been district deputy of the county grange and was supervisor in 1892 and re-elected in 1893.

Josiah Wyman came to Steamburg from Kennedy, Chautauqua county, in 1847, but soon returned. His children were Harvey G. and Hettie (deceased). He died in 1857. Harvey G. Wyman, born April 30, 1849, married, July 4, 1870, Maryette, daughter of E. L. Lyon, and their children are Jennie S., Nellie S., Elmer H., Ellis A., and Beulah H. He has spent his life in lumbering. In September, 1892, with C. H. Morse, under the firm name of Morse & Wyman, he bought the steam saw and shingle-mill of Joseph Leach which was formerly owned by E. L. Lyon. Mr. Wyman has been postmaster four years, highway commissioner one year, and school trustee three years.

CHAPTER XXII.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF CONEWANGO.

CONEWANGO was erected into a township from Little Valley on January 20, 1823, and originally embraced all the territory south of the north line of Leon to the Pennsylvania State line, being described as towns 1, 2, 3, and 4 in range nine of the Holland survey. On February 21, 1826, the town of Randolph (including also nearly all of what is now South Valley) was set off and on April 24, 1832, Leon was formed, leaving Conewango with its present area of 22,846 acres, embraced in a square containing sixty-four equal lots of land. The name Conewango is of Indian origin and signifies "walking slowly."

This town contains some of the best farming and grazing land in the county. It was originally covered with a dense growth of pine and hemlock, the converting of which into lumber afforded constant and lucrative employment to the early settlers, who, like other pioneers, were poor in worldly goods, but rich in enterprise, courage, and industry. The soil on the uplands varies from a stiff clay to a gravelly loam. The valleys are chiefly composed of the latter. In the north and east the surface is hilly upland, while along Conewango creek, in the southwest, it is generally level and swampy, usually affording, however, easy access and tillage. The principal water-course is Conewango creek, which enters the northwest corner of the town from Chautauqua county, where it mainly derives its source, and flows southeast to within a mile of the Randolph line, where, after forming a confluence with its namesake, the Little Conewango, it takes a southwesterly direction and leaves the town at the southwest corner, entering Chautauqua county and finally joining the Allegheny river near Warren, Pa. The stream was not inappropriately named, for it is deep and sluggish and scarcely manifests a perceptible motion. Over its sullen waters once floated immense quantities of timber to Pittsburg and the west. In early lumbering times it was to the settlers of this region what the Allegheny was to the county—a waterway to markets and supplies. Unlike many of its small tributaries the Conewango never afforded much water-power, but like them it abounded with delicious fish, many varieties of which still exist.

Elm creek, which derives its name from the unusual number of elm trees along its banks, rises in lot 14, flows southerly, and empties into the Little Conewango in Randolph. It formerly afforded good water-power. Clear and Saw Mill creeks and other brooks, most of which flow into the two Conewangos, afford with those mentioned excellent natural drainage and many water privileges, though few of these latter are now utilized. In the southwest part of the town lies Conewango swamp, which is from thirty to fifty feet below the bed of the Allegheny river at its nearest point.

The first settler in Conewango is said to have been Eliphalet Follett, who located near Rutledge, on the old Chautauqua road, in 1816. In 1817 he opened an inn for the accommodation of emigrants, and here was born soon afterward his son, the first white birth in the town. Follett removed from the county a few years later. James Battles, born in Vermont in 1798, moved hence and became a settler here in 1817 and shortly afterward married Rachel Hadley. About the same time Calvin Treat and Adaline Childs became man and wife. At the present day there is a dispute as to which of these marriages occurred first, but both repaired to Chautauqua county to have the ceremonies performed. Battles erected the first frame barn in the town. He was for some time class-leader in the M. E. church at Rutledge.

Cyrus Childs, the third settler and a native of Massachusetts, came December 15, 1818. His wife, Miriam, born in Worthington, Mass., August 17, 1785, was at the time of her death the oldest person in Conewango. He died here aged ninety-three. The same year (1818) James Blanchard located on the same lot as Childs and in 1820 opened a tavern on the old Chautauqua road. A native of Vermont he was born in Bennington in July, 1789, and died here in March, 1833. Eunice, his wife, was born in Halifax, Vt., in January, 1796, and lived to about the age of ninety. Blanchard built in 1827, at Rutledge, the first frame hotel in town. He had born to him four sons and four daughters. Daniel Grover and David Davidson, both natives of New England, came to Conewango in 1818, the former settling on lot 23 and the latter on lot 48. Grover was born in 1792 and Davidson in 1777. The latter was a carpenter by trade and built in 1820 the first frame building here. Lyman Wyllys was born in Massachusetts and settled on lot 23 in 1818. He subsequently moved to Michigan. Calvin Treat, before mentioned, whose marriage with Miss Childs is dated May 31, 1819, erected the first grist-mill in town, on Spring brook, in 1821. He settled on lot 23 and died here in 1832.

Sampson Crooker came from Greene county in 1818 and located a farm on lot 47, near Rutledge, where he planted the first orchard and gave the land for the first cemetery in the town. With Robert McGlashan he built the first saw-mill, and with Culver Crumb he erected a saw and grist-mill in 1825 on Clear creek. His wife was a true pioneer. A sketch of their son, Hon. George A. S. Crooker, appears on a preceding page among the lawyers of the county and his poem on the bloodless Dutch Hill war is preserved on page 199.

H. Camp and William Holbrook settled in Conewango in or about 1818 and in 1822 established the first store in town—at Old's Corners. In 1818 came Robert McGlashan, who settled on lot 47 and became the first justice of the peace. His brothers James and Charles located here in 1819 and about 1825 respectively. Peter, another brother, came to Rutledge some years later. The mother of all, Mrs. Ann McGlashan, widow of Peter, Sr., came with one of the sons at an early day. The McGlashans were prominent residents and attained considerable reputation in local military affairs. Charles became a colonel and in 1860 moved to Red Wing, Minn., where he died in 1872. James was commissioned a brigadier-general, and in 1824 and 1825 represented the town of Conewango on the Board of Supervisors. James and Charles erected the first frame house in town and in 1831 built a store and a hotel at Rutledge, where they were long successful merchants and extensive cattle dealers. Daniel Newcomb, a native of Goshen, N. Y., came here in 1821, reared a family of nine children, and died in 1855, his wife dying in 1846. Aaron and Leonard Barton located on lot 15 in 1820, cleared ten acres, and becoming discouraged returned to their home in Massachusetts. Gen. Seth Wood and his two sons Thomas and Gaius came to Conewango in 1820, but the general subsequently removed to Ohio, where he died; his sons died here.

Rufus Wyllys and his father came here in 1820. The son with Samuel Farlee erected a saw-mill on Elm creek in 1823. Farlee arrived from Genesee county in 1819 and in 1827 built on Elm creek a grist-mill having two runs of stone. In the flood of 1865 a Mr. Farnsworth, who was employed in this mill, was swept away while attempting to remove the slash-boards from the dam. His body, sitting naturally against a tree and entirely nude except the collar-band, one boot, and a wrist-band, was found the next day two miles below the woods. The mill continued business until 1870.

Chauncey Butler and a blacksmith named Bradner settled on lots 39 and 30 respectively in 1819. In 1820 Elias Wilcox came in from Livingston county and afterwards settled in East Randolph, where he died. Russell Pennock lived in Conewango from 1819 to 1830, when he removed to Ohio. It was at his house that the first dance in town occurred on July 4, 1821. A Frenchman played the fiddle. Thomas Darling became a resident on lot 30 in 1820 and also finally went to Ohio. In 1819 Peter Blanchard settled on lot 22, where he died in 1825. John Darling, born in Vermont in 1786, came here with his wife, who was also born there in 1797, and opened a home on lot 38 in 1821, where he died in December, 1867. He became the town's first supervisor and was one of the earliest maple-sugar makers here. His brother Benjamin came also in 1821 and located on lot 46. Benjamin was born in Rutland, Vt., and his wife at Plymouth, Mass., both in 1782. He died on his homestead in April, 1861. At their house was held the second dance in town on New Year's day, 1822.

Thomas and Nicholas Northrup, brothers, arrived in 1818 from Stephentown, N. Y. Nicholas was killed by the cars while returning from a visit to the west. His son Anson is said to have pre-empted the first land, built the first shanty, and subsequently erected the first frame house where the city of Minneapolis now is. Thomas was the first and for several years town clerk.

Julius Gibbs came into Conewango from Chautauqua county in 1822 and the following year Asahel Brown arrived. Brown was born in Grand Isle, Vt., in 1799, and his wife Flora in Massachusetts in 1802. For twenty years after their settlement they occupied a log house constructed by Lyman Wyllys. Brown then erected what was locally known as the "Red House," which is still standing. Ezra Amadon became a resident on lot 15 in 1820 and claimed to have owned the first grain cradle in town. He was a typical pioneer, reared ten children, and died at a good old age. Stephen Nichols, Culver Crumb, and David Cooper settled in town in 1820, Nathan Burt in 1821, Valentine Hill in 1822, and Loomis Lillie, Luke Ward, Joseph Cunningham, and Luther Marlow in 1823. Burt was from Mount Morris and died on his farm here. Daniel Whiting came in from Vermont in 1819, and the same year John Farlee arrived from Genesee county. Farlee's wife's death, which occurred in the fall of 1821, was the first adult death in Conewango, and on the day of the burial a terrific snow and wind storm raged for more than twenty-four hours. No minister of the gospel was present, but a simple prayer was offered, and the remains were buried in the garden back of the house.

On lot 63 Goldsmith Coffin was the first settler and on lot 56, in 1822, John Fairbanks and his wife located. Both of the latter died on their homestead, John in 1837 and his wife in 1835. They had fourteen children. James Hammond and Henry Pellitt, the latter an Englishman, became settlers in 1823. Hammond was born in Rhode Island and died here in 1866. Bemus Baldwin and Dana Phillips located farms in 1818 and 1819 respectively. Bela B. Post came to town in 1819, settled on lot 27, sold later to his brother Joel, and moved to Iowa, where he died. Jotham Metcalf and Ralph Williams, natives of New England, came to Conewango in 1823 and spent the remainder of their lives here. Metcalf was born in 1791. He was a Freewill Baptist, but there being no organization of this sect in town he formed a Methodist class at his house in 1826 and became its leader. His death occurred in 1875. Williams was born in 1778 and died in 1875. He and his wife enjoyed conjugal bliss for seventy-two years. John Towers and his wife, whose early adventures with bears and wolves furnished substance for thrilling stories, settled on lot 37 in 1826. Nathan Snow followed Towers two years later and died on his homestead in 1861.

Among the settlers of 1827 were Job Gardner, who finally moved to Illinois and was killed by a load of rails, Freeborn Fairbanks, and Alden Childs. Richard McDaniels, in 1824, located on lot 1, but soon sold out to Jeremiah Bundy, who three years later transferred to George L. Fox, who died on the farm in 1838. In 1822 Samuel Cowley came in and in 1825 Henry L. Gardner became a resident of the town. Gardner afterward married a daughter of Nicholas Northrup. Cowley was born in 1798, and during the presidential campaign of 1844 he fell from a hickory pole, breaking both legs. Amputation of one became necessary and during the operation he died. Peter Penock came here in 1821 and the same year Lyman Beach settled in Leon. Beach became a resident of Conewango in 1825. Jared Stevens and Levi Steele both came from Genesee county, the former in 1826, the latter in 1829. Stevens was born in Oneida county and Steele in Granville, Vt. The latter finally moved to Chautauqua county, where he died. William Hollister, Jr., came here in 1833 and erected a tannery and conducted a shoe shop. John Hammond followed Hollister the next year and died on his original farm on lot 61 in 1875. Two settlers of 1824 were Chauncey Helms and Daniel Benson, the latter of whom was born in New Jersey in December, 1777. Helms articulated one hundred acres of land on lot 1, but subsequently sold out to Robert Helms. Robert afterward married Jane Benson. Jesse and Erastus Boynton, two brothers from Allegany county, came here in 1825, as did also Richard Goodwin, who was born in New Hampshire in December, 1783, and died where he settled in April, 1858. Jesse Boynton died on his farm and Erastus subsequently removed to Olean. John Benson came here in 1824 and died in July, 1862. He was born in New Jersey in 1800 and his wife in Genesee county in 1806.

Elias Carpenter moved to Conewango from Onondaga county in 1825 and afterward removed to Minnesota, where he died. Ziba Hovey settled on lot 4 in 1829 and lived to be over ninety years of age. Elnathan Pope, a Vermonter, being born there in 1788, came to this town from Allegany county in 1828 and died in Wisconsin in 1865. Hector Seager moved here in 1831 and died on his farm on lot 38 in 1859. Both he and his wife Sally were born in Connecticut in 1793 and 1796 respectively. William Bedell settled in this town in 1823 and James Wirt followed him in 1825. Both were from Genesee county. Bedell was a Methodist preacher. Abijah Bruce located a farm here in 1826 and finally died in Randolph. David Huntington, the seventh son of John, a Vermonter, came to Conewango with his father in 1824, where the latter died March 24, 1858. He was born in Bethany, Genesee county, June 27, 1812. His father was born August 20, 1775, and served in the War of 1812-15. David was a candidate for assemblyman on the Greenback ticket in 1877, and during his active life held many town offices.

Other settlers of the town from 1825 for five or six years were John Pierce, George Frisbie, Gideon Walker, Charles Mason, Uriah Wheeler, Cyrus Thacher, Joseph Hamilton, Alfred A. Kinney, Willard and Reuben Cheney, Arthur Cowen, Calvin Hills, Ephraim Palmer, James Allen, Ezra Stannard, Alexander Wandell, Joseph Cunningham, John Fairchild, Alvah Palmer, Grosvenor Barton, John A. Fitch, John and Jeremiah Bundy, Samuel G. Hoard, and Thomas Dutcher. One of the most prominent men the town ever claimed as a resident was Dr. Thomas Jefferson Wheeler, who settled in Rutledge about 1825 and died here February 8, 1875.

Martin V. Benson, son of John, who settled in Conewango in 1824, was born here June 28, 1839, and became a lawyer of ability in East Randolph. Chester Tuttle came to Napoli in 1826 and was killed by a falling tree in 1827. His son Ichabod B. afterward settled in this town, where he died October 18, 1873, on the farm subsequently owned by his son Chester D. Horace Huntington was born in Conewango on July 2, 1826, and resided here all his life. John Bigelow came to the town in 1834 and died April 14, 1844. He was a Baptist preacher and assisted in organizing the first Baptist church in Conewango. His son Wells J. married a daughter of Gaius Wood.

The first individual landowners in Conewango in 1815 were Daniel Phillips, William Sears, Harry Davidson, Edmund Mullett, Rufus Wyllys, and Peter Blanchard. It will be seen that only two or three became actual settlers.

It was in 1820 that the first school house was erected and the first school opened with Miss Eliza Bradner as teacher. The structure was of logs and was located on lot 30. Subsequent teachers here were Ann Wise and Olive Cheney. Soon after the construction of this building another school house was erected farther west, where Olive and Eliza Cheney were early teachers.

In 1892 Conewango had a population of 1,295. The town was divided into eleven school districts, in each of which a school was maintained, the whole being taught by thirteen teachers and attended by 386 scholars. The total sum expended for support of the schools during the year was $3,364.77. The assessed valuation of property taxable for school purposes aggregated $770,903 and the school buildings and sites are valued at $6,290.

The first inn was opened by Eliphalet Follett on the Chautauqua road in 1817; the first store was kept at Old's Corners in 1822 by Camp & Holbrook.

Up to 1823 the only highway in Conewango was the old Chautauqua road running east and west through the northern part of the town to Mayville in Chautauqua county. That year the roads were re-surveyed and new ones laid out, and since then the highways have been continually improved, until now they are generally in good condition. The railroad facilities of the town are excellent, although very little land is occupied by railway lines. The New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio (the "Nypano" or Western division of the Erie) passes through the southwest corner of Conewango a distance of some three miles, the nearest station being Randolph. The Buffalo & Southwestern division of the Erie runs along the valley of Conewango creek on the western edge of the town, a little over five miles, and has a station a mile and a half from Rutledge.

The first town meeting was held at the house of John Darling on February 11, 1823, with Robert McGlashan as president, and these officers were elected: John Darling, supervisor; Thomas N. Northrup, town clerk; James Powell, Calvin Treat, and Alexander McCollum, assessors; Bemus Baldwin, collector; Thomas Darling and Calvin Treat, poormasters; Nicholas Northrup and Samuel Farlee, commissioners of highways; Benjamin Darling, Robert Durfee, and James Powell, school commissioners; Robert McGlashan, Solomon Nichols, and George A. S. Crooker, school inspectors; Peter Blanchard, Recard Outhoudt, and William Minor, constables. The principal town officers have been as follows:

Supervisors.—John Darling, 1823; James McGlashan, 1824-25; George A. S. Crooker, 1826-39 and 1841-55; Hector Seager, 1840; Clark McCollister, 1856-57; Enoch Holdridge, 1858-60 and 1875-79; M. T. Jenkins, 1861; Daniel S. Swan, 1862; Philip M. Smith, 1863-64; Daniel Benson, 1865; M. V. Benson, 1866-71, 1873-74, and 1880-81; David Huntington, 1872; S. B. Ellsworth, 1882-84; Bela R. Johnson, 1885-86; Abner A. Aldrich, 1887-88; Charles J. Mason, 1889 and 1891; Garret S. Myers, 1890; R. J. Coates, 1892-93.

Town Clerks.—Thomas N. Northrup, 1823-29; Henry Day, 1830, 1836-37; Bliss C. Willoughby, 1831-32; Hector Seager, 1833; James McGlashan, 1834-35; Henry Town, 1838; Robert Owen, 1839; Thomas J. Wheeler, 1840; Horatio Jacobs, 1841-44; Henry D. Grant, 1845-50; Foster D. Barlow, 1851-52 and 1856-57; Calvin Davenport, 1853-54; S. B. Ellsworth, 1855; M. T. Jenkins, 1858; William S. Crooker, 1859; S. D. Crooker, 1860-61, 1869, 1873, and 1879; Thomas Wilder, 1862; Cyrus Thatcher, 1863; Dominicus Thoma, 1864, 1872, 1874, 1878, 1880, 1882, 1886, 1888, and 1890; Bucklin Jenks, 1865; Milo R. Darling, 1866; Edward Brennan, 1867-68; Joseph M. Congdon, 1870; Richard F. Coates, 1871 and 1875; C. W. Terry, 1876; Oliver H. Phillips, 1877, 1881, and 1883; Horace Hull, 1884; L. D. Hill, 1885; Bert Ellsworth, 1887; R. J. Coates, 1889 and 1891; Lyander Willey, 1892; A. B. Archer, 1893.

Justices of the Peace.—1823-30, no record; 1831, James Battles; 1832, John Cooper; 1833, Elnathan Pope, Lewis Holbrook, Charles Pomeroy; 1834, James Battles, Elnathan Pope, David Benson; 1835, Reuben Cheney, Thomas Trask; 1836, no record; 1837, Otis Hicks; 1838, no record; 1839, Henry Day, Samuel Cowley, James Hammond; 1840, James Hammond; 1841, Reuben Penhollow; 1842, Dewitt Huntington; 1843, Horatio Jacobs; 1844, Russell B. Clark; 1845, Reuben Penhollow; 1846, David Huntington, Robert Owen; 1847, James Hammond, Alson Leavenworth; 1848, Enoch Holdridge, Anson G. Seager, Daniel W. Gardner; 1849, Isaac Drake; 1850, A. G. Seager; 1851, Enoch Holdridge; 1852, J. P. Allen; 1853, Bucklin Jenks; 1854, John H. Grover; 1855, Enoch Holdridge; 1856, J. P. Allen, A. G. Seager; 1857, S. B. Ellsworth; 1858, Charles W. Dawley; 1859, Erastus

Hall, R. B. Clark, Chauncey S. Hubbell; 1860, Philip M. Smith, David Metcalf, A. G. Seager; 1861, C. S. Hubbell; 1862, Daniel Fuller; 1863, Thomas Wilder; 1864, P. M. Smith; 1865, M. V. Benson, Chauncey A. Snow; 1866, Daniel Fuller, Daniel Colburn; 1867, Enoch Holdridge; 1868, David S. Collum; 1869, C. A. Snow; 1870, Richard T. Hammond, Harris Aldrich; 1871, Enoch Holdridge; 1872, George Kirkland; 1873, William Buffington; 1874, Frank E. Day, Thomas Wells; 1875, Bela R. Johnson, Orra Snow, David Dunn; 1876, D. Dunn, Horace Hollister; 1877, Harris Aldrich; 1878, S. B. Ellsworth; 1879, C. W. Mount; 1880, Austin Saunders; 1881, Charles W. Terry; 1882, Robert E. Durfee; 1883, C. A. Snow; 1884, Austin Saunders; 1885, James H. Hollister; 1886, Daniel B. Mason; 1887, M. M. Merrill; 1888, Austin Saunders; 1889, L. D. Hill; 1890, David Stevens; 1891, Austin Saunders; 1892, John Case; 1893, L. D. Hill.

The first cemetery in town was located near Rutledge, the land being given for the purpose by Sampson Crooker. With additions by purchase it is still used and controlled by a Board of Trustees. The first death to occur in Conewango was a child of Robert McGlashan.

In 1830 there was a little cluster of houses which nestled near the base of the eastern range of hills along the Conewango valley, on what was called the Chautauqua road or mail route from Ellicottville to Mayville. The hamlet was named Rutledge and contained nine log and five frame structures, about sixty inhabitants, and scarcely no mechanical industry. It was here the people came from miles around to do their trading and vote and air their grievances for justice, for here was the home of Judges Wheeler and Day and Squire Battles. They also came for general trainings, for here resided the McGlashan family—Adjutant-General Peter, General James, and Colonel Charles, who were in command of the militia of Conewango and adjacent towns. These were stirring times for Rutledge, which became an important point for the eastern half of the county. Randolph and East Randolph were hardly considered hamlets. Neither contained more than a few log houses and perhaps a store or two. Here, too, Judges Chamberlain and Henry Day formed the first copartnership in mercantile business in the vicinity in 1829. McGlashan Brothers were also early traders and tavern keepers and at one time conducted an extensive business. George A. S. Crooker, whom older inhabitants remember in various capacities, was another prominent citizen and merchant. In 1830 the polling place was changed to the hamlet then called "The Hollow," three miles farther north. The Hollow, although only about half the size of Rutledge, was really the business place of the town. It had an extensive mill privilege, which was utilized for a saw-mill, grist-mill, and fulling-mill; besides these there was an ashery, a hotel, and a grocery store. All of these except the hotel were under the general supervision of Johnson Noyes, who was the controlling owner of the entire property. This once important hamlet has lost its ancient activity and today scarcely nothing remains of its former extensive business interests.

In 1830 there were three distilleries within a radius of three miles of Rutledge. Two of these were in what is now Conewango. To these the farmers brought their corn and rye, which they exchanged for whisky—five, ten, or fifteen gallons at a time, and occasionally a barrel. It was the custom for every one—man, woman, and child—to drink. In 1836 the distilleries were closed. Cider was more generally used for many years. Barrels of this beverage would be rolled into the farmers' cellars each fall for family use. Truly then could the boys and girls sing :

"It rains and it hails,
And it 's cold, stormy weather;
In comes the farmer
Drinking up his cider."

Now the popular cry is :

"Beware of the bottle, Beware of the cup."

The pioneers of this community were apparently ahead of the average settler in intellectuality and educational enterprise, for as early as 1824 they clubbed together and established a public library, which contained several standard works on history, theology, and physics, and which for many years was well sustained. Rutledge has now settled down into a pretty, quiet country village with four mercantile establishments, several shops, a physician's office, two churches, and about forty neat and tasty dwellings. The post-office, named Conewango, was established in 1825 with George A. S. Crooker as postmaster. Prominent among his successors were James McGlashan, Dr. Thomas J. Wheeler, Chas. McGlashan, Clark McCollister, and Cyrus Thacher.

East Randolph village is partly located in the southeast corner of Conewango. Its history will be detailed under the chapter of Randolph.

Conewango Station, formerly known as Old's Corners, is a station on the west line of the town on the Buffalo & Southwestern division of the Erie railroad. Most of its business places, however, are in Chautauqua county.

Axeville took its name from Edwin Leffingwell, a skillful axemaker and an early settler. It is a small hamlet in the northeast corner of the town. Samuel Cowley kept a postoffice there in 1840.

Elm creek is a small settlement on the stream of the same name in the east part of the town; it has a cheese factory and a few shops and dwellings.

Clear Creek, a postoffice just over the line in Chautauqua county, has a few dwellings only in Conewango.

Pope is a postoffice nearly in the center of the town. The office was established August 1, 1892, with Mrs. Mary A. Shannon as postmaster.

The great lumber industry of the town in early days has given place mainly to agricultural pursuits with dairying as the chief occupation. This business began to develop about 1870, when several creameries manufacturing both butter and cheese were erected. Carpenter Brothers' cheese factory at Conewango was built by Charles J. Mason in 1869. It cost $3,000 and has a capacity of manufacturing 55,000 pounds of cheese annually. M. M. Gardner is the cheese maker. The Elm Creek cheese factory was built in 1870. It is owned by Dana A. Cowan and has a capacity of 400 cows. Other factories have been opened from time to time, among them being one by Bigelow & Gardner near Rutledge in 1876, another by John Wiggins at Elm Creek in 1874, and still another by Bigelow & Gardner on the Chautauqua road in 1878.

The foundry and machine shop of Charles M. Huntington, located near East Randolph, was built by its present proprietor in 1880 at a cost of $2,000. It is run by both water and steam-power and among its productions are dynamos and electric supplies.

Snow & Loop's steam saw-mill in the southeast part of the town was erected in April, 1892. It has a capacity of 10,000 feet of lumber daily.

The First Presbyterian church of Conewango dates back to January 11, 1823, when its organization was effected in a log school house in Leon by Rev. John Spencer, a missionary sent out by the Connecticut Domestic Society. Its original membership consisted of nine persons. Norman Coe served as clerk until 1832. Meetings were held at Leon and Rutledge and Revs. Mr. Spencer and Ira Dunning conducted the services. In 1845 the Leon members were set off and formed a Congregational church. Rev. L. S. Morgan became pastor of the Rutledge branch, being regularly installed in 1846 and continuing until 1851. Prior to this, however, Rev. Sylvester Cowles administered the ordinances occasionally, and it is quite probable that at one time he had pastoral charge. Succeeding Rev. Dr. Morgan's pastorate the religious enthusiasm waned and the society finally became almost extinct. In 1868 Dr. Morgan was recalled and the church once more flourished and prospered. Rev. A. D. Olds afterward became the pastor; the present incumbent is Rev. Edwin Hall. The present membership is thirty. Their house of worship, a wooden structure capable of seating 400 persons, was begun in 1841 and completed in 1846. It cost $2,000. The church property is now valued at $3,000. The Sunday school's average attendance is thirty-five.

The Methodists formed what was known as the "Elm Creek Class" in 1826 at the house of Jotham Metcalf, who was chosen class-leader. The organizer was Rev. Job Wilson, from Canada. In 1830 another class was organized at the Treat school house with Orestus Seager as leader, who served as such for over twenty-five years.

A Baptist society was organized at Clear Creek in 1830 with twelve members. Among the first preachers were Revs. Hadley and Bragman. A church edifice was erected about 1844 at a cost of $1,900. The society dwindled and finally disbanded. In this house in 1868 a Freewill Baptist clergyman named Cooke commenced a series of meetings and organized a Freewill Baptist society, which existed only a short time.

The First Congregational Church of Christ at Clear Creek had its inception in 1876 from revival meetings conducted by Rev. L. T. Mason. The society was incorporated April 21, 1876, with thirty-six members, and the Baptist house of worship was purchased.

The Free Methodist church at Conewango has a membership of twenty-five persons. The first pastor was Rev. Daniel Hadley. The church edifice cost $600, will seat 200 people, and is valued, including grounds, at $1,000. The Sunday school has twenty-five scholars and five teachers.

CHAPTER XXIII.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF DAYTON.

THE territory now comprising the town of Dayton was set off from Perrysburg on the 7th of February, 1835, and covers an area of 23,137 acres. It is described in the Holland survey as township five in range nine, and is bounded on the east by Persia, on the south by Leon, on the west by Chautauqua county, and on the north by Perrysburg. The surface is much less broken than many other towns of the county. The central and western portions are generally level and usually well drained, but the eastern edge is considerably undulated. In the south part of the town was once a swamp, the outlet of which is Conewango creek, but this has been improved and settled and forms today an excellent farming district. The soil on the flats or lowlands consists mainly of clay and loam, while on the uplands and hills it is generally a light loam admixed with clay or gravel. Along the streams the land was originally covered with pine and hemlock; on the uplands it was mainly beech and maple. In early days lumbering was an important industry, but the timber supply has been exhausted and agriculture is now the chief pursuit of the inhabitants, with dairying as the leading industry.

Extending along the northeast corner of Dayton is a watershed, on the north of which small streams flow toward Cattaraugus creek and thence to the St. Lawrence. On the south the water-courses pursue a southerly or southeasterly direction to the Allegheny. The drainage on this side is afforded by the east branch of Conewango creek and its numerous small tributaries. The Erie railroad traverses this watershed and in July, 1875, the Buffalo & Southwestern was completed diagonally through the town from northeast to southwest, the two lines forming a junction at the village of Dayton, more than a thousand feet above Lake Erie. Both roads are under the Erie management and afford excellent shipping facilities to all points.

The first settlement in the town was made on lot 64 by Simeon Bunce and Silas Nash, brothers-in-law, November 5, 1810. These men were from Otsego county and intended to locate in Chautauqua, and when they articulated one hundred acres each they believed their lands to be in that county. They paid eighteen shillings an acre and at once began improvements. Nash erected a log house, which was the first in the town, and in it occurred the first birth, that of Aras, his son, in June, 1811. In this same humble dwelling occurred also the first death in Dayton in February, 1812, the deceased being Dewitt, another son of Silas Nash. Nash built the first saw-mill in town in 1817 on a branch of the Conewango. For many years he was a local leader among the settlers and his descendants have become prominent in various positions. Bunce was born in Hartford, Conn., in 1788. Three years after his settlement here he returned to that State for his father's family. He had three children and died on the homestead in 1875. Timothy M. Shaw located on lot 31 in 1814 and the next year brought his wife and child to his rude home. With him in 1815 came Heman and Anson C. Merrill from Onondaga county, who settled on lots 31 and 30 respectively, where they lived the remainder of their lives. Ralph Johnson, Joshua and Caleb Webb, and Le-man H. Pitcher became actual settlers in 1815. Johnson was from Connecticut and located on lot 30. A tanner and currier by trade he followed that business here until 1865. He was the first postmaster in Dayton and was one of the earliest tavern keepers in the town. The Webbs were the first settlers at West Dayton, and about 1825 they opened there the first inn in town. In Joshua Webb's house on lot 56 were held the first religious services, in 1816, by Rev. Elnathan Finch, a Baptist. Pitcher was the first settler at South Dayton. James P., his brother, quickly followed, but both removed, selling their lands to M. C. Nickerson, who finally joined the Mormons.

Azariah Darbee, Sr., a native of Vermont, located on lot 54 in 1816. The next year he moved his family in with an ox-team and subsequently planted the first orchard in Dayton. Thomas Newcomb, also a Vermonter, came here in 1817, as did also William and Nathaniel Blasdell and Samuel K. Strickland. The Blasdells were the first to locate in the central part of the town. Strickland made the journey hither from the central part of the State in March, bringing his wife and son Robert O. In 1818 came Peter and Luther Allen from Onondaga county, the latter of whom soon returned and brought his wife to share his pioneer life. He erected in 1834 the first frame house in Dayton, which is still standing, and finally moved to Gowanda, where he died in February, 1847. Asahel, a brother of Luther, located on lot 23 in 1820 and died in 1858. Royal Allen settled near by a few years later. Besides these mentioned the following persons were landowners and most of them actual settlers in 1819: Abraham Hale, James H. Shaw, Hiram Howard, Jedediah Lee, Lyman Wood, Frederick A. and Bela H. Redfield, Chauncey and Samuel Hammond, John and Stephen Parsall, Ezra T. Winship, George Babcock, Aaron Nash, Chester McDaniels, Sylvanus Finch, Ebenezer Roberts, Nathan and Lyman Bumpus, Simeon Dryer, Luther Hubbard, Jeremiah Pratt, Chester Darbee, Arza Corbett, A. Starkweather, Ephraim and Ephaphras Smith, Eldad Corlitt, Moses Morgan, William Reed, and D. S. Downer.

In 1833 the actual residents, in addition to many already given, were Isaac Wait, Peter Kellogg, Ephraim Dutton, David and Jonathan Milks, Daniel C. Bassett, Eleazer Hillebert, P. Collins, D. Loomer, Wyman Hulett, Daniel Guptel, Chapel Judd, Ezekiel Seekins, Leander, Constant C., Penuel, Norman L., and Abel M. Bacon, Avery and Sidney Park, D. C. and Russell J. Burdick, H. C. Adams, Artemas Coon, John Wattenpaugh, Reuben Robertson, Gershom Wells, William Farnsworth, Gile Johnson, Hale Matteson, R. E. Knight, Garrett Parsall, William B. Smith, John Hammond, Asa H. Nichols, Alvah Cole, Stephen Soule, Lemuel Webster, James Caldwell, John H. Blish, Isaac P. Hubbard, George Passmore, Tilly Sanford, Sylvester James, Isaac Holbrook, and Daniel Whelpley.

The first marriage in town occurred in March, 1818, when Benjamin Parsall and Miss Mary Redfield became husband and wife. In 1833 the first store kept in the southeast part of Dayton was opened by William H. Leland. When the town was set off from Perrysburg in 1835 the act provided for an equal division of the unexpended public moneys, and Dayton received as her share just one shilling. At its organization the town had 4,313 acres of improved land, three saw-mills, and a tannery, and a population of 1,114, which in 1850 was 1,448; in 1860, 1,294; in 1870, 1,267; in 1880, 1,705; in 1890, 1,735. The first school was taught by Mary Redfield and the first church was organized by the Baptists at West Dayton in March, 1818.

The first annual town meeting convened at the school house near Ralph Johnson's on the last Tuesday in February, 1835, and Silas Nash was elected supervisor; Ralph Johnson, town clerk; and Luther Allen, justice of the peace. The list of principal civil officers to the present time is as follows:

Supervisors.—Silas Nash, 1835-36, 1841-43, and 1845; Luther Allen, 1837-38 and 1844; Anson C. Merrill, 1839-40; Heman Merrill, 1846-47; Calvin F. Yaw, 1848-50; Ralph Johnson, 1851; John B. Reed, 1852-53; Franklin Philbrick, 1854 and 1856; Gile Johnson, 1855 and 1857; Dewitt C. Nash, 1858-59; Norman M. Allen, 1860 to 1893.

Town Clerks.—Ralph Johnson, 1835-1845; Richard Johnson, 1846-47; Orsman Markham, 1848-49; T. W. Johnson, 1850-51 and 1853-62; N. M. Allen, 1852; G. P. Dart, 1863; A. M. De Long, 1864-65; M. P. Roberts, 1866; Silas H. Merrill, 1867-70; N. A. Chaffee, 1871-72; Fernando Smith, 1873-76; A. M. Hall, 1877-78; M. N. Johnson, 1879; John J. Volk, 1880-92; Albert R. Young, 1893.

Blish; 1839, Lemuel Webster; 1840, Avery Park; 1841, Luther Allen; 1842, Lemuel Webster; 1843, no record; 1844, Avery Park; 1845, Luther Allen; 1846, John B. Reed; 1847, Eleazer J. Hillebert; 1848, Avery Park, Franklin Philbrick; 1849, Asahel Allen; 1850, James S. Shaw; 1851, Avery Park; 1852, John W. Badgero; 1853, Asahel Allen; 1854, James S. Shaw; 1855, Avery Park; 1856, Norman M. Allen; 1857, J. B. Allen; 1858, James S. Shaw; 1859, I. H. Alden; 1860, H. W. Locke; 1861, J. B. Allen; 1862, James S. Shaw; 1863, I. H. Alden; 1864, H. W. Locke; 1865, J. B. Allen; 1866, James S. Shaw; 1867, G. P. Dart; 1868, Charles Blair; 1869, J. B. Allen; 1870, W. S. Thrasher; 1871, L. O. Hall; 1872, Charles Blair; 1873, J. B. Badgero; 1874, Harrison Judd; 1875, L. Ranlett; 1876, B. H. Lamb; 1877, Charles W. Smith; 1878, Charles Blair, Charles W. Smith, Harrison Judd, B. H. Lamb; 1879, same; 1880, same; 1881, Charles Blair, L. O. Hall, B. H. Lamb; 1882, John Locke, L. O. Hall, B. H. Lamb, John Newcomb; 1883, same; 1884, Elijah Cook, B. H. Lamb, John Locke, John Newcomb; 1885, Elijah Cook, B. H. Lamb, A. G. Park, John Newcomb; 1886, same; 1887, B. H. Lamb, Elijah Cook, A. G. Park, J. S. Van Slyke; 1888, B. H. Lamb, J. S. Van Slyke, J. M. Parmelee, A. G. Park; 1889, same; 1890, B. H. Lamb, E. K. Park, J. M. Parmlee, John Van Slyke; 1891, B. H. Lamb, J. M. Parmlee, E. K. Park, J. N. Johnson; 1892, same; 1893, same.

From the time Mary Redfield taught the first school in town down to the present day the educational facilities have kept pace with those of other localities. The old log structures have given place to neatly painted frame school buildings, and from four whole and five fractional districts in 1835 the number has been increased to ten. In 1835 the number of children in town of school age was 365, the number of months of school aggregated seven, and the money received from the county amounted to $121.50. The fine brick school house in Dayton was built in 1879 at a cost of $3,500. It stands on an eminence of land in the west part of the village and is surrounded by a beautiful maple grove of about five acres, locally known as "Educational Grove," which cost the district $1,000. These maple trees are the second growth and average ten inches in diameter, and their shelter affords magnificent picnic grounds in summer. The district was organized as a graded school district in 1892 with four teachers and 101 scholars. Hiram E. Vincent is principal.

The town in 1892 had a population of 1,740 and was divided into ten school districts, in each of which schools were maintained by sixteen teachers with an aggregate attendance of 530 scholars, the total expenditure being $4,504.05. The taxable property assessed for school purposes is valued at $685,303, while the school buildings and sites are valued at $12,367.

The first thoroughfare in the town was a wagon road from Perrysburg south by way of South Dayton, and this was used as early as 1817. The Jamestown road is another early highway and was to the eastern part what the other was to the western part. The present roads are kept in good order.

Manufacturing began in 1817, when Silas Nash erected a saw-mill at West Dayton, which was continued until 1856 under different proprietors. Owing to the limited water-power very little manufacturing was attempted until steam came into use. Anson C. Merrill and Ralph Johnson built a saw-mill about 1830, on the site where Henry Markham more recently operated one having a capacity of 3,000 feet of lumber daily. One of the earliest shingle manufacturers was Gorham Dart, who erected, in all, three mills in the swamp, whence he subsequently removed them; they were afterward operated by C. L. Watkins and Moses Dart. It is quite probable that John Knowlton was the first to put up a steam saw-mill in town. He erected one at West Dayton in 1853 which finally became the property of John Crandall. Henry Wolfe built a shingle-mill in 1862 that was later operated by Henry Markham, the capacity being 15,000 shingles per day. Watkins & Tarbell had a mill in Leon which they moved in 1873 to Dayton. Wolfe had a steam saw-mill at the Jamestown crossing that he removed in 1877 to lot 22, where the boiler exploded on June 12, 1878, killing the proprietor and his son William and Joseph Harbine and the engineer, Fronds, the latter a Norwegian. Prior to this William Wolfe had a saw and shingle-mill below Markham near where Jacob Dersey later operated a shingle-mill.

In 1852 Wallace and William Ranlett built a shingle-mill at Pine Valley which they ran some six years, when a saw-mill was added and John Wickham became a proprietor. Finally the ownership was vested in the firm of Burkhalter & Wickham, and the mill did also both planing and matching, the machinery being driven by a forty horse-power engine. In 1874 C. L. Watkins established a sash, door, and blind factory and a planing-mill at Dayton village. In connection with it was a feed-mill and cider-mill. Fernando Smith started here a stave and heading factory in 1876 with a capacity of 200,000 or 300,000 staves per year, which were mostly made into flour and apple barrels on the premises. At Pine Valley Jesse Pile built a steam lumber mill in 1878 and the same year C. J. Babcock & Co. started a stave and heading factory. Palmer & Hall put up a similar factory at the same time, and also manufactured box material. A broom factory and a few carriage shops were once in operation in Pine Valley.

The principal manufacturing industry of the present day is the converting of milk into cheese and butter, which has developed into its present magnitude since 1865, when a cheese factory was erected in Dayton village by Porter Welch, of Gowanda, at a cost of $7,000. He used 50,000 feet of lumber in its construction. After running the factory one year Welch sold to Joseph Plumb, who, seven years later, disposed of it to Orrin W. Catlin, who now runs it under the ownership of Frank Rice. The capacity is the milk from 1,700 cows daily, and large quantities of cream are shipped to Buffalo. Jenks & Ross operated a cheese factory for a number of years in the south part of the town and manufactured seventy-five tons of cheese annually, which they sold one year for $25,000. This is said to have been the first cheese factory established in Dayton. The present manufactory is a portion of the original structure, and is owned by Anson Conger, of Gowanda, and conducted by Albert Howard, the capacity being about 400 cows. In 1872 a stock company erected a cheese factory at Wesley at an expense of $2,500. The company sold out in 1888 to Ellis and Julius Brown, who still own and conduct it. The capacity is 500 cows. Andrew Brainard, in 1866, built at West Dayton a factory employing the cheddar process of manufacture. It later passed into the possession of William McAdams. A factory was put up by Isaac Lang in 1872 on the Jamestown road which manufactured full-cream cheese. The next year Hall & Park erected a cheese and butter factory at Howard's Corners which later was owned by R. Hall. William Johnson built a cheese factory at Markham in 1877 at a cost of $1,500. It is now owned by his widow, Mrs. Lucinda Johnson, and has a large capacity.

West Dayton (Cottage postoffice) is a hamlet in the northwest part of the town and contains two general stores, a creamery and cheese factory, shops, two church edifices, and about fifty dwellings. The nearest railroad station is Markham, three miles distant. West Dayton is the oldest village in town, and in early days, owing to its location on one of the principal thoroughfares, was a point of considerable importance. It is still entitled, however, to a prominent place among the surrounding hamlets. Caleb and Joshua Webb, in 1824, opened the first tavern here, which was also the first public house in the town. Subsequent keepers were John H. Blish, J. H. Rice, Daniel Whelpley, L. & G. Flowers, and others. The first merchant was John H. Blish, about 1845. Other traders were John Knowlton, S. W. Day, Barzilla Merrill, I. H. Alden, and D. S. Alden. Cottage postoffice was established soon after 1850 with John H. Blish as postmaster, who was succeeded by Norman M. Allen, I. H. Alden, S. W. Day, Charles W. Blair, and David S. Alden. The present incumbent is Leroy B. Johnson.

Dayton postoffice, a station at the junction of the Dunkirk and the Buffalo & Southwestern divisions of the New York, Lake Erie & Western railroad, is the principal village in town, and has grown to its present size since 1851. Peter Allen was the original owner of most of the site, purchasing it from the Holland Land Company and settling here in 1818. When the Erie was completed in 1851 A. W. W. Chaffee built and kept a store, the building being subsequently used as a postoffice. He was followed in this location by James H. Chaffee, James S. Shaw, A. M. De Long, H. N. Hooker, Spencer Horton, Frederick Moore, and N. A. Chaffee. James Rice was an early groceryman and James Currin, in 1866, opened a store in the building erected by Henry Wagner, which was burned, rebuilt, and occupied by C. M. Hall. In 1870 Fernando Smith established himself as a general merchant and Dr. Moses P. Roberts opened a drug store. Langmaid & Cheney began the hardware trade in 1874, and were succeeded by John Marvin and he by John Volk. J. M. Parmlee was the first furniture dealer. T. W. Johnson opened in 1852 the first hotel in the village in a building erected by Ralph Johnson. George Volk for sixteen years was a hotel keeper. The Dayton postoffice was established about 1836 and kept near what is now Markham in the dwelling house of Ralph Johnson, who was the first postmaster. In 1851 it was moved to Dayton village and James Rice appointed to the position, some of his successors being James H. Chaffee, Jonathan Shepard, Spencer Horton, A. M. De Long, and N. A. Chaffee. The village is twenty-two miles from Dunkirk, and contains three general stores, a drug store and doctor's office, a hardware store, two hotels, a livery, one bank, a lawyer's office, a feed-mill, three church edifices, a graded school building, several shops, telegraph and express offices, about 100 dwellings, and a population of 500.

Pine Valley (South Dayton postoffice) is a thriving village six miles from Dayton, in the southwest corner of the town, on the Buffalo & Southwestern division of the Erie railroad, and has two dry goods stores, one hardware store, a drug store, a clothing store, two groceries, several shops, a dental and physician's office, one hotel, two church edifices, two saw-mills, and a grape basket factory, and about 150 dwellings. The village was laid out by Robert F. Ewing in 1875, though it had its birth as a hamlet several years prior to that date. Ewing platted thirty acres of the Wickham farm and A. L. Rowe erected and opened a small store the same year. John Wickham surveyed out another thirty acres in the autumn of 1875 and since then a number of large handsome buildings have been put up. It is a village of attractive appearance and for several years has been an important shipping point. The first merchant in the locality was David Barrett, who opened a grocery store in 1862, and in the same building John Wickham began trade in 1871. Other storekeepers were A. L. Rowe, Ewing & Whipple, and Wilson & Wade. The first hotel was kept by A. B. Charlesworth in a dwelling remodeled for the purpose, and again changed into a farm house. The present hostelry was erected in 1877 and opened to the public the next year. The postoffice was established about 1860, the first postmaster being E. O. Beach, who appointed John Wickham his deputy, at whose house the office was kept. Henry T. Rice and M. L. Ranlett successively held the position.

Markham, formerly known as Markham's Corners, is a station and postoffice about midway between Dayton and South Dayton on the Buffalo & Southwestern division of the Erie railroad, and contains 125 inhabitants, with the usual complement of stores, shops, etc. The name was given the place in honor of Joshua Markham, who settled there in 1834 and shortly afterward opened an inn, which he conducted about thirty years. Ralph Johnson had another tavern near by that he opened in 1845, the building being subsequently occupied as a grocery store by Leonard Metzkar. The original Dayton postoffice was established in this locality. The present office was started in 1876 with John Wallace, postmaster, who was also station agent and a merchant.

Wesley is a postal hamlet in the southeast part of the town, on the old Jamestown road. In early days the settlement was known as Sociality, and the first postoffice in town was established here under that name in 1833 with Ephraim Dutton, postmaster. Here was also opened this year the first store in Dayton by William H. Leland, who also kept a tavern. Franklin Philbrick was likewise a merchant and Harry Howard an innkeeper, and from the latter the place took the name of Howard's Corners soon after 1851, about which time the Sociality postoffice was discontinued, the last postmaster being Nelson Hillebert. The Wesley postoffice was established March 6, 1884, with Charles W. Hall, postmaster, who has since served in that capacity.

The first religious services held in the town of Dayton were of the Baptist order in 1816, and were conducted by Rev. Elnathan Finch, a missionary, at the residence of Caleb Webb in West Dayton. In the autumn of 1818 four persons—Caleb Webb and wife and Daniel and Clarinda Brand—met at this same house and formed a Methodist class, the leader being a Mr. Whipple. Dennis Goddard and Samuel R. Brockway, ministers of the gospel, preached occasionally and the class was augmented by members from the Darbee, Webb, Prosser, and other families.

The Freewill Baptist church of Dayton was organized May 4, 1831, by Rev. Amos C. Andrus, with seven members, and John Seekins was chosen the first clerk. The following year Rev. Stacy Smith became the first pastor and about a year later Rev. Hiram Whicher took charge. In 1834 Rev. F. B. Tanner was called to the pastorate, and he was succeeded in 1835 by Rev. Freeman Darte. The membership in 1847 was forty-two, under Rev. Mr. McKoon as pastor, whose position was filled in 1849 by Rev. Horatio Plumb, who was succeeded by Rev. George Donacker, under whose pastorate the first church edifice, of wood, was erected and completed in 1854, being consecrated by Rev. J. H. Ball, of Buffalo. The society was incorporated February 16, 1852, with Jonathan Wait, Daniel Brown, William Waldron, Harrison Judd, John Seekins, and Ezekiel Seekins as trustees. The building cost $1,200, would seat 200 persons, and was located in the southeastern part of the town near the Leon line. Among the pastors who had charge over it after its erection were Daniel Brown (who was originally licensed within its walls to preach), J. H. Lovelace, L. D. Howe, S. Crosby, J. C. Steele, and Jerome Higbee. In 1890 the society built a frame edifice, veneered with brick, in Dayton village, at a cost of $5,000, capable of seating 300 persons. The present value of the church property is $6,600. There are thirty-eight members under the pastorate of Rev. S. R. Waldron, with M. J. Rhodes, clerk. The Sunday school has five teachers and thirty scholars.

Out of the Methodist class formed in 1818 was incorporated on October 31, 1845, the First M. E. church in Dayton, better known perhaps as the Cottage M. E. church because of its being organized in that hamlet. The first trustees were William Howlett, Gile Johnson, and John B. Reed, the original membership was sixty, and the organizers were W. S. Warallo and T. H. Cummings, who were also jointly the first pastors. The following year (1846) a wooden church edifice was erected, which gave place to the present wooden structure in 1872. The cost of this latter, which will seat about 300 persons, was $2,500, and is now valued, including lot and parsonage (which was purchased a number of years ago), at $4,500. Among the ministers who have had charge of this congregation are Joseph Uncles, W. W. Warner, Peter Burroughs, T. G. McCrary, S. Churchill, W. H. H. Snowden, W. H. Hover, J. H. Whallon, T. P. Warner, L. A. Chapin, A. H. Bowers, and J. G. Garnett, the present pastor. A Sunday school connected with the church has eight teachers and sixty-five scholars.

The Second Methodist Episcopal church in Dayton was incorporated March 8, 1848, with Nelson Hillebert, Avery Park, E. B. Nash, Aaron P. Knowles, Norman L. Bacon, Jonathan Prince, and Benjamin J. Allen, trustees. No church edifice was erected and after a few years the society disbanded, but those who continued a class met in the school house at Howard's Corners on April 21, 1875, and under Rev. J. H. Whallon organized anew, the name being the East Dayton Society of the Methodist Episcopal church. That summer a pretty edifice was built at Howard's Corners at an expense of $2,000 and dedicated in January, 1846, by Rev. J. T. Edwards, of Randolph. The society has been supplied by clergymen from Leon.

The Methodist Episcopal church at Dayton village was organized with forty members by Rev. W. W. Warner in 1864 and on May 15, 1875, the body was duly incorporated. The first pastor was the Rev. Peter Burroughs. A church edifice was put up in 1868, of wood, at a cost of $2,500, and dedicated by Rev. C. C. Carruthers. It will seat about 200 persons and is valued, including lot, at $3,000. A large Sunday school is connected under the superintendency of Mrs. C. A. Markham. The present pastor of the church is Rev. Jeremiah G. Garnett and the membership is sixty.

The Methodist Episcopal church of South Dayton was organized with twenty-five members by Rev. Mr. Palmer, who became the first pastor. Their first and present house of worship was built of wood in 1881, the cost being $1,200, and will seat 250 persons. The present membership is fifty, the value of church property about $1,400, and the pastor is Rev. L. W. Elkins. The Sunday school has an attendance of sixty-five scholars and seven teachers.

The Fair Plain Methodist Episcopal church was organized in 1885 with twelve members, with Rev. W. W. Cushman as the first pastor. Their church building, erected in 1889, of wood, will seat 150 persons, and cost $1,500, the present value of their church property. There are seventeen members under

Rev. F. V. Dunkle, pastor, and the Sunday school connected has forty scholars and four teachers.

About 1857 twenty-five dissenters of the Freewill Baptist church met and organized the Wesleyan Methodist Society of East Dayton under the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Frink. A house of worship was erected that year, at a cost of $500, and capable of seating 500 persons, the present value of which property, including lot, is $700. The membership now is fifteen under Rev. J. Adams as pastor, and connected is a Sunday school of sixty-five members.

The German United Protestant Lutheran church was organized September 3, 1864, by Charles Coeppel, John Oscher, and William Borneman. A few months prior to this date a small wooden church building was erected about four miles south of Dayton village, at a cost of $500, and capable of seating 100 persons. The first pastor was Rev. Mr. Shonstein, who was followed by Rev. Mr. Fagle and others. At present there are twenty members, but the society has no regular pastor.

St. Paul's Roman Catholic church was the immediate result of missionary meetings held by Passionists from Dunkirk in 1863, the present society being organized in 1864 with fifty members. Their first house of worship, of wood, was erected in Dayton village during the latter year and would seat 150 people. The congregation remained in charge of the Passionists until Dayton was made a parish, when Father Charles C. Geppert became the first resident priest. The present church edifice was built in 1876, on a lot covering an acre of ground, a portion of which is used as a cemetery. The structure is 40x70 feet, will seat 400 persons, is supplied with a tower and bell, and cost $4,000; the present value of the church property is $6,000; the present membership is 300 and fifty scholars in the Sunday school.

The Free Union church at Cottage was organized in the fall of 1878 by twenty-five persons, over whom A. P. Cook became the first pastor. Their house of worship was erected the same year, the cost of which was $1,300, the present value being, including lot, $1500. It will seat 200 persons. The society, which is now without a pastor, has a membership of thirty and a Sunday school of thirty-five scholars and five teachers.

The Free Methodist church of South Dayton became an organized body with thirty members in 1880. Their church edifice was built, of wood that year at a cost of $1,000, and would comfortably seat 250 persons. Both membership and value of property remain the same. The first pastor was Rev. Mr. Worthington and the present one Rev. Mr. Jones.

Barzilla Merrill Post, No. 637, G. A. R., was organized September 18, 1888, with seventeen members, the present number being thirty-three.

Summit Lodge, No. 72, A. O. U. W., Dayton, was instituted February 24, 1877, with twelve members.

Valley Lodge, No. 704, K. of H., of Pine Valley, was organized August 1, 1877. There were eleven charter members.

Valley Lodge Building Association was formed in April, 1878, for the purpose of providing a suitable hall for lodge and other purposes at Pine Valley. A two-story building was erected the following fall.

Pine Valley Lodge, No. 605, I. O. O. F., at South Dayton, was instituted September 9, 1891, by Dr. R. D. Wilcox, D. D. G. M. The first officers were A. F. Kelley, N. G.; H. T. Wilson, V. G.; B. A. Whipple, secretary; D. J. White, recording secretary; J. F. Peacock, treasurer.

Asahel Allen, son of Peter, a native of Connecticut, was born in Fabius, Onondaga county, Nov. 5, 1802, and came to Dayton in 1818, cleared a farm where that village now stands, and erected the first dwelling house on the site, buying the land of the Holland Land Company at $3 per acre. He finally moved to Cottage, where he died Jan. 21, 1858. His wife, Sally A., daughter of Jonathan Benedict, of Onondaga county, died Oct. 22, 1847. Their children were Jonathan B., Peter R., Harlow, Lucy M., Laura J., Eliza L., Mary C., James M., George M., and Ellen M. By his second wife, Julia A., daughter of Timothy M. Shaw, he had three children—Annette, Newton, and Julia A. Peter R. Allen married Betsey, daughter of Daniel and Lydia (Eddie) Johnson, and died July 29, 1880. He was a farmer and wood mechanic. Their only son, Danial E., was born Aug. 25, 1862, and is postmaster of Dayton. Mrs. Allen is still living.

Jonathan B. Allen was born Aug. 10, 1824, and married, Nov. 8, 1849, Fanny M., daughter of Timothy M. and Amanda (Redfield) Shaw. Their children are Ellen (Mrs. A. C. Wright), Laura (Mrs. David Brand), and Cora L., who died Sept. 2, 1877. Mr. Allen is a farmer and has been justice of the peace fourteen years.

Luther Allen also came to Dayton in 1818 and became prominent in town affairs. He arrived before he had attained his majority, and soon returned to Onondaga county for his wife, whom he brought to his rude home on an ox-sled. His was the first frame house erected in Dayton village, in 1834. Mr. Allen finally removed to Gowanda, where he died in Feb., 1847. He was supervisor of Dayton in 1837, 1838, and 1844.

Hiram Austin, son of Samuel, came to Dayton in 1826, cleared a farm, and died here Nov. 16, 1875. He was twice married and had three children, of whom Hiram C., born Jan. 26, 1825, married Jane Hooker, has five children, and is a farmer on the homestead.

Christopher Babcock was a native of Rhode Island and served in the Revolutionary war. Asa, his son, born in Westerly, R. I., Oct. 9, 1777, died in Jefferson county, N. Y., in 1840; he married Mary Babcock and, second, Elizabeth Barber, both of whom were born in Westerly. His children were Caroline, Thomas, George W., Amy, Mary, Asa C., Elizabeth, and Christopher J. Christopher J. was born in Smyrna, Dec. 14, 1814, and married, Nov. 11, 1838, Rebecca A., daughter of Silas and Jerusha Smith, and their children were Amy, 2d, and William A., both of whom were born in Truxton, N. Y. Mr. Babcock married, second, Harriet Button, and their children are Julius C. (deceased), Wesley J., Willis A., Frank P., and Herman T. He was formerly a ship-builder, but is now a retired resident of South Dayton. He married, third, Mrs. Sarah A. Chase.

Norman Bacon was a son of Penuel and was born in Onondaga county. He came to Dayton at an early day and died May 9, 1849, on the farm which he cleared. His wife, Lucy Ann Park, died here in 1872. Their son Elisha

They moved to Meadville, Pa., where they both taught school three years, and then went to Oil Creek, Pa., where he engaged in oil speculation. In 1866 they returned to Dayton and settled at Cottage, where he died May 7, 1891. Their only son, William W. Merrill, was born May 29, 1868, and with his widowed mother occupies the homestead.

Anson C. Merrill was an early settler of Dayton and held many offices of trust, among them that of supervisor in 1839 and 1840, and died here aged 75. Of his seven children Albert J. occupies the Merrill farm in Dayton.

Heman Merrill, son of Barzilla, was born in Fabius, Onondaga county, March 27, 1891, and came to Dayton at an early day. He was supervisor of Dayton in 1846 and 1847. He died on the farm he cleared on June 1, 1871. Heman R. Merrill, one of his thirteen children, was born here Feb. 1, 1836, married, April 1, 1855, Lydia M. Day, of Villanova, Chautauqua county, and has had born to him six children. Mr. and Mrs. Merrill reside on the Marvin farm in Dayton, where he has lived twenty-eight years.

Silas H. Merrill, the father of Mrs. Marcus J. Rhodes, was born in Dayton in 1830. His father, Heman, was born in Connecticut in 1791 and died at the age of eighty years. Silas H. married Maria J. Marshall, of Erie county, Pa., and their children were Ara N. and Martha I. He was prominent in local politics and for many years was a deacon in the Baptist church. On Dec. 29, 1876, he was killed in the Ashtabula (Ohio) railroad disaster, and nothing was ever found of his remains. A pocket knife, a bunch of keys, and his gold watch were all that were recovered by which identity could be established. His watch had stopped at 7:32 P. M., indicating the time of the accident.

Jonathan Milks was the first settler on a farm in the south part of Dayton. He was born in Washington county in 1800 and died here at the age of eighty years, his wife Margaret dying aged sixty. Their children were John, Benjamin, Jonathan, Prince W., Luke, Mary, Bashebee, Sarah, and Deborah. Benjamin Milks married Elida Miller and their children are Leonard, Charles, Cordelia, Betsey, Garret, Joanna, Deborah, Gilbert, and Freeman. The latter was born in Dayton, July 22, 1831, and Oct. 23, 1856, married Joanna, daughter of Eber and Martha (Kimball) Franklin, of Leon. She was born July 24, 1836. Mr. Milks resides in Dayton village. He has lived in the town from his birth, has been a farmer, and now owns 500 acres of land and a saw-mill.

Silas Nash was a native of Massachusetts and came to Dayton in 1810. He and Simeon Bunce were the first settlers in the town. He cleared a farm now known as the Nash farm, where he lived until his death. In his house occurred the first birth and first death in Dayton. He married Sally Bunce, a sister of Simeon, and their children were Aras (the first child born in town), Miranda, Almira, Emeline, and Dewitt. The latter was born in Dayton, July 10, 1818, and died here April 27, 1891. He was a great hunter. With his gun and friends he would roam the wild forests in search of game, which they always found. He married Julia H. Smith on October 5, 1842. She was an excellent woman and his companion for nearly half a century, and survives him. Their adopted children are Adelbert, Charles, Orlando, and Marshall.

The Nash family has been prominent in the northwest part of the county. Representatives of the various branches have frequently filled positions of trust and responsibility, and have invariably served their constituents and their country with unswerving fidelity and lasting honor. Silas Nash was supervisor of Perry in 1818, of Perrysburg in 1821 and 1822, and of Dayton in 1835, 1836, 1841, 1842, 1843, and 1845. Dewitt Nash held the same office for the town of Dayton in 1858 and 1859.

Thomas Newcomb, a pioneer of Dayton, cleared a farm near Markham, where he died at an advanced age. His son Edwin, who was born here in 1831, has married three times and resides on the homestead. Another son, George, served in the 154th N. Y. Vols. and died a prisoner on Belle Island.

Isaac Olivey was born in London, England. He was paymaster in the Royal Engineers' Corps at Aldershoot. He had one son, Isaac Olivey, Jr., who was born in London in 1835 and was drowned in a shipwreck off the coast of Ireland in 1860. His wife, Elizabeth Coomb, who died in London in 1883, bore him two children, William and John. John Olivey came to Dayton and married Catharine A., daughter of Joseph Vance, of New Hamburg, Canada, and their children are Charles D., Clara E., and Laura I. Mr. Olivey is a cheesemaker at Markham.

Sidney Park, son of Ephraim and Betsey Park, was born in Chenango county, Sept. 1, 1805, and died in Leon, April 17, 1864. He came to Dayton in 1826. His wife, Cornelia E. Kirby, whom he married June 24, 1825, bore him five children: Wellington N., Betsey E., Elizabeth A., John Q., and Andrew G. The latter was born in Dayton, Aug. 6, 1839, and Jan. 1, 1866, married Mary D., daughter of William and Almeda Hall, of New Albion, and his children were Fenton M., William H., Alzina C., Lester A., and Earle S. Mr. Park is a farmer, a dealer in hay and grain, and assessor and highway commissioner. Aug. 11, 1862, he enlisted in Co. B, 154th N. Y. Vols., and was honorably discharged June 17, 1865. He participated in the battles of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and Gettysburg, was transferred to the Army of the Cumberland, was in Sherman's campaign and march to the sea, was first duty sergeant, was taken prisoner at Snow Hill, N. C., March 26, 1865, and was incarcerated within twenty miles of where Jefferson Davis was captured.

Avery Park, another son of Ephraim, was born in Chenango county in 1800, came to Dayton in 1826, cleared a farm in the eastern part of the town, and died in the village in 1876. He was justice of the peace many years. He married Lodema Ann, daughter of Alexander Nash, of Dayton, who died in 1846, their children being Franklin, Electa Ann, Achsah M., Porter A., Anson N., Hudson H., and Esek K. The latter, born in Dayton, Sept. 6, 1830, married, Dec. 25, 1852, Emeline O. Wade, who was born in 1832. Their children are Roselia A. (Mrs. Rowland Hall) and Lincoln A. Parke. Mr. Park is a resident of Wesley, where he is a general merchant and farmer and a justice of the peace. Lincoln A. Parke was born Sept. 11, 1867, and is a merchant with his father.

Porter A. Park, son of Avery and Lodema (Nash) Park, was born on the homestead in Dayton, June 26, 1840, and Sept. 9, 1864, married Amelia, daughter of Daniel D. and Amanda English, who was born March 14, 1844. Their children are Clayton A., born May 1, 1867; Clarence E., born April 3, 1872; Clara A., born Dec. 24, 1875, died Feb. 28, 1879; and Herbert H., born May 8, 1882. Mr. Park served in Co. K, 25th Wis. Vols., and was discharged Feb. 16, 1865, on account of wounds. He is a farmer near Wesley.

Joseph K. Peck, a native of Connecticut, was born Nov. 4, 1776, and came at an early day to Freedom. His wife, Isabella Hyde, also a native of Connecticut, was born June 30, 1779, and their children were Mary, Samuel, Joseph, Hannah, David B., Emily, Porter, Lurany, Eunice, Joel, and Horace, of whom Horace was born in Freedom, Dec. 27, 1831, married, Oct. 3, 1852, Delia Poland, and has had born to him these children: Hiram C., Jan. 17, 1854; Elmer H., Jan. 25, 1859, died Aug. 25, 1859; Ella O., Nov. 12, 1862; Elma S., Feb. 2, 1865; Willa C., May 2, 1867; Albert H., June 9, 1874; and Elga E., May 25, 1878. Horace Peck has resided on the Matteson farm 39 years.

Daniel Potter came from Wyoming county to Machias, where he cleared a farm and died at the age of eighty-seven years. His children were Allen, Daniel, David, Silas, Achsah, Mary, and William. William Potter, born in Wyoming county, Jan. 25, 1809, came to East Leon, where he now resides, in about 1840. He married Basheba Waite and his children are Butler, Allen, George, Silas, Peter, Mary Jane, Melissa, and Mercy. Silas Potter was born in Leon, March 5, 1848, and Feb. 20, 1876, married Mary Locke, who died in September, 1890. He married, second, Florence, daughter of John Johnson, and his children are Juvie and Charles (adopted). He is a farmer in Dayton.

Orange Remington was born in Wallingford, Rutland county, Vt., June 2, 1810, and came to Onondaga county and thence to Dayton in 1832, where he cleared a farm in the south part of the town and died in 1871. Nov. 11, 1835, he married Mary D. Mayo and his children were Hepsabee, born Nov. 8, 1837; Wallace W., born June 30, 1839; Garret P., born Sept. 5, 1841; and George W., born Feb. 25, 1845. George W. Remington married Alice Dean and they have one daughter, Carrie I., born April 11, 1870. He is now a farmer on the homestead. His mother, Mary, survives her husband. On the 5th of Sept., 1892, it being her birthday, a re-union of the family occurred, at which were present three children and their families, fourteen grandchildren and their families, and twenty-one great-grandchildren. Mrs. Remington came from Chautauqua county and has lived in Dayton seventy-three years. Her stepfather, Royal Aldrich, was the first settler on what is called the Summit, where he cleared 200 acres of land. Garret P. Remington, born in Dayton, Sept. 4, 1841, married, July 4, 1861, Augusta, daughter of Darius and Mary A. (Merrill) Markham, who was born in Dayton, Jan. 20, 1846. He enlisted in the late war April 4, 1861, and is a farmer on the Benjamin Markham farm.

Marcus J. Rhodes, son of Joseph (son of George and Annie) and Sarah L. Rhodes, of Northville, Pa., was born at Corning, N. Y., March 5, 1854, married Martha J. Merrill, and has had born to him four children, Maria B., Merrill H., Sarah A., and Silas A. He is a farmer.

James Rice came to Gowanda in 1834 and died in Dayton in 1884. He was a cabinet maker by trade, a farmer and for twenty-five years station agent at Dayton village. His wife, Eleanor Howe, survives him.

Hiram Sherman, an Englishman by birth, came to New Albion as an early settler and died there in 1861. He married twice, and of his ten children Alvin H. is a harnessmaker in Dayton village.

Chauncey R. Smith was born in Oneida county. His father, Thomas Smith, was also born there, was one of the earliest settlers of Villenova, Chautauqua county, where he died March 3, 1872, and served in the War of 1812. Chauncey R. Smith married Lucy E. Searles and died in Villenova aged forty-three. His children were Marvin E. and Emeline D., of whom the former was born in Villenova, July 14, 1840, and married, Aug 15, 1858, Rhoda Ames, by whom he has had these children: Henry P., Susie D., Nellie A., Jennie V., and Emma L. (deceased). Mr. Smith was proprietor of the Smith Hotel in South Dayton twelve years and is now a farmer near that village.

Abram Sprague, son of Reuben and Huldah Sprague, was born in Hamburg, Erie county, married Louisa, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Shaw) Oaks, and had two children, Juliette and Emery, the latter of whom was born Feb. 1, 1873, and is now a farmer with his widowed mother. Emery Sprague died in Dayton in 1874, aged sixty-three.

Anderson Stelley died in Franklinville in 1875. His children were Spencer, James, Dottson, Anderson, Olive, and Wealthy. Spencer Stelley died in Chautauqua county Sept. 7, 1889. For a time he was a resident of Ischua. He married Malinda, daughter of John Scott, of Farmersville, and their children were Nathan S., Warren, Laura A., Pelona, Almira, Edwin, Bert, and Adelbert. Laura A. Stelley, born in Franklinville, July 18, 1860, married, Oct. 7, 1871, Hiram Peck, of Dayton. Their children are Ida, born July 6, 1888; Charley, born Dec. 17, 1884; and Ray, born Oct. 16, 1890. Nathan S. Stelley was born at Ischua, July 21, 1856, and in 1880 married Mary A., daughter of Hiram C. and Jane (Hooker) Austin, of Dayton. Their children are Hiram A., Laura A., and Bernice B. He is a harnessmaker in Dayton village.

Philemon Studley, son of Jonathan and Lois (Huntley) Studley, natives of New England, was born March 27, 1817, settled in Pomfret, Chautauqua county, and finally removed to Dayton, where he now resides, a farmer. He married, first, Elvira Starks, second, Chloe A. Adams, and, third, Alvira Darling. His children are Mary E., Charles A., David, Maria, and Marion. Charles and David served in the late war, the latter dying in Vicksburg, June 9, 1863. Mr. Studley has been a member of the M. E. church 63 years.

Stephen Titus was born on Long Island in 1772 and died Sept. 4, 1814. He was a farmer. His wife, Sally Starr, born Jan. 25, 1774, died Nov. 30, 1814. Of his twelve children Ira C. was born in Onondaga county, Oct. 1, 1803, and May 4, 1826, married Mary Whipple, who was born in March, 1808. They had five children, of whom Silas, born in Perrysburg, Nov. 21, 1832, married, Feb. 22, 1855, Naoma, daughter of Samuel Leggett, who bore him three children, Eva, Frank, and Emma. He married, second, Ellen, daughter of Willard and Johanna Daniels, and his children by her are Burt, Emma, May, and Burt, 2d. Silas Titus is a farmer in the west part of the town.

Adam Volk was a son of Adam and was born and died in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany. He was a farmer, and of his eight children George was born Jan. 21, 1831, and came to America in 1853. After residing at Black Rock near Buffalo one year he removed to Sandusky, Ohio, thence to Canada, later to Gowanda, and finally to the village of Dayton, where he was killed by the cars March 14, 1893. He was a cooper by trade, and for sixteen years was proprietor of a hotel in Dayton village. As a gentleman and a citizen he was highly respected. His wife was Catharine Beesel, who died in 1884, and their children were John J., Louisa, Catharine, George, Ida, and Emma. John J. Volk was born March 4, 1858, and married Maggie, daughter of Daniel and Emeline Howard. He is a hardware merchant in Dayton, and has held the office of town clerk in all twelve years.

Benjamin Waite, born in Washington county, came to East Leon with his father in 1830 and died there in 1891. He married Martha, daughter of George Barse, and his children were Vermelia (Mrs. Alphonse Roberts), Fred, Lucy, and Albert. Albert Waite was born in Dayton, March 7, 1858, and

Feb. 28, 1882, he married Ella, daughter of Horace and Adelia S. (Poland) Peck. Their children are Martin M., born Feb. 4, 1883, and Nettie M., born June 12, 1888. He is now a farmer on the homestead.

Elijah Wells, Jr., son of Elijah and Lydia Wells, of Massachusetts, was born in Conway in that State and moved to Oneida county and finally to Perrysburg, where he died. By his wife, Mercy Hopkins, he had these children: Thomas, John, Clarissa, Dexter, Elijah, and Luther. Elijah Wells was born in Sangersfield, Oneida county, Nov. 1, 1813, came to Perrysburg with his father, and married, April 7, 1842, Lovina, daughter of John and Julia Farnsworth, who bore him children as follows: John L., Julia A., Clarissa, Jonathan S., Adelbert C., and Eleanor. Mrs. Wells died at the age of seventy-eight. Mr. Wells survives her and resides in Dayton. Adelbert C. Wells married Lillie Smith and has one son, Leo. He lives with his father on the homestead. John L. Wells enlisted in the 64th Regt. N. Y. Vols. and died at Camp California in 1862 of typhoid fever.

Joshua Wilber was born in Collins, Erie county, June 17, 1819, married, Jan. 29, 1840, Clarinda, daughter of Daniel L. and Sybil (Golding) White, and came to Dayton in 1885. His father, Stephen, a native of Vermont, came to Buffalo in 1807, being there at the burning of that city in 1814, and removed to Collins, where he died in 1862. Isaac Wilber, the brother of Stephen, was a native of Scotland and a Quaker, and before settling in Danby, Vt., followed the ocean for about twenty years. He eventually came to Collins, where he died at nearly 100 years of age. The children of Joshua and Clarinda (White) Wilber are George, Daniel, Imogene, Steukley, and Frank B. He enlisted in Co. D, 10th N. Y. Cav., and served under Gen. Sheridan until the war closed.

Alanson Wilcox became a settler of this town at the age of twenty years. He served in the War of 1812. His son William C., who was born here in 1845, has married twice, and lives on the Wilcox homestead.

Alonzo Wood, son of George, married in 1844 Betsey Satterly, of Otto. He served in Co. A, 9th N. Y. Cav., and is a farmer in the town of Dayton.

Lemuel H. Wood was an early comer to Leon, where he died in 1853. His son Daniel T., born in 1830, married Sarah Wells, served in Co. K, 64th N. Y. Vols., and now resides at South Dayton.

CHAPTER XXIV.*

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF EAST OTTO.

EAST OTTO was formed November 30, 1854, by dividing the town of Otto. It lies on the north border of the county, nearly in the center east and west, being parts of towns five and six, range seven, and a small portion of town five, range six, of the Holland survey. In 1858 a strip of land two and one-fourth miles long and one and one-half miles wide was taken from the northwest corner of Ellicottville and annexed to this town, and in 1866 that part of lots 44 and 45 lying in Ashford were also annexed to East Otto, giving the town its present area of 25,236 acres. The northern boundary is Cattaraugus creek, which flows westerly : on the east are Ashford and Ellicottville, between the former town and East Otto being Connair-auley creek, flowing northwesterly ; on the south are Ellicottville and Mansfield ; and on the west is Otto.

* For this chapter we are pleased to acknowledge our obligations to Ralph Dewey and to G. W. Andrews.—EDITOR.

The surface is mostly a series of hills and valleys extending through the town from the eastern part in a westerly direction. The larger of these valleys commences in the southeast corner and runs northwest till it passes the center of the town, when it turns to the southwest. In this valley are found some valuable farms. The soil throughout the town is of an excellent quality, on the hills as well as in the valleys, and produces large crops of grass and grain. The hills attain an altitude of several hundred feet, the highest of which, in the southeast corner of the town, is about 1,650 feet above Lake Erie, which can be plainly seen from the summits of many of the hills when the atmosphere is clear. The western portion of the town comprised a part of what was formerly locally known as the "big swamp" and was covered with a dense growth of alternating pine, hemlock, black ash, alder, etc., with birch, beech, and red (or soft) maple on the slightly elevated ridges. The original forest of much the larger portion was mostly of the various deciduous trees that in summer clothed the rounded hilltops till they appeared like immense green billows, while the valleys were like emerald bowls brimming over with sunshine. Few landscapes are fairer than East Otto's larger valley viewed from the lower slopes of her eastern hills. The "big swamp" has been largely denuded of its timber and is now inhabited by an energetic population that is bidding fair to make this former wilderness "blossom like the rose," and the land under cultivation will ere long be among the best.

The attention of the farmers is mainly confined to dairying. In the town are six cheese factories, in which during the year 1892 were manufactured 906,000 pounds of cheese, receiving the milk from 2,470 cows. There are also some large home creameries. The town is noted for the large quantity and choice quality of maple sugar manufactured here from year to year. Lumbering is still carried on to some extent. Daniel Hawkins has in the village a circular saw-mill in connection with a planing-mill, shingle-mill, and cheese-box factory, and to which is attached a grist-mill ; he also has a steam circular saw-mill in the northwest corner of the town. John Laing & Son have a steam circular mill in the western part and Ira Tefft another in the northern part. Orville L. Larkins has a circular saw-mill and a grist-mill on the same site where Moses T. Beach built his mills seventy years ago ; mills have been continued on this location ever since the first one was erected. A short distance below the Larkins mills Ladore V. Sikes has a circular saw-mill.

In favorable seasons East Otto produces a large surplus of excellent apples, which bring considerable revenue to the farmers. The population of the town in 1870 was 1,164; in 1880, 1,251; in 1890, 1,288.

The first settlement in East Otto was made in 1816 by Horace Wells, who came from Schoharie county and located in what is now East Otto village, camping the first night, it is said, under a tree where the hardware store now stands. Joseph Bates settled about one mile east of here about the same time and a few years afterward located north of the village. In 1817 John V. King, and Allen and Rufus King, his brothers, settled near Cattaraugus creek a short distance above the mouth of the Connoitirauley. In 1819 Jabez Hull came from Erie county, taking up his residence about two miles east of the village. He was a resident of Buffalo at the time it was burned in the War of 1812. Two sons of Mr. Hull, Ira and Roland, came about the same time, as did also Ephraim Rolfe, who was here before 1820. Simeon B. Hinman came from Vermont in 1820 and located about one mile southeast of the village. About this time there was quite an influx of settlers, among whom were Josiah Baker, Daniel Burchard, Caleb Pierce, Justus Bartholomew (who came from Massachusetts), Azan Wells (the father of Horace), Walter Wells (a brother of Horace, probably at the same time), Philip and Henry Bonesteel, Clark Holmes (a minister of the M. E. church for many years who came from Herkimer county), Alvah Powers, and John Mason. In the fall of 1821 Moses T. Beach, a captain in the Revolution, and his son, Tyler M. Beach, came from Massachusetts and located on land where O. L. Larkins's mills now stand. Moses T. Beach had previously purchased the small improvements made on the land of Josiah Baker, and here in 1823 he erected the first saw-mill and in 1824 the first grist-mill in East Otto; he also built the first frame house, which is still standing and is used by Mr. Larkins as a shop. Tyler M. Beach was the first postmaster.

In 1822 Roderick Scovel came from Wyoming county, Samuel Tuthill from Vermont, and about the same time his brother William, Sumner Reed, Thomas Whitford, and Ozi M. Goodale, a Baptist minister. In 1823 Abram L. Gibbs, the father of Gov. Addison C. Gibbs, of Oregon, came from Richfield, Otsego county, and purchased of Alvah Powers the farm now owned by Poltus Rush. Hezekiah Scovel, the father of Roderick, with a large family came from Warsaw, Wyoming county; his daughter Polly S. (Mrs. Theron Perkins) was at the time two years old and remembers very interesting and exciting events which took place in the South woods, as the locality was called in her girlhood days. Wild beasts were abundant, and it was often a question which owned the sheep, the wolves or the settlers. Moses Leland came from Vermont with several sons and located east of the village. One of the sons, Moses N., a Baptist minister, was married in the fall of 1823 to Brittanja Wells, and it has been questioned some whether this or the marriage of Josiah Baker and Sally Bartholomew was the first that took place in town. A number of the descendants have become prominent citizens in other localities.

David Williams about this time settled in the north part of the town, as did also Eli D. Cox, who married Eliza S., daughter of Mr. Williams. Barton Morey, from Erie county, located near Williams the same year; Mrs. Poltus Rush is a daughter of Mr. Morey, was born in 1826, and is probably the oldest person born here and yet living in town. Jeremiah Spaulding with his family located about two miles east of the village. Peter Strunk settled near him.

Eleazer Larabee came from Hamburg, Erie county, and located a little south of the village. Mr. Larabee's sons, Miner, Thomas, Nathan, and Ira, with their families, and Sidney, a single man, together with four daughters, came about the same time. Noah Stowell, a minister of the M. E. church, came from Herkimer county and settled in the south part of the town. Joseph Hammond located near Cattaraugus creek. Joseph Burchard and Grif-fin Swayne were here before 1824. Swayne built a tannery in 1829 and a store at a later period. John Darling came from Massachusetts in 1823 or 1824. Ichabod Brown settled in the eastern part of the town in 1824, John Pratt in the northern part, and Nathan and Thomas Whitford located in what has since been known as Whitford hollow.

Hon. Elijah A. Rice came here in 1824 and in 1826 moved his family from Otsego county, coming to Buffalo on the first line boat that came through on the Erie canal. He was the father of Hon. Addison G. Rice, Hon. Milton L. Rice, Hon. Carlton A. Rice (chief judge in Kansas), and Hon. Benjamin F. Rice (U. S. senator from the State of Arkansas). Morris Fosdick, who afterward became a prominent counselor and citizen of Springville, N. Y., was here as early as 1824. Ebenezer Brush was also a settler about the same time. Rufus Darling in 1825 settled in the southeastern part of the town; he was the father of Hon. John P. Darling and grandfather of Judge A. D. Scott. Dr. Levi Bullis came from Cooperstown and located about one mile west of the village; he was an early physician. Arnold Bentley, Nathan Scovel, and Joseph Whaley came the same year. Benjamin Mason and David T., his son, located in the southeast corner of the town, coming from Wayne county. Levi Bradley came from Vermont and settled in the west part of the town.

In the spring of 1827 Alexander Tefft came from Otsego county with his wife, four sons, and two daughters. Nathaniel Niles Tefft was noted as a surveyor throughout the county; Dewey was for years a minister in the Free Methodist church; Samuel resides in Springville. Waistill Wilcox with his sons John and Warren, and Niles Starkweather, were here prior to 1828. Starkweather kept an inn near where the Baptist church now stands. In 1828 John and Calvin Pratt came from Montgomery county and settled in the north-west corner of the town. Philip Pratt located in the north part. The same year John Bonesteel, with his sons William and Edmund and several daughters, and Joseph Burchard, 2d, arrived.

In 1829 Willis M. Andrews, Daniel Bailey, and Samuel Wells, a brother of Horace Wells, came in. Among others who came about the same time or soon after may be mentioned Darius Pratt, a brother of John and Calvin; Salmon Lull, from Massachusetts; Samuel Colvin and his brothers Allen and Freeman, from Vermont; John Perkins, who was largely interested in the growth of the M. E. church, from Washington county; Dea. Samuel Everts, from Pittsfield, Mass.; Arunah Griffith, later a prominent merchant in the village; and Isaac Reed, from Otsego county. Sylvester Pierce, the father of Gov. and U. S. Senator Gilbert Pierce, of Dakota, and of Emmons Pierce, the famous horse poet, of Springville, located in the village in 1833. Elihu Ward came from Massachusetts and settled in the western part of the town. Elijah Dresser, M. D. (see page 123), came from Buffalo. Leonard Utley, Philander Griffith, Hiram Sikes, and Amos N. Fitch came early in the thirties.

Some whose names are previously mentioned, and others who came at a later period, are more particularly noticed in subsequent pages. The pioneers who felled the forest and opened the way for the present prosperity of the town have, with scarcely an exception, passed on to the other shore, leaving to the present generation a rich heritage in fruitful farms, pleasant homes, and beautiful scenery.

From this town have gone forth a number of individuals prominent in the history of other States and localities, among them being Gov. Addison C. Gibbs, of Oregon; Gov. and U. S. Senator Gilbert Pierce, of Dakota; U. S. Senator Benjamin Rice, of Arkansas; and members of Congress and of the Legislatures of other States as well as of New York.

The act creating the town of East Otto, passed November 30, 1854, provided for the convening of the first town meeting at the school house in the village on the fourth Tuesday in February, 1855. At this meeting the following officers were elected: John Laing, supervisor; A. L. Gibbs, town clerk; Dr. Elijah Dresser, commissioner of common schools; F. G. Larabee, Thomas Morrow, Arunah Griffith, Eli D. Cox, justices of the peace; S. B. Dunbar and M. M. Bartholomew, assessors; John C. Pratt, collector; Samuel H. Lull, overseer of the poor. Subjoined are lists of the supervisors, town clerks, and justices of the peace from 1855 to the present time:

East Otto post village contains about 250 inhabitants and is situated a little to the south and west of the center of the town, surrounded on all sides by a thrifty farming community. The business places are J. & D. Laing and M. W. Butterfield, general merchants; C. H. Mason, hardware, stoves, and tinware; H. M. Lincoln, groceries and provisions; R. H. Philbrick, furniture and undertaking; G. W. Andrews, drugs; John Hamele, harness and horse furnishing goods; George F. Orr and S. R. Sikes, carriage shops; E. D. Satterlee and Edwin Smith, blacksmiths; Jacob Gampp, cheese factory; Daniel Hawkins, cheese box factory, saw-mill, and grist-mill; and William Hammond, mine host at the Hammond House. Among the former merchants here were Griffin Swayne, Charles Mallory, Sylvester Pierce, Hawkins & Beebe, Chester Lowe, Daniel Wilson, Philander Griffith, George Drullard, Henry Beach, Walter Burchard, Julius Beach, J. L. Drake, E. B. Bonesteel, James Hufstader, Frank Warren, George L. Warren, John Leonard, Stephen Laing, J. A. Andrews, Walter Fox, S. S. Laing, and F. W. Holmes.

Plato, in the extreme southeast corner of the town, is a small hamlet named in honor of the celebrated Greek philosopher, Plato. At one time it had quite a boom and aspired to become a city. The general store of H. F. Hiller is here with the postoffice in the store, and Mr. Hiller is postmaster. A postoffice was established here in 1832 with Enoch Marvin as postmaster, but was subsequently discontinued. The present office is of recent date. A union cheese factory, a blacksmith shop, and several dwellings are located in the hamlet.

The first school is said to have been taught by Miriam Leland at the house of her brother, Asa Leland; the first school house was built near where afterward stood the Union cheese factory and in it Moses N. Leland was the first teacher. In 1828 a log school house was erected in the north part of the town, where Statira Barr taught the initial term. There are in East Otto nine school districts, among which in 1892 there was apportioned the sum of $1,240.32 from the State school moneys. The village school has two teachers.

At East Otto village is a cemetery containing several acres, which has been used as a place for the burial of the dead since the early settlement of the town. On its monuments and tombstones are recorded the names of many who were prominent actors in the early history of this portion of Cattaraugus county. In the northern part of the town, near the Free Methodist church, is a cemetery that has been used as a burial place for over forty years. The Tefft family selected a lot on their land, surrounded by an iron fence, where now sleep a number of that family's dead.

The first religious services in the town were held at the dwelling of Tyler M. Beach late in 1821 or early in 1822. In the latter year Rev. Ira Bronson, a Methodist preacher, began ministering to the spiritual wants of the community, but how long he remained can not be determined. Indeed, aside from these facts, the early history of religion in East Otto, before the organization of churches, is obscure.

The First Baptist church of (East) Otto was organized as the Baptist church of Otto at the house of Hezekiah Scovel on the 22d of September, 1825, by a council of churches. The initial meeting effecting this organization was held at the same place on the 2d of July preceding, at which Samuel Tuthill was elected moderator and Nathan Larabee clerk. The original membership numbered twenty-two, and on September 24th Tuthill and Larabee were chosen deacons. The first church service was held September 25, 1825, by Rev. David S. Wooster, who was pastor until 1827. His immediate successors were Revs. O. M. Goodale, L. Loomis, H. D. Mason (ordained August 25, 1833), D. Platt, B. Wilcox, C. J. Scott, B. Oviatt, N. Gray, S. B. Thompson, R. Cherryman, and N. F. Langmade. The name was changed on December 20, 1831, to the First Baptist church of Otto, and in 1833-34 a wooden edifice was erected about a mile east of East Otto village, to which place it was removed in 1854. The present house of worship was built in 1873-74 and dedicated December 22, 1874. It is of wood and cost about $5,000, and will seat some 350 persons. The old edifice was sold to the town and used as a town hall. The society now has forty members, who are at present without a pastor. The value of the church property is estimated at $3,500.

The Methodist church in East Otto village was formed in 1826 by Rev. Ira Bronson, who became the first pastor. The original number of members was nine. The society now has 105 members under the pastoral care of Rev. A. H. Johnson. Their first house of worship was a brick structure erected in 1842. This was rebuilt of wood in 1853, remodeled in 1868, and burned in 1880. The present edifice is constructed of wood, will seat 350 persons, and cost $5,000; the entire church property is valued at $6,000. The Sunday school has a membership of 135.

The Presbyterian church of East Otto was organized in February, 1834, and received into the Presbytery of Buffalo on the 2d of September following. The first meeting occurred at a school house under Rev. William J. Wilcox and Abijah Parmalee, of Springville, and the original membership numbered eleven. Samuel Everts and Tyler Spaulding were the first deacons; the last resident minister was Rev. W. W. Norton. In 1846 the society had forty-six members, but this number has decreased to about a half dozen at the present time, who still continue the organization.

The First Free Methodist church of East Otto was organized January 6, 1861, by Rev. B. T. Roberts, with sixteen members, who were under Rev. O. O. Bacon as first pastor. The first official meeting occurred at the house of Nathaniel Niles Tefft on March 30th and the first services were held in the school house in "Whitford hollow." The society now numbers thirty-two members and is under the pastoral charge of Rev. H. W. Rowley. Their house of worship, a neat wooden structure, was erected in 1869 and dedicated June 10, 1870. It cost $3,000, has seats for 300 persons, and with other church property is valued at $5,000. The Sunday school connected with this church has about twenty-five members.

A society of the W. C. T. U. was organized at East Otto village in May, 1888, with thirty-seven members; Mrs. S. S. Laing, president; Mrs. O. D. Satterlee, secretary. Mrs. H. Tuthill is president and Mrs. S. C. Spaulding is corresponding secretary. The membership numbers fourteen.

The name Andrews is the modern English form of the Latin, Andreas, which signifies a man. Some bearing the name have claimed that "it is derived from St. Andrew the Apostle." The family has been prominent in England, whose books of heraldry contain full descriptions of their "coats of arms." John Andrews came from England in 1640 and settled on land in Connecticut in what was anciently known as "Tunxis," afterward as "farmingtowne," and later as Farmington, on which land some of his direct descendants still reside. He died in 1681 and his wife Mary in 1694. Daniel, their third son, was born in 1649 and died in 1731. His son Daniel was born in 1672 and died in 1748. Joseph, son of Daniel, Jr., was born in 1711, lived in Glastonbury, Conn., and died about 1747, leaving a son Joseph, born in 1745, who was a soldier in the Revolution, as was also his brother Daniel. Joseph died in 1837. George, the fourth son of the last named (Joseph), was born in 1780, removed to Knowlesville, N. Y., in 1815, and died in 1861. Willis M., the second son of George, was born Feb. 7, 1806, in Glastonbury, Conn. In 1829 he came with Samuel Wells, a brother of Horace Wells, the pioneer, to East Otto, and Jan. 1, 1832, married Mariette Bonesteel, who was born in Worcester, N. Y., Jan. 8, 1810, and who came with her father's family to East Otto in 1828. Soon after his marriage he built a house and shop at East Otto Corners, where he carried on shoemaking till the early forties, when he purchased a farm near "the corners," which he managed till his removal in 1864 to Cattaraugus, where he died Sept. 3, 1870, his wife surviving until Nov. 36, 1891. Prior to their marriage she was a school teacher. Both lived useful, honorable lives, and their many sterling characteristics were inherited by their descendants. Sketches of their children appear in the chapters of the towns with which they have been most recently identified. The Andrews family has ever been ready to take up arms in their country's defence. From the Revolution to the present day they have gallantly participated in every war which has threatened the nation's life, enlisting others in the strife, and leading or themselves going to victory or death. In all that interests the soldier, his widow, or his children they are first and foremost in aid and influence.

George William Andrews, the oldest child of Willis M. and Mariette Andrews, was born in East Otto, Nov. 12, 1832, and was married, April 13, 1856, to Ellen, daughter of Calvin Pratt, an early comer to this town. She was born in East Otto, Sept. 17, 1837, and died June 19, 1878. She was a brave, true woman and a devoted wife and mother. Children: Tully, born Feb. 27, 1857, died Aug. 6, 1857; Annie L., born July 6, 1858, married, Sept. 24, 1884, Oscar Carter, a photographer at Cattaraugus, and died March 27, 1885; Walton C., born Jan. 13, 1861, married, Nov. 29, 1885, Nellie Slawson, was a partner with his uncle, Jerome A. Andrews, in the general merchandise business for several years at Cattaraugus, now with Clayton Rich in the same line at Gardeau, Pa.; and Crissy, born Dec. 25, 1869, married, Jan. 9, 1889, A. S. Courter, a merchant at Otto. The latter has one child, Walton C., born Nov. 29, 1890. George W. Andrews, like his brothers and sisters, obtained the rudiments of an education in the common school. During a part of three terms he was a student in Springville Academy and engaged in teaching in the intervals of farm labor till after his marriage. In 1861 he enlisted more than a score of men for the 9th N. Y. Vol. Cav., in which regiment he served as private until discharged for disability. He then engaged in general merchandizing with his brother Jerome A. (see Salamanca) till 1869, since which time he has been alone. He was postmaster twenty-one years at East Otto, where he has always resided.

Edson Alfred Andrews, youngest son of Willis M. and Mariette Andrews, was born Aug. 8, 1845, at East Otto. He early began the study of law with Rice & Scott at Ellicottville. While yet a student in their office he married Ellen, daughter of Hon. Alanson King, of Ashford, and enlisted as sergeant in the 179th N. Y. Vols. in the same month, April 11, 1864. He served gallantly in front of Petersburg, was taken prisoner at the great mine explosion July 31, 1864, and died of starvation and exposure in the rebel prison pen at Danville, Va., Jan. 11, 1865.

"He heard his country's call and gave his life,
Just wed; from nuptial joys he went where grim
Death grinned o'er Petersburg;—ta'en in that strife
He died—sad prison death—far, far from home, and friends, and wife."

Eva A., youngest daughter of Willis M. and Mariette Andrews, was born at East Otto, Oct. 28, 1857, and removed with her parents to Cattaraugus. Dec. 30, 1871, at Silver Creek, N. Y., she married Olin G. Rich, of Cattaraugus, now senior partner of the firm of Rich & Oakes, real estate dealers of Buffalo, N. Y. They have one daughter, Nellie, born at St. Petersburg, Pa., Aug. 18, 1874. As a child Eva was musical and is now a talented pianist and instructor in piano, organ, and vocal music.

Harvey K. Armstrong was born in Perry, Wyoming county, Feb. 10, 1834. Jedediah Armstrong, his father, was a native of Oneida county, whence he moved to Perry in 1823. In the winter of 1844 he came to East Otto. He located on the farm on which H. K. now lives, where he resided till his death in 1865, aged sixty-eight years. The mother of Harvey K. was a daughter of Amasa Copeland, a soldier of the Revolution who belonged to the detachment that guarded Major Andre and conducted him to the scaffold. She lived with H. K. until her death in 1891, aged ninety-four years. Five others of the Copeland family lived to be from ninety-one to ninety-seven years old. Harvey K. Armstrong married, Sept. 16, 1857, Mary, daughter of Abel Travers, of Chautauqua county. They have two sons and one daughter: J. D., of Salamanca; Rosa (Mrs. M. H. Austin), of Buffalo; and J. Benton.

Clark Barnes was born in Dayton, Feb. 2, 1852, and traces his ancestry back to the heroes of the Revolution. His great-grandfather fell while scaling the walls of Quebec; his grandfather, Tompkins Barnes, came from Maine to Sardinia, Erie county, about 1820; and his father, Surlanty Barnes, born there March 16, 1828, came to East Otto in 1846, and was here married, Dec. 9, 1849, to Caroline, daughter of Joseph Burchard. She was born in East Otto, July 8, 1829, and both are now living on their farm in this town. Children: Lovina A., born Sept. 25, 1850, died Sept. 20, 1863, and Clark. Clark Barnes married, Jan. 19, 1876, Ann L., daughter of James Mercer, who was born in England, Jan. 14, 1807, came to America in 1826, and settled in Oneida county, removing in 1835 to East Otto, where he died Sept. 5, 1880. He married Betsey Holmes, Sept. 23, 1830; children: Mary, born Sept. 8, 1831, married Amos Larabee; James C., born Oct. 22, 1833; Elizabeth, born March 31, 1839, married William Hawkins; Ann L., born March 17, 1845, married Clark Barnes; Martha M., born Sept. 26, 1848, married Chris Ditcher; Philama, born Dec. 4, 1850, married Laban Twitchell; and William A., born Sept. 11, 1855. To Clark and Ann L. Barnes have been born Carl J., June 27, 1877, and Mary, May 21, 1887, now living, and Ina, Feb. 22, 1879, who died at the age of three years. Mr. Barnes is one of East Otto's thorough, reliable farmers. A Republican in politics he served his town as assessor and is now commissioner of highways, having received the largest majority ever given in town for that office in a contested election.

Oscar F. Beach was born in Massachusetts, Sept. 23, 1818, and is a son of Henry Beach, who came to East Otto with his family in 1825 and died here Feb. 7, 1847. Mrs. Beach (Maria Nash) died June 14, 1872. Oscar F. Beach purchased the homestead and made it his life-long home. He married, Oct. 8, 1846, Adaline, daughter of S. B. Hinman. She was born in this county Oct. 8, 1827. Children: Edson F., Cornelia (Mrs. A. B. Bush), and Addie (Mrs. L. H. Northrup). A Republican in politics Mr. Beach represented the town of East Otto on the Board of Supervisors in 1874 and 1875, and in religion was an exemplary member of the Congregational church.

About 1640 four brothers, sons of John Beebe, of Dorset, England, came to America and settled on Long Island. Silas Beebe, a lineal descendant of John and the grandfather of Edwin F., was born on Long Island in 1763. James Beebe, his son, was born March 30, 1804. He married Elizabeth, daughter of James Battell, a soldier of the Revolution who died at the age of eighty-nine years. Edwin F. Beebe, son of James, was born in New Haven, Conn., Oct. 30, 1836, his father at that time being an engineer on a steamboat running from New York to New Haven. The family residence was in Newport, Herkimer county, and it was here that Edwin F. grew to manhood. In 1858 he came to East Otto and Oct. 10, 1860, married Elizabeth, daughter of Darius Pratt. Sept. 2, 1861, he enlisted in Co. B, 9th N. Y. Cav. He was first duty-sergeant and was in the siege of Yorktown, after which he was taken sick with fever and sent to the hospital at Baltimore, whence he was discharged by order of the War Department. In the fall of 1864 he re-enlisted in the same regiment and was assigned to Co. D, was detailed as drill-sergeant at Pleasant Valley remount camp, joined the regiment Dec. 1st, and was in the raids and battles during the winter of 1864-65. In the spring he was sent back to remount camp with crippled horses and was there detailed as provost-sergeant and afterward to assist Quartermaster Bean in selling horses and other supplies. He was mustered out June 1, 1865. In 1876 he was appointed keeper in Auburn prison and held that position three years and four months. He has been justice of the peace in East Otto fourteen years. Children: Luella, born June 20, 1861, died Aug. 12, 1874, and Maggie J., born Oct. 17, 1874, married James Mills in 1888. Mr. Beebe is one of three brothers who served their country during the Civil war. George H. Beebe was in the 65th N. Y. Regiment and Silas T. Beebe was captain in the 152d N. Y. Inf., serving four years.

Levi Bradley was born in Vermont, July 18, 1798, and died Dec. 4, 1877. After his marriage in 1827 he came to East Otto and settled on a farm, and for many years was a respected member of the Baptist church. His second wife was Betsey, daughter of James Morrow, of East Otto, whom he married Aug. 9, 1853, and who survived him.

Joseph Burchard came from Massachusetts about 1821 and died here two or three years later. His son, Joseph Burchard, Jr., was born in Williamstown, Mass., in 1797, and emigrated to this town in 1828, where he died in 1867. His wife, Martha Burchard, was born in Massachusetts in 1793 and died in 1875. To them were born eighteen children, seven of whom lived to maturity: Edwin, Hiram, Mary and Martha (twins), Caroline, Clark, and Adaline; of these Caroline (Mrs. Surlanty Barnes) and Clark are living. Clark Burchard was born in East Otto, Jan. 8, 1833. On the 8th of May, 1859, he married Calista, daughter of Benjamin Milks, an early settler of Otto. Children: Charles E., born Dec. 29, 1860, died May 1, 1863; Mara Eleanor, born April 7, 1862, married Abram Gamp; Edith Sophia (Mrs. Edgar Darling), born Dec. 27, 1864; Grace A., born May 7, 1869, (Mrs. Isaac Gamp); Ida Jean, born May 5, 1874, died Nov. 15, 1886; and Beatrice A. E., born Jan. 14, 1877. Mr. Burchard owns the farm on which Horace Wells, the first settler in East Otto, originally located, his buildings standing in the village. He has been elected to several official positions.

John C. Colvin was born in East Otto, April 11, 1833. He is of New England lineage; his grandfather, Ephraim Colvin, was born in Coventry, R. I., Dec. 14, 1764, and afterward settled in Wardsboro, Vt., where Samuel Colvin, the father of John C., was born Feb. 14, 1794. He was also the father of seven other sons and two daughters. In 1832 Samuel came from Vermont to East Otto and in 1833 settled in the west part of the town on the same farm on which he now resides. Here he spent the remainder of his days, rearing a family of seven sons and five daughters, of whom six sons and one daughter are yet living. About the same time he came three of his brothers and his two sisters also settled in town and another brother in an adjoining town. John C. has always resided on the farm on which he was born. Jan. 1, 1867, he married Sophia, daughter of Ernest Kruse, of Ashford. Children: Emily (Mrs. Heman Lincoln), Nellie (Mrs. George Zeilman), Anna (Mrs. H. Gamp), Cyril, Grace, and Elmer (deceased).

Benjamin Dow emigrated from England about 1635, soon thereafter settling in Stonington, Conn., and here Daniel Dow, his lineal descendant, was born April 22, 1771. His wife, Mrs. Susannah Douglas Dow, was born in Voluntown (now Sterling), Conn., Nov. 23, 1777. The name of Douglas comes down from an early period in Scotch history, when the name and degree of knighthood was conferred upon a cavalier for valor in saving the life of his king. In 1640 Dea. William Douglas came to America and located in New London, Conn., and for two centuries his descendants have been in possession of lands previously owned by him. Daniel Dow and Susannah Douglas were married March 28, 1799, in Voluntown, Conn., and here John Dow was born Feb. 11, 1809. His parents moved to this State in 1815 and the youthful days of Mr. Dow were passed in the counties of Dutchess, Columbia, and Otsego. April 18, 1833, he married Eliza, daughter of Michael Weber, and the same year came to East Otto and settled on a farm. In 1855 he buried his wife and Sept. 11, 1855, married Maria A., daughter of John Dudley. By his first marriage he had three sons and four daughters; Daniel M., William C., James E. and Gertrude M. are living. By his second wife he had one daughter, Belle (Mrs. C. H. Fleckenstein), with whom Mr. Dow now makes his home, his second wife having died Jan. 15, 1886. Mr. Dow was active in military affairs and was successively promoted from sergeant to major. He has held a number of offices of trust and responsibility and for many years has been a deacon in the Congregational church.

Samuel C. Everts came to East Otto in 1834 and for seventeen years was one of the deacons of the Presbyterian church. He was born in Massachusetts, July 5, 1805, and acquired his education at Lenox Academy. In 1851 he moved with his family to Illinois. One of his sons, Louis H., attained the rank of major in the Rebellion and afterward became a prominent publisher.

Cyrus and Jacob Galloway, brothers, came from New Jersey to this State and in 1823 located in Mansfield. Cyrus Galloway came with his wife and four children, to which were subsequently added four more, making in all one daughter and seven sons. Ozias P., next to the youngest of the children, was born Oct. 6, 1829, and obtained his education in the district school. In 1847 he came with his father to East Otto, where he has since resided. His father died in 1851. On the 17th of March, 1859, he married Mary O. White, adopted daughter of Jacob White, of Otto. Martin V. B. Galloway, a younger brother and single gentleman, resides with them. Mr. Galloway has been assessor twelve years. He is engaged in the poultry business.

Jacob Gampp was born in Boston, Erie county, July 9, 1844. His father, George Gampp, emigrated from Germany a short time previous to Jacob's birth, whose schooling was limited to common schools in the English language. The war of the Rebellion opened just as he came of age for military duty, and on the 9th of Aug., 1862, he enlisted in Co. F, 116th N. Y. Vol. Inf., for three years. The regiment was stationed at Baltimore until about December, and while there detachments were sent into Pennsylvania to oppose Gen. Stewart's cavalry raid. In December they were sent to Ship Island in the Gulf of Mexico and landed at New Orleans about the 1st of January, 1863. He was in the battle of Plain Store, May 21, 1863; in the siege of Port Hudson from May 27th to July 8th and under fire forty-seven days; in the battles of Cox's Plantation, July 13, 1863; at Sabine Cross Roads, April 8, 1864; at Pleasant Hill, April 9, and Winchester, Va., Sept. 19, 1864; and at Fisher's Hill, Sept. 22, and Cedar Creek, Oct. 19, 1864. He was discharged at Washington on June 26, 1865. After the war he took up his residence in Ashford and in 1873 commenced the manufacture of cheese in company with A. B. Neff. In 1884 they dissolved partnership and with his brothers Mr. Gampp bought four factories in East Otto, where he has since resided. He has also bought the interests of his brothers, and now in his four factories receives the milk from nearly all the cows in the town. In the fall of 1890 he made the largest cheese on record. It took one day's milk from 3,400 cows, the milk weighing about 40,000 pounds and the cheese 4,500 pounds. The cheese was sold for sixteen cents per pound. Mr. Gampp married, Feb. 6, 1867, Almira, daughter of Joseph Capron, of Ashford. Children: Henry E., Maron F., two daughters.

John Hamele was born at Wendlingen, Wurtemberg, Germany, June 22, 1849. His father, Freidrich, was a farmer; his mother, Katherina, died when he was but a few months old. John lived on the farm and went to school till the age of fourteen and was then apprenticed for three years to learn harness making and upholstering. Completing his apprenticeship he became a journeyman and traveled over a considerable part of Europe. Leaving Wurtemberg he passed through Baden, Alsace, Switzerland, Bavaria, and Austria to Wien, where he remained six months working at his trade. Thence he went to Hungary, but soon turned back into Styria, where he worked for eighteen months. He then passed through the principal towns to Trieste, Carinthia, and the Tyrol, crossing the Alps to Baden and the Rhine province to Frankenthal, through Bavaria and Saxony into Silesia, back to Berlin, through the smaller German States into Switzerland, to Zurich, to Interlachen, and in June, 1870, was called on to enter the army. In his journeying about Europe he visited the interesting and historic cities of Stuttgart, Carlsruhe, Strasburg, Freiburg, Basle, Bern, Lucerne, Zurich, Stein Augsburg, Munich, Linz, Wien, Gratz, Laibach, Trieste, Mannheim, Mayence, Frankfurt-on-Main, Wurzburg, Chemnitz, Dresden, Gorlitz, Leipsic, Magdeburg, Gottingen, Cassel, Coblenz, Bern-Neufchatel, and many smaller towns. He served in the 22d Uhlans through the Franco-German war under Prince Freidrich (the Prussians' Unser Fritz). Upon the expiration of his term of military service he came to America, locating at Springville, N. Y. In March, 1875, he removed to East Otto, where he has since been engaged in the manufacture and sale of harness, etc. Feb. 9, 1875, he married Elizabeth Schingler, who was born in Boston, N. Y., March 25, 1848. Children: Otto, born June 22, 1876; Utmer, April 16, 1878; Amelia, Dec. 16, 1883; and John, July 22, 1885.

Joseph Hammond came into this town about 1823 and settled in the north part on land now known as the Fry farm. His son Samuel was then only thirteen years old; upon attaining his majority he articleed from the land office land about two miles south from Cattaraugus creek, which remained in his possession till his death. He married Mary Folts in 1832 and commenced clearing up his farm, on which William Hammond was born Nov. 7, 1834, and here he enjoyed such school privileges as the early settlements afforded. After attaining the age of twenty-one years he purchased 162 acres of land adjoining his father's farm, and in Jan., 1857, married Mary E., daughter of J. J. Scott, of East Otto. They lived on his farm until 1890, when he moved to East Otto village and since 1892 has kept the only hotel in town. Children: a son and daughter, deceased, Sarah E. (Mrs. Elmer D. Williams), and William S.

Daniel Hawkins was born in 1822 in St. Lawrence county. In 1839 he came to Collins, Erie county, having for two years previous lived in Canada. In 1847 he built a saw-mill in the north part of Otto, where he resided until 1861, when he bought mills in Collins and manufactured lumber, shingles, and cheese boxes until 1871, when he moved to East Otto and built the steam mill in the west part of town known as the swamp mill. In 1876 he built a stave-mill in New Albion and in 1880 he erected the steam mills in East Otto village, putting in a grist-mill in addition to the lumbering business. He has a steam mill in Otto village and also one in the north part of East Otto. Mr. Hawkins has disposed of all his mill property except the last three mentioned, which he still continues to operate, manufacturing in them large quantities of rough and dressed lumber, shingles, and cheese boxes. In 1877 he married Mrs. Orrilla Clark, his present wife; he has by a former wife two daughters and one son (Franklin). Mrs. Hawkins has one son, Roswell Philbrick, of East Otto, by her first husband, Hon. Franklin Philbrick. Mr. Hawkins is recognized as the veteran lumberman of this section of the county.

John Laing was born in Hebron Washington county, Feb. 6, 1812. His father, Adam Laing, was a captain in the War of 1812 and a farmer by occupation. John enjoyed only common school privileges. In Aug., 1841, he purchased a stock of goods and came to East Otto, where he has since continued, being probably the oldest merchant in Cattaraugus county doing business in the same locality. In the fall of 1842 he married Minerva, daughter of Sylvester Pierce, of East Otto. They have two sons and two daughters; they buried one son and one daughter while quite young, and one son, Frank, was fatally injured in a railroad accident, dying aged thirty-four years. Those living are Hon. Solon S., of Salamanca; J. W., in company with his father: Mrs. C. B. Pierce, of Otto; and Mrs. V. A. Ellsworth, of East Otto. Mr. Laing ever since his residence in East Otto has been one of the leading citizens of the town. Politically he has acted with the Democratic party, which has at all times been considerably in the minority, but notwithstanding that fact he has for eight years been elected a member of the Board of Supervisors of Cattaraugus county (three years from Otto and five years from East Otto). Hon. Solon S. Laing was supervisor from East Otto four years.

Stephen Laing was born in Hebron, Washington county, April 5, 1818. He followed farming till 1847, when he came to East Otto and soon after engaged in the mercantile business with his brother John, and for nearly twenty years the brothers carried on a successful trade. In 1866 he sold his interest to his brother and since then has been occupied chiefly in attending to his farming interests. He married, Feb. 1, 1849, Arvilla, daughter of Philip Pratt, who for many years was a prominent dealer in cattle, and who died in Jan., 1893, at the age of eighty-four years. Children: two daughters, deceased; Owen S., of East Otto; Fremont C., of Buffalo; Hon. Philip A., also of Buffalo; Stephen A.; and Dora (Mrs. Marcellus Pierce). Mr. Laing has represented his town three terms on the Board of Supervisors and has been justice of the peace several years. For nearly fifty years the Laings have been a power in East Otto, politically, socially, and executively.

Owen S. Laing was born in East Otto, Jan. 20, 1850. He has been bucolic in his pursuits and stuck to the soil. Dec. 10, 1873, he married Alice R., daughter of Elisha C. Eddy (see Mansfield), who was born Dec. 8, 1851. They have a beautiful home, so situated as to afford a splendid view of the village and valley. Although quite prominent politically as well as socially he has seldom held office, because his party—Democratic—is in a minority.

Fayette C. Larabee was born in East Otto, March 13, 1847. His grandfather, Eleazer Larabee, came from Hamburg, Erie county, about 1823, and with him came also about the same time five sons and four daughters, four of the sons—Miner, Thomas, Nathan, and Ira—being married and bringing their families. Eleazer Larabee was born Aug. 31, 1756, and died Jan. 29, 1837; his wife, Mary (Grant) Larabee, was born Sept. 15, 1767, and died May 28, 1835. Sidney L. Larabee, the youngest of the five sons and father of Fayette C., was born in Oneida county April 2, 1805; his wife, Lorinda (Scovel) Larabee, was born in Orwell, Vt., Feb. 15, 1810; they were married Sept. 16, 1827. Hezekiah Scovel, the father of Mrs. Larabee, had settled in town in 1822. In 1840 Sidney Larabee located on the farm where Fayette C. now lives, which has been in the possession of the family for fifty-three years. Here he resided till his death June 6, 1875. He was the father of six daughters and six sons, of whom but two sons and one daughter are now living. Fayette C. Larabee married, Dec. 21, 1869, Abbie T., daughter of Rev. N. F. Langmade, a Baptist clergyman of this county. They have one son, C. Rossie, born Dec. 22, 1880. After the death of Mr. Larabee's father his mother was cared for by him till her death Oct. 12, 1890. In the earlier history of the town the Larabees composed quite a proportion of the inhabitants; it is said there were at one time about thirty voters by that name, but at the present time Fayette C. and his family are the only representatives of the name left. His only remaining brother, Nathan, is a farmer in Otto and his only sister resides in the west.

Heman P. Lincoln was born in Grafton, Vt., Dec. 20, 1866. His father, George T. Lincoln, was born in the same town June 26, 1836; his mother's maiden name was Clarissa J., daughter of Dudley P. Marsh. When Heman M. was but three months old his parents came to East Otto. His father was a farmer and the son followed the same calling till 1890, when the two engaged in the grocery and provision trade at East Otto village. His father's health soon after failing he purchased the entire business and continues it. May 18, 1892, he married Emily L., daughter of John Colvin, of East Otto.

William Z. Lincoln is a son of L. L. Lincoln and was born in East Otto, May 28, 1838. The father came to this town at an early day and subsequently moved to Hinsdale. William Z. devoted his life to farming, but gave some attention to public affairs, representing his town on the Board of Supervisors in 1886, 1887, and 1888. He married Louisa A., daughter of Alexander Scobey, and both were members of the Baptist church.

Charles H. Mason was born Oct. 27, 1860, in East Otto. His grandfather, Benjamin Mason, and his grandfather, David Tyler Mason, came to the town about 1825. Benjamin Mason died in 1866, aged eighty-four years; David T. Mason died in 1890, aged seventy-eight years. Charles T. Mason, the father of Charles H., was born in East Otto, April 30, 1840, and resided here till 1881, when he removed to Franklinville. While living in East Otto he was for a number of years justice of the peace and was also justice of sessions. Charles H. Mason's boyhood days and school privileges were confined to his native town. He married, Sept. 8, 1881, Bertha G. B., only daughter of A. A. Irish, of Otto. Nov. 20, 1890, she died. Mr. Mason lived three years at Franklinville, moving there in 1883; the rest of his life has been spent in East Otto, where he followed farming till 1892, when he bought the hardware store of F. W. Holmes. Dec. 6, 1892, he married Mary Anwerter of Concord. He has one son, Roscoe Dee, by his first wife.

Girvase A. Matteson was born in Russia, Herkimer county, Dec. 28, 1857. His father, Almirin B. Matteson, came to East Otto in 1867. In addition to other school privileges G. A. attended Griffith Institute two years, taking the first two years a college course in mathematics, intending at that time to follow civil engineering. He commenced teaching school at the age of eighteen and taught ten terms, and has to some extent been engaged in land surveying. He married Nellie M. Perkins, March 3, 1880; she is a daughter of John L. Perkins and granddaughter of John Perkins, who was for about fifty years one of the prominent and wealthy citizens of East Otto. They have two sons. In 1881 Mr. Matteson engaged in the insurance business. He has been town clerk four years and is now serving his second term as supervisor, being elected in 1893 by the unprecedented majority of 112. He is also postmaster of East Otto, which office he held during Harrison's administration.

Cyrus Orr, the father of George F., came from Cortland county in 1833 and located in the northwest part of East Otto, where he resided until his death in 1855. He left four sons and two daughters. George F., the oldest, was born Nov. 13, 1842. His early years were spent on his father's farm with common school privileges and Sept. 2, 1864, he enlisted in Co. A, 9th N. Y. Cav., was mustered in Sept. 9, and remained in remount camp, Pleasant Valley, Md., and on detached service till Dec., when he joined the regiment near Winchester and was with it in all the actions and raids in the Shenandoah valley during the winter of 1864-65. In the Gordonsville raid he received injuries by his horse falling on him. He was mustered out June 1, 1865. Sept. 19, 1866, he married Mary, daughter of George Rush. They have one daughter, Isa (Mrs. E. F. Kruse). For about twenty years Mr. Orr has been engaged in wagon and carriage manufacturing in East Otto village, where he resides. He is drawing a pension for disabilities received in the army. John W. Orr, a brother of George F., was a member of Co. C, 64th N. Y. Vol. Inf., and was killed at Antietam on Sept. 18, 1862.

Everett H. Perkins was born in East Otto, Dec. 6, 1862. His grandfather, John Perkins, was born in Vermont, July 15, 1810, and came to this town in 1833, where for many years he was prominent in all matters relating to its business, social, and moral interests. He was an earnest member of the M. E. church and gave largely of his means to sustain its educational and benevolent interests. He died Oct. 15, 1891. John L. Perkins, the father of Everett H., was the only one of six children who lived to attain their majority; he was born Sept. 23, 1836. He was supervisor two terms (1865-66) and justice of the peace a number of years. His death occurred Nov. 5, 1868. He left a widow and four children, only two of whom are now living: Everett H. and his sister, Mrs. G. A. Matteson. The mother died Nov. 20, 1885. Everett H. Perkins married, Nov. 20, 1884, Mary, daughter of John Zeilman, of Ashford. They have two daughters. Mr. Perkins owns the homestead farm.

Roswell P. Philbrick was born in Persia, Aug. 15, 1864. His father, Hon. Franklin Philbrick, was a prominent citizen of that town, in which he occupied responsible official positions. In 1861 he represented the Second Assembly District of Cattaraugus county in the State Legislature, making an honorable record both for his district and himself; he was supervisor of Dayton in 1854 and 1856. In 1865 he removed to Erie county, where he died when Roswell P. was fourteen months old. The mother of Roswell P. (now Mrs. Daniel Hawkins) gave him, in addition to the school privileges of Angola village, several terms of school in Buffalo and a three months' course in Bryant & Stratton's Business College. Sept. 14, 1885, he married Alice E., daughter of T. M. Dewey, one of the old residents of East Otto, he having previously come to this town, took up his residence in the village, and in 1888 engaged in the furniture and undertaking business. Jan. 10, 1893, his wife died. He is serving his fifth consecutive term as town clerk of East Otto.

Edward Ranke was born in East Otto, Oct. 23, 1864. In 1853 his father, John Ranke, emigrated from Germany; he was a native of Mechenberg, Schwarein, and was born May 12, 1827. About one year after his arrival in America he came to East Otto, where he finally purchased a large farm in the southeast corner of the town. He married, in 1853, Dora, daughter of Henry Wolf, of this town; they have three sons and three daughters, all married but one daughter. Edward Ranke was educated both in German and English schools, and married, Oct. 22, 1888, Augusta, daughter of John Langhaus, of Ellicottville. They have a son and an infant daughter. Mr. Ranke has purchased the homestead, on which he keeps a large dairy.

Hon. Elijah A. Rice was one of the foremost pioneers of Cattaraugus county. Such a mighty influence did he exert on subsequent generations that his name shines with peculiar luster on the pages of history. No citizen ever gave his community a healthier energy, a wider influence, a purer patriotism. A man of good address he was an interesting speaker, a brilliant conversationalist, an active temperance advocate, and a sterling exponent of thorough education. His little locality furnished to the world more eminent men than any similar area of terra firma in the county, and it was due to his own high principles and moral worth that so much was accomplished. Lawyers, governors, physicians, soldiers, and statesmen went forth into the world from his community as shining lights of his great energy and unparalleled influence. Mr. Rice, although a farmer by occupation, devoted much of his life to land surveying, and so great was his skill in this profession that his word was considered as paramount authority. He was the ultimate arbitrator for many years in numerous cases involving boundaries and land controversies, and his decisions were never questioned. As a surveyor he was employed by the Holland Land Company and its successors and by Nicholas Devereux.

Mr. Rice was born in Shaftsbury, Vt., Sept. 20, 1795. Orphaned at an early age he removed to Washington county, N. Y., and lived with a relative until 1809. He then started in life alone. By economy and perseverance he gained a good classical education and mastered land surveying. He volunteered in the War of 1812 and participated in the battle of Plattsburgh, and in 1818 he moved to Herkimer county. In 1819 he removed to Otsego county, where he surveyed and laid out the now celebrated village of Richfield Springs. In 1823 he came to Cattaraugus county on a visit, which he repeated in 1824 and 1825, each time on foot, and in the latter year located a farm in East Otto and erected a log house. In the spring of 1826 he brought his family hither and continued his residence in this county until his removal to Wisconsin in 1854. He subsequently moved to Minnesota. Mr. Rice was school commissioner of Cattaraugus county seven years and represented his district in the State Legislature in 1842 and again in 1846. His four sons were lawyers and attained positions of prominence and responsibility. His only daughter married Rev. William E. Pindar of the M. E. church.

Pearl P. Safford was born in Windham county, Conn., Aug. 25, 1837. His father, Halsey Safford, came to East Otto in 1839 and located on the farm where Pearl P. now resides, and which has always remained in the family. Halsey Safford was the first person to start a cheese factory in East Otto; he erected the large factory at the village about 1867 now belonging to Jacob Gampp, and manufactured cheese several years, but subsequently sold the factory and moved back to his farm. He was supervisor (in 1868) and commissioner of highways. His death occurred in 1885; his wife died in 1890, aged seventy-three years. Children: Pearl P. and John. Pearl P. has since his majority continued to live on the homestead farm. He married, Feb. 16, 1859, Eliza C., daughter of Jedediah Armstrong. Children: a daughter who died in infancy; Addison H., who resides on the homestead; Charles E., a carpenter in East Otto village; and Harry M.

Wilber L. Scott's ancestry dates back to Connecticut, whence his grandfather, Justus Scott, emigrated to Wallingford, Vt., where he was one of the first settlers, and where, in 1799, Justus Scott, the grandfather of W. L., was born. In 1816 Justus Scott came to Springville, Erie county, where Justus J. Scott was born May 14, 1818, being the first child born there. About 1830 he came with his father to East Otto, where he became a prosperous farmer and was for a number of years a magistrate of the town. He died suddenly in Cattaraugus village in 1865. His widow, who is still living, was Catharine, daughter of Dr. Levi Bullis, an early physician in East Otto. Children: Mary E. (Mrs. William Hammond), born in 1838; Marshall E., born May 10, 1842, who served three years in the 9th N. Y. Cav.; and Wilber L., born Dec. 21, 1848. Besides the privileges of the district school W. L. attended several terms at Griffith Institute at Springville, and Feb. 25, 1874, he married Eliza, daughter of John Hawkins. Mr. Scott was a plumber and tinner fifteen years, living part of the time in Salamanca and six years in Cattaraugus village, and about two years ago he bought the homestead on which he was born. Children: Elbert J., born Feb. 16, 1876; Adams H., born June 6, 1877; and Frank W., born March 3, 1880.

Ladore V. and Stillman R. Sikes are sons of Hiram Sikes, who came from Washington, Mass., to East Otto in 1831. The lineage of the family is traced back to Richard Sikes, who was born in London, England, about the year 1600, and who came to America not far from 1640; from him descended in the following order Jonathan Sikes, Jonathan Sikes, Jr., Posthumus Sikes, Stephen Sikes, and Shadrach Sikes, the father of Hiram. Hiram Sikes was born Feb. 12, 1811, in Massachusetts, settled in East Otto in 1831, married Lodema Scovel on March 3, 1836, and resided here till his death Sept. 6, 1886. He had five sons and one daughter; but three of them are living, viz.: Ladore V., born July 8, 1849; Stillman R., born July 8, 1851; and Elton, born March 28, 1854. Ladore V. Sikes married, Jan. 7, 1875, Emily Edmunds, who died June 3, 1876; on the 2d day of April, 1878, he married Rhoda J. Torrance, his present wife. By his first marriage he has one son, Ceylon; by his second wife he has two sons, John and Lester, and one daughter, Lodema. He resides about three miles southeast of East Otto village, where he has a saw-mill. Stillman R. Sikes married Frances A., daughter of T. Frank Brown, March 3, 1875. They have one son, Ferry, and one daughter. Mr. Sikes resides in East Otto village.

Nathan J. Slocum was born in Herkimer county April 13, 1834. In 1843 his father, John Slocum, came to East Otto and in 1844 settled on a farm in the northwest part of the town, which has remained in possession of the family to the present time. He had seven daughters and six sons, of whom six daughters and five sons are living. Mr. Slocum died Sept. 16, 1877; his wife survives him. In Aug., 1861, Nathan J. Slocum enlisted in Co. C, 64th N. Y. Vol. Inf., for three years, and on the 23d of Sept. was mustered in at Elmira. He was at the siege of Yorktown; was taken sick on the march from Williamsburg towards Richmond, and did not participate in the battle of Fair Oaks; was in the Seven Days' Fight, Second Bull Run, South Mountain, and Antietam, previous to which he had been detailed to General Richardson's headquarters as cook. General Richardson being killed at Antietam he again joined the regiment and was in the battles of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, the Wilderness, and to Petersburg, where he was discharged Sept. 23, 1864. After the battle of Fair Oaks, while on picket duty, his left cheek was grazed by a bullet from a rebel sharpshooter. He married, Sept. 28, 1865, Emma E., daughter of James Wickham, of East Otto; children: Nellie R. (Mrs. Albert Pratt), of Dunkirk, and William J., who married Helen M., daughter of John Harrison.

Alexander Tefft, son of Oliver and Deborah (Dewey) Tefft, was born in Rhode Island, July 19, 1784, and came to East Otto in 1828, dying here in 1868. He was a farmer and as well a Freewill Baptist preacher; his wife was Deborah, daughter of Nathaniel and Deborah (Niles) Niles, and their children were Nathaniel Niles, Alexander, Samuel, Deborah A., Dewey, Polly, Oliver D., and Olive. The latter married Solomon Steele and has been a preacher in the Free Methodist church for several years, ministering to congregations of that denomination in a number of towns in Cattaraugus county. Dewey Tefft was a Free Methodist minister for twenty years and died in this town January 8, 1892. Nathaniel Niles Tefft was born Aug. 12, 1814, and acquired considerable fame as a surveyor. He served East Otto as supervisor in 1867 and 1872. Alexander Tefft held several offices of trust, and besides was a writer of no mean ability; his productions comprised both poetry and prose.

Harvey Tuthill traces his lineage back several generations. His great-grandfather, John Tuthill, was born on Long Island, Sept. 8, 1742; his grandfather, Samuel Tuthill, was born May 17, 1768; and his father, Samuel Tuthill, Jr., was born in Windham county, Vt., May 29, 1797. He married, Oct. 17, 1822, Sarah Guernsey, a descendant of the ancient titled Guernsey families of England. Previous to his marriage Mr. Tuthill had been to East Otto, selected a farm, and cleared a small piece of land; after his marriage he, with his wife, started for their wilderness home, where they arrived Jan. 23, 1823. About two years later he located on the farm now owned by Harvey Tuthill, where he resided till his death. Mr. Tuthill was for many years a prominent citizen of the town, holding several offices of trust and responsibility. He and his wife were constituent members of the Baptist church, of which he was chosen one of its first deacons in 1825. He left a family of two sons and two daughters. Col. Henry G. Tuthill raised a company in Nunda in 1861, joined the 104th N. Y. Vol. Inf., and was a brave and efficient officer through the war. He was wounded at Antietam, and at Gettysburg was shot through the groin and still carries the ball in his body. He is an architect in Corning. Miss Anna Tuthill is a graduate of the Art Department of Cooper Union, New York city. She taught that branch of education four years in Freehold University, New Jersey, was engaged in the same department three years in Deland University in Deland, Fla., and is now teaching in McFerrin College in Martin, Tenn. She was in Charleston, S. C., when Fort Sumter was bombarded. Harvey Tuthill was born in East Otto, Oct. 27, 1835, on the farm on which he now lives, and where he has always made his home. He obtained his education in the district school and Sept. 4, 1881, married Jennie E. Petty, of Burlington, Vt., daughter of Rev. McKendree Petty, A.M., a clergyman of the M. E. church and professor of mathematics and natural history in Vermont University. Mr. Tuthill is a leading member of the Baptist church, having been deacon nineteen years, and has been sixteen years justice of the peace.

Rodney C. Utley was born in Pawlet, Vt., July 22, 1823. He is the youngest son of Capt. Leonard Utley, who came to East Otto in 1835 with his family of four sons and three daughters and settled on a farm in the north part of the town, afterward owned by his son, Leonard S. Utley. He died in 1862. There are now living of the family the three daughters and Rodney C. The latter married, April 23, 1848, Malvina, daughter of James L. Brown, who died March 14, 1867. He married, second, Electa A., daughter of Philo Brooks, of Otto, Feb. 3, 1871. By his first marriage he had two daughters and one son; by his second wife he has three sons and one daughter.

Nicholas Whitmeyer was born in France, July 4, 1844, and in 1856, in company with an older brother and two sisters, he came to America and settled in Boston, Erie county. In 1859 he came to Otto, where he worked till the summer of 1861, and on the 16th of Aug. enlisted in Co. C, 64th N. Y. Vol. Inf., for three years. He was in the battle of Fair Oaks and in the Seven Days' Fight, where he was prostrated by sun-stroke and sent to the hospital. After partially recovering he was detailed to guard duty and stationed on Governor Wise's farm. He joined his regiment in June, 1863, was in the battles of Gettysburg, the Wilderness, and Spotsylvania, where on May 12, 1864, he received a bayonet wound in his arm and while in the hospital was taken prisoner the next morning by the Black Horse Cavalry, but escaped during the night of the 13th and lay in hiding all the 14th, partly in the water of the North Anna river. He crossed the river just before night, but was discovered and shot at a number of times, escaped, and reached the Union lines about two o'clock next morning. He was again sent to the hospital and rejoined his regiment at Cold Harbor, was in the siege of Petersburg, and was present at the surrender of General Lee, having re-enlisted in the winter of 1863-64. He was mustered out at Elmira in July, 1865. In July, 1866, he married Catharine, daughter of John Kern, of Eden, Erie county; they lived in Erie county ten years and in the town of Otto thirteen years, and since 1888 have resided in East Otto village, where he carries on a meat market. They have three daughters and three sons living and a son and a daughter deceased.

Lyman Williams came from Vermont to East Otto about 1830, at which time his son, Solomon Williams, the father of Dr. Elmer D., was about two years old. He afterward located permanently in Mansfield, where he was for many years a prominent citizen and substantial farmer, and where he resided till his death. Solomon Williams passed nearly all of his active life in Mansfield and died in 1887. His son, Dr. Elmer D. Williams, is the oldest of one brother and two sisters. See Medical chapter, page 124.

CHAPTER XXV.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF ELKO.

ELKO is the youngest town in Cattaraugus county. It was formed from the eastern portion of South Valley on November 26, 1890, and comprises nearly all of township one of range eight of the Holland survey. It is bounded on the south by Pennsylvania, on the west by South Valley, on the north by Cold Spring, and on the east by Red House, and contains an area of 14,393 acres. The surface is similar to all this part of Cattaraugus county—broken into high hills and deep valleys with the best portion within the lines of the reservation, which takes off a large tract in the north and west-central parts, through which runs the Allegheny river. The whole was originally densely covered with a fine growth of pine and hemlock, but all of the former and most of the latter have been cut off and converted into lumber, transforming the valleys into excellent farming land, which is generally well cultivated and yields abundantly all kinds of agricultural products. Lumbering until recently formed the chief occupation of the people. Even now it is carried on to a considerable extent, as some valuable timber still remains on the hills. Until the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad was constructed the main outlet for shipping was the Allegheny river.

The name Elko was suggested by F. M. Blackwell, an agent of the Amasa Stone estate. He was a shrewd man and respected for many excellent qualities. He asserted that only one town of the name (in Montana) existed in the United States. His assertion proved correct and the name was adopted.

The Allegheny river enters the town near the center of its north line, and flowing southerly and southwesterly passes into South Valley about the center of the western edge of Elko. It passes through the middle of the Indian reservation, and receives as tributaries on the east Pine creek, Tunesassa or Quaker run, and Wolf run. On the west Hotchkiss run, so named from the Hotchkiss family, has almost its entire course in this town, emptying into the Allegheny, however, a few rods below where the river enters South Valley. All of these streams formerly afforded good water-power, which was extensively employed in operating saw-mills, but these privileges have been abandoned and steam substituted. They also once furnished excellent sport for the fisherman and the hunter. Small game of both kinds still abound in limited quantities, a few of the common varieties of fish and foxes, partridges, and rabbits being quite plentiful.

Quaker run is so called from the fact that members of the Philadelphia Society of Quakers were the first settlers upon its banks, locating near its confluence with the Allegheny in 1798. Along this stream lies the most available farming land in the town. The Indian name is Tunesassa or Tunesassah. Wolf run, in the southern part of the town, derives its name from a traditionary incident of early days. A party of surveyors in the employ of the Holland Land Company was one day performing some work in this valley when their dogs ran a wolf into a hollow log. The log was chopped open and the mother and four or five cubs taken out. The stream and valley ever afterward went by the name of Wolf run.

In 1798 the Quaker missionaries found the Indian village of Genesinguhta on the Allegheny in Elko at what is now "Old Town." It was doubtless here, too, that the Indians for many years followed the "practice of collecting around a log about thirty feet long, worked into a resemblance of the human form, to which they performed a kind of worship. The son of Cornplanter subsequently persuaded them to throw it into the river."

The first settlers in Elko, and the first also in Cattaraugus county, were three Quakers who established an Indian mission on the banks of the Allegheny, on the reservation, in May, 1798. This settlement was made at Old Town. These pioneers were Joel Swayne, Halliday Jackson, and Henry Simmons. In 1803 they removed to a lot of 692 acres on the east side of the Allegheny, two miles above their first location, which they had purchased of the Holland Land Company for the purpose of more permanently establishing their mission. Their sole purpose in coming to this wild country was to labor for the amelioration of the spiritual and temporal condition of the Indians. Their efforts proved fairly successful and upon the purchase of the Friends' tract, as above mentioned, the permanency of their settlement became assured. Their land has been reduced by subsequent sales to about 464 acres, which has become widely known as the Quaker Mission Farm. Here the Quakers, in 1804, built a saw-mill and grist-mill, which were set in motion in the spring of 1805. An orchard of the Pennock variety was set out and other improvements were made.

When the Quakers sought to make their first settlement in this town they of course chose a desirable location on the most thickly settled portion of the reservation—at Old Town—and their only purpose was to give the natives practical instruction in agriculture and the arts of civilized life. The Indians, however, could not understand this broad charity and believed that some day, if the Friends were permitted to go on as they had begun, they would lay claim to the Indian lands. Jealous of their interests, which had but recently been bestowed upon them, the Indians were loth to accept the friendly offices of the missionaries and refused to give them that support and co-operation which was necessary to insure the success of the Christianizing project. The Friends therefore determined to secure lands outside of the reservation on which to carry out their plans. The previously mentioned tract was accordingly bought, which up to 1818 was the only land in town that did not belong to the Holland Land Company, and for years afterward was the only improved farm in the southwest part of the county. An extended sketch of the Friends' settlement, their mission, and their present institution appears in Chapter V.

Elzi Flagg was the first settler on Quaker run above the Quaker settlement. In 1831 he pitched a camp on Wolf run and engaged in shingle making. Charles Smith was also there in business. In 1835 Flagg removed to 626 acres on Quaker run, on which he erected suitable frame buildings the following year. He finally owned by subsequent purchases 3,000 acres of land in this locality, which he sold off in small pieces to later comers. Mr. Flagg resided here until his death on August 16, 1884. He built several saw-mills and manufactured large quantities of lumber. Several representatives of the Flagg family now reside in the town.

Norman Brown located on lot 10 in 1845, selling, however, a few years later to Corydon Holmes. In 1849 Zabin Wright settled also on this lot. Leonard Barton, whose descendants are today among the town's leading citizens, came from Chautauqua county in 1838 and settled first on lot 4 and later on lot 2, where he reared eight children. He was an extensive lumberman and an influential man. He built the first steam saw-mill on Wolf run about 1859.

Jesse Hotchkiss was a very early settler on the stream to which his name has since been applied, on the west side of the river. Several descendants still reside in the vicinity. A Mr. Bovee was a tavern keeper at Kent's Corners before 1830. In 1832 William Earl became the landlord there. The place probably took its name from B. Kent, a later hotel keeper.

At Wolf Run Miss Amanda Caswell was doubtless the first teacher and the first school was kept for two or three years in an old blacksmith shop built by Gideon Marsh. Nellie Saunders and Mattie Flagg were also early instructors. The first school on Quaker run was taught in a log school house on lot 10. A frame structure was subsequently erected and burned and the present building erected on its site. In 1892 the population of Elko was 492. The town has three school districts in which schools are taught by three teachers and attended by seventy-eight scholars, at an expense of $774.93. The property taxable for school purposes is assessed at $107,186 and the school buildings and sites are valued at $1,525. The Indians have a school house at Old Town and another at Quaker Bridge, in both of which instruction is imparted by white teachers.

The first town meeting was held February 24, 1891, and these officers were elected: Supervisor, Austin J. Morrison; town clerk, D. A. Sullivan; justices of the peace, David Flagg, Jr., H. A. Carnahan, Peter Durning, Harry Johnson; assessors, T. A. Hall, F. M. Barton, Asa Flagg; commissioner of highways, J. W. Campbell; overseer of the poor, George Brown; collector, Deloss Carnahan; inspectors of election, J. W. Potter, M. D. Holt; constables, J. A. Flagg, Deloss Carnahan, Henry French, R. W. Potter; game constable, M. D. Holt; excise commissioners, Zabin Wright, Myron Carnahan, E. A. Barton. Since the town's organization its principal officers have been as follows: Supervisor, Austin J. Morrison, 1891-93. Town clerks, D. A. Sullivan, 1891; Wayne Temple, 1892-93. Justices of the peace, 1891, David Flagg, Jr., H. A. Carnahan, P. Durning, H. Johnson; 1892, H. Johnson; 1893, H. A. Carnahan.

In early days water was generally used as a motive power, but what few mills remain, the last existing evidences of a once important industry, are operated by steam. The first saw-mills erected in this vicinity were built and operated through the enterprise of the Quakers. In Elko they placed a saw-mill in operation on Quaker run in 1805. This was primarily intended for the Indians, but it did work for the whites on the same terms as other mills. A small tannery was operated here soon after the mills were built, but was discontinued before 1830. Elzi Flagg put up a saw-mill on lot 10, on Quaker run, in 1838 and in 1845 another mill below the same dam, both of which he operated several years. Leonard Barton was an early millowner on this stream, erecting a saw-mill in 1841, and in 1870 another lumberman built a steam mill a short distance above. Elzi Flagg, in 1857, put up a steam mill on lot 4, on which he later owned several shingle-mills. Robert Kane built a steam saw-mill in this locality in 1873, and on lots 11 and 25 Charles Fuller and Abbott & Co. had steam mills after 1858, which were afterward removed. Other mill-owners on Quaker run have been A. S. Prather and M. D. Holt. On Wolf run Uriah Wellman and Gideon Marsh built a saw-mill about 1845 and still later a shingle-mill near by. Bemis & Ostrander afterward had a steam mill on this site. Other mills on this stream were owned and operated by L. Barton, O. P. Nichols, Gideon Caskey, Lewis Bishop, Charles Fuller & Son, Walter L. Curtis, William Crater, Deloss Carnahan, and George Carnahan. Michael Quinn now operates a large steam mill at the mouth of Pine creek; A. S. Prather, M. D. Holt, and Robert Kane have saw-mills on Quaker run; J. M. Bemis & Co. conduct a large steam saw-mill near the mouth of Wolf run; and Michael Quinn has a small mill near Hotchkiss run.

In 1805 the Quakers built and put in operation a grist-mill near their present school, and this was used extensively by early settlers for miles around. Like the saw-mill it was erected for the Indians, but also ground corn and feed for the whites.

The highways in Elko are kept in fair condition. The first one was that put through on the reservation, on the west side of the Allegheny, by the State, which for many years made additional appropriations to keep it in repair. Other roads have been laid out as the settlement demanded them.

The Friends early constructed and until 1867 kept in repair a ferry near the present bridge. It was given to the Indians to work for the tolls arising therefrom. At that date a frame bridge was erected by a tax of forty cents an acre on the lands lying east of the river and an appropriation by the State of $1,000. Leonard Barton was appointed commissioner to build the bridge. In 1874 the approaches were damaged by a flood and the State made an additional appropriation of $1,500 to repair them. Since then the structure has received repairs each year; in 1892 about $1,000 was laid out for this purpose, leaving it now in excellent condition. It is nearly 600 feet long and substantially anchored on a number of stone piers.

Until about 1860 the only method of communication with the outside world was by means of water or stage. At that time and until 1882 the nearest railroad station was Steamburg. In 1882 the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad was constructed along the east bank of the Allegheny river on the reservation, giving the town two stations, Quaker Bridge and Wolf Run, the postoffice designations being respectively Tunesassa and Elko.

The first religious services in the town were conducted by the Quakers, but no regular church for their worship has ever been built. Their simple methods of religion have been almost continuously observed, however, from their early settlement to the present day. The pioneer missionary of the Presbyterian faith was Rev. William Hall, who for many years did excellent service in the cause of Christianity and civilization among the Indians. A mission was established on the reservation at Old Town and a good house of worship erected, but in recent years this has been allowed to go down. In other portions of the town religious services have been held occasionally in school houses or private dwellings, principally by Methodist preachers. In Quaker run a society of the United Brethren in Christ was organized some years since by Rev. David Abbey, of Conewango. The membership has always been small. Rev. Mr. Abbey presided over the society about two years, when Rev. J. W. Andrews took charge. Succeeding him was Rev.

Thomas Butterfield. The society was without a pastor for some time, and finally Rev. W. J. Markham, the present incumbent, was installed. Services are held every two weeks in the school house. Preaching by ministers of other denominations is occasionally had in this locality. A Sunday school is held during most of the year.

The first religious exercises in Wolf run were held by the Methodists, the first class being organized in 1888 by Rev. W. M. Branson. A quarterly meeting was held in 1884 by Rev. Mr. Borland, of Randolph. Mr. Branson died in January, 1890. The next revival was started in the spring of 1892 by William Backus, of Cold Spring, who organized a Wesleyan Methodist society.

The early settlers of Elko first buried their dead on their own land or in cemeteries of neighboring and older towns. The Friends established a burial ground near their present institution that was generally used for many years. A few removals were made and it was finally levelled off and converted into the present play-ground. A new plat was set off and opened near by in 1889, on the Quaker farm. This is neatly fenced and well cared for. Leonard Barton had a private burial ground on his farm that was used by the family and neighbors until about 1878. The Indians have a cemetery at Old Town which is still used. It is said to be the oldest burial place in the county.

Quaker Bridge (Tunasassa postoffice) is a small but brisk business hamlet and station in the north part of the town, on the Indian reservation, on the Allegheny river, and on the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad. It is an important shipping point for lumber. The place contains a postoffice, express and telegraph offices, two lumber yards, a general store, shops, etc., and about twenty dwellings. The postoffice was established in January, 1883, with William Dillon, postmaster, whose successors were James A. Flagg, Mrs. Sarah Holt, and the present one, Victor F. Oburg, who is also station agent.

Wolf Run (Elko postoffice) is a station on the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad at the confluence of the stream known as Wolf run with the Allegheny. The postoffice was established June 1, 1887, with the present postmaster, Alfred A. Chandler, in charge. The village has one store, a blacksmith shop, a steam saw-mill, a telegraph office, and a dozen dwellings.

Leonard Barton came to Elko in 1838 and settled on lot 2, where he died July 13, 1891. His wife, Eveline Fargo, of Gerry, Chautauqua county, is still living; their children were James S., of Quaker Bridge; Elizabeth D. (Mrs. Gideon Caskey), of Frewsburg, Chautauqua county; Frank M.; Charles M., of Randolph; Edgar A., of Elko; Ella V. (Mrs. Charles Morrison), of Elko; Clarinda and Celestia (deceased); La Fayette L., of Tennessee; and Loretta E. (Mrs. Frank Hill), of Bradford, Pa. Frank M. Barton has served as highway commissioner, school trustee, and assessor, as well as in other capacities of responsibility. He married Emily M., daughter of George A. Williams, of Cold Spring. They have an adopted son, Leo D. The Barton family were early and have always been prominent, public spirited residents of Elko. The father of Leonard Barton, James, was an early settler, as were also his sons Chester, Smith, Asher, Joseph, Merrills, Sylvester, and Walter.

Manley D. Holt came to Elko from Warren county, Pa., about 1873. He has always been engaged in the lumber business. Since residing in this town he has manufactured and shipped large quantities, owning both saw and shingle-mills of good capacity. Although never seeking office, in fact always declining it, he has been elected to several local positions of importance, which he filled with credit. He resides at Quaker Bridge.

Ephraim Morrison was one of the first settlers in South Valley where the village of Onoville now stands. He was the first innkeeper there and for some time was a justice of the peace. In politic he was a Whig. He died in Iowa. His children were Hiram, Benjamin, William (deceased), Harriet (Mrs. John Brown, deceased), Rosina (Mrs. Elijah Bradley), Ophelia (Mrs. Asa Wright), John, Reuben, and Lafayette. Benjamin and the last two mentioned reside in Elko. Benjamin Morrison married a daughter of Zabin Wright, a long-time resident of Quaker run, in which locality Mr. Morrison has lived since 1872.

CHAPTER XXVI.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF ELLICOTTVILLE.

ELLICOTTVILLE, whose southwest corner lies near the geographical center of the county, was formed from Ischua by an act of the Legislature on April 13, 1820. Ashford was formed from its territory in 1824 and a small part of East Otto was taken off in 1858. The town embraces all of township four and a part of township five of the sixth range of the Holland Land Company's survey and contains an area of 28,459 acres. The surface consists of hilly upland, broken by the deep and narrow ravines of the streams, the largest of which is Great Valley creek, which enters the town from Ashford about a mile west from the northeast corner of Ellicottville and flows in a southerly direction to Ashford Junction, thence in a southwesterly course to the village of Ellicottville, where it turns at nearly a right angle to the southeast and flows into Great Valley. This stream and its tributaries, the largest of which is Beaver Meadow creek in the northern part, drains nearly all of the township. The soil in the valleys is a gravelly loam and is very fertile. On the hills the loam is mixed with clay and produces good crops of hay and pasturage.

The Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad has a station at Ashford Junction and another at the village of Ellicottville. The Rochester branch and the Buffalo branch unite at the first named station, which affords the people of the town adequate facilities for travel and for reaching the markets in Buffalo and Rochester.

Those who first took contracts for land in Ellicottville were Rickertson

Burlingame, Grove Hurlburt, Orrin Pitcher, Archelaus Brown, and Orrin Brown. The honor of making the first settlement in town is about equally divided between Grove Hurlburt and Orrin Pitcher. Grove Hurlburt built the first house in the town, of logs, in the fall of 1815, and Mr. Pitcher occupied it with his family until March, 1816. In the meantime he erected a similar structure for himself on the site occupied by the Whitney House. He remained in Ellicottville until 1843, when he removed with his family, except the venerable David Pitcher, who remained and is still a citizen of the town. In the fall of 1816 Grove Hurlburt built the first-framed barn and the same year planted the first orchard. In 1816 and 1817 there was quite an addition to the settlement.

The organization of the county and the designation of Ellicottville as the county seat occurred March 28, 1817. On the first Tuesday in July, 1817, the first Court of Common Pleas and General Sessions convened at the house of William Baker in Olean. The courts for the county in November and February following were held at the same place. Afterward they were held at the dwelling of Baker Leonard in Ellicottville until the county buildings were completed in 1820, and justice was dispensed there until 1868, when Little Valley became the county seat. The removal of the courts from Olean to Ellicottville so chagrined the people of the village of "Natural Advantages" that several of them, to vent their spleen, brought tents and provisions with them and resorted to the impotent means of revenge by camping out, determined that Ellicottville should be none the richer for their presence. The cool nights and inconvenience of "tenting" eventually cooled their anger. The first jail limits were surveyed and mapped by R. Burlingame in June, 1820, and contained only ninety-six acres. The next year the limits were increased to 438 acres and in 1824 enlarged to 500.

In 1817 Baker Leonard came to Ellicottville from Batavia and erected for the Holland Land Company for a tavern the building now the fine residence of Mrs. J. King Skinner. The structure cost so much when completed that the company refused to accept it. Mr. Leonard moved into it and opened it as a public house. He also used a portion of it for a store, the first one opened in the village. Mr. Leonard died on the 17th of April, 1821. Later his clerk, Henry Saxton, married his widow. The Holland Land Company, by their agent, David Goodwin, opened an office here in 1818.

The Ellicottville postoffice was established in 1822 with John A. Bryan as the first postmaster. The mail at first was carried on horseback from Ellicottville to Centerville. Soon afterward a mail route was established from Buffalo to Olean and "Uncle" Peter Sampson first carried the mail on horseback, then by stage, and also conducted a private express business.

The Cattaraugus County Mutual Insurance Company was incorporated March 17, 1837, and was organized by the election of officers on June 1st following: Benjamin Chamberlain, president; Bethuel McCoy, vice-president;

Adam Charlton, secretary; Israel Day, general agent. The company continued in business until 1857.

Eleazar Harmon, Esq., conducted a private banking business about three years from 1853. January 1, 1858, J. King Skinner opened a bank of discount which he conducted until 1878. In 1863 an application was made to the State Legislature for a charter for a bank to be known as the Cattaraugus County Bank of Ellicottville, the capital stock to be $200,000; again in 1875 a petition was made for a similar banking institution with a capital of $55,000, but charters were refused in both instances.

The first school was taught in the house of Orrin Pitcher in the summer of 1818 by Eunice Carpenter. The people residing on Bryant hill led the town by building the first school house in 1820. Rev. John Spencer, sent out by the Congregational Missionary Society, preached the first sermon in the town at the house of Orrin Pitcher in 1818. Dr. James Trowbridge, who came into the town in 1816, was the first physician. Orrin Pitcher built the first saw-mill in 1821 and Ozro Thomas and Deacon Gardner erected the first grist-mill in 1832. The same year Artemas Blair built the first tannery in town. The Baptist church on Bryant hill was organized August 21, 1824, being the first church organized in town. The first white male child born in Ellicottville was Orlando, son of Orrin Pitcher, his birth occurring in June, 1816; the first white female child was Miranda, daughter of Grove Hurlburt, born October 7, 1818. The first marriage occurred in 1820, the parties interested being John A. Bryan and Eliza Dixon. Mr. Bryan was the first lawyer. The first adult person who died in Ellicottville was Baker Leonard, April 17, 1821; the first death was that of an infant of H. B. Hayes.

Ellicottville from its first settlement had the advantages of being the county seat, the location of the Holland Land Company's office, and later the land offices of its successors. David Goodwin, the first local agent of the Holland Company, came in 1818 from Batavia and opened the land office for business, which had been built for this purpose by Baker Leonard the year before. He had assisted Joseph Ellicott as a surveyor and clerk and had married his niece. In 1822 he was succeeded by Staley N. Clarke, who was one of the most popular and beloved men that ever lived in Cattaraugus county. Moses Beecher, who had been in the land office at Batavia from 1814 to 1827, then came to Ellicottville to assist Mr. Clarke. His sketch appears on p. 296.

The Devereux Land Company, the most extensive land purchaser who succeeded the Holland Company, appointed Asher Tyler agent, and he came to Ellicottville in 1836, where he remained until about 1846. Mr. Tyler was elected to the Twenty-eighth Congress from this district and served in the sessions of 1843 and 1845. He removed to Elmira, where he died in 1875. Mr. Tyler was succeeded in the land office by John C. Devereux when that company made the division of its lands in 1843. He was the son of Nicholas Devereux and came to Ellicottville with his family, had charge of his father's land interest, and remained a worthy citizen until some time in 1866, when he returned to Utica. He was a member of the State Board of Charities.

In 1838 Theodore Smith came to Ellicottville to fill a position in the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company's land office, a position tendered him by Hon. Staley N. Clarke. This company also was a successor to a portion of the lands of the Holland Company. Mr. Smith was with Mr. Clarke until 1843 and later he was a private banker with J. R. Colman. In 1847 they purchased 75,000 acres of land (a portion of the Holland purchase) and continued private banking and the sale of their land until 1852, when they divided the remaining company property.

J. R. Colman, who came to Ellicottville in 1829, was a merchant's clerk until 1832 and a merchant until 1843, when he became the land agent of several parties that had in part composed the Devereux Company and owned quite large tracts of land in the counties of Cattaraugus, Allegany, and Wyoming. In 1847, with Theodore Smith, he purchased 75,000 acres of these lands, which he and his partners at once proceeded to sell out on contract in small parcels for homes for farmers. In 1852 the partnership of Colman & Smith was closed, with an amicable settlement by the parties interested, and in the fall of 1854 Mr. Colman removed to Dunkirk, where he established a bank which in 1866 became the Lake Shore Banking Company with Mr. Colman its president. Mr. Colman died in Dunkirk. He was treasurer of Cattaraugus county in 1846 and 1847.

William Samuel Johnson, another land proprietor, came to Ellicottville and opened his land office in 1846. His family came in 1851 and remained until 1858. Mr. Johnson continued his residence in Ellicottville with his son, Gen. Samuel William Johnson, until 1862. He was admitted to the bar in 1820, was a law partner of Hon. Ogden Edwards, was afterward a partner of Judge William Kent, of New York, son of Chancellor Kent, and was a member of the State Senate in 1848-49.

The fertile valleys had more attractions for the pioneer farmers than the rugged hills excepting the neighborhood of Bryant hill, which was very early settled. Biographical sketches of the solid yeomanry who came here empty handed, removed the giant forests, made black-salts, fared hard but courageously toiled on, and made homes and built school houses and churches will be found on subsequent pages.

Soon after the completion of the Erie railway John C. Devereux offered to the Irish laborers who had been employed in the construction of the railroad inducements to settle on his wild lands on the hills of Ellicottville. They came in numbers. Mr. Devereux kept every promise. The Irish pioneers of the hills fell to work with a will, and have converted their "wild-wood" into excellent dairy farms, have become well-to-do-farmers, and have added several hundred thousand dollars to the value of the town.

Ellicottville, including Ashford, when formed from Ischua in 1820, took the name of its village, which had been named in honor of Joseph Ellicott, agent of the Holland Land Company at Batavia. The town was organized at its first town meeting held at the house of Baker Leonard on the second Tuesday in March, 1821, when the following officers were elected, David Goodwin presiding: Supervisor, James Reynolds; town clerk, John W. Staunton; commissioners of common schools, John W. Fitch, Daniel Thomas, and Artemas Blair; inspectors of schools, David Goodwin, John W. Staunton, and John A. Bryan. The following list comprises the supervisors, town clerks, and justices of the peace from 1821 to the present time:

Supervisors.—James Reynolds, 1821; John W. Staunton, 1822, 1824-25, 1839; David Gregory, 1823; Abraham Searl, 1826, 1832-44; Lothrop Vinton, 1827, 1829-31, 1836-38, 1841-42; Henry Saxton, 1828; Artemas Blair, 1835; Thomas S. Huntley, 1840; Chauncey J. Fox, 1843; Jonathan B. Staunton, 1844, 1847, 1849; Alonzo A. Gregory, 1845-46, 1850; George W. Moore, 1848; Stephen McCoy, 1851-52; Samuel P. Arnold, 1853-54; Sylvenus Vedder, 1855; Addison G. Rice, 1856-59, 1861, 1867; Daniel T. Dickens, n. 1860, 1862; Samuel William Johnson, 1863-65; John C. Devereux, 1866; Benjamin F. Boyce, 1868; Robert H. Shankland, 1869-70; Timothy Walsh, 1871-72; Daniel E. Bartlett, 1873; William Manley, 1874-75; Edwin D. Northrup, 1876-81; William G. Laidlaw, 1882; James G. McMahon, 1883-88, 1890; Matthew W. Kiernan, 1889; Henry Somerville, 1890-93.

Town Clerks.—John W. Staunton, 1821; David Gregory, 1822, 1824; Charles Boss, 1823; Samuel Davis, 1825; James J. Adkins, 1826; Artemas Blair, 1827-33; Daniel I. Huntley, 1834-36; Marcus H. Johnson, 1837; Harlan Colman, 1838-39; Joseph Colman, 1840; Thomas Kibbe, 1841-42; Alonzo A. Gregory, 1843-44; Albert W. Kimball, 1845-46; Archibald McKallon, 1847, 1850; Horace Arnold, 1848-49; Lewis L. Colman, 1851-52; Edwin F. Vinton, 1853; Stoll J. Anthony, 1854; George W. Baillett, 1855; William W. Haines, 1856-57; Stephen W. McCoy, 1858; John K. Parker, 1859-61; Silas A. Lamb, 1862-63; Timothy Walsh, 1864, 1866, 1868; L. A. Hood, 1865; Stephen A. Harrington, 1867; Alonzo L. Razez, 1869-70, 1872-73; William R. Rider, 1871; J. R. Pettit, 1874; Thomas R. Aldrich, 1875; L. M. McCoy, 1876-77, 1885; William D. Huntley, 1878; Frank E. Redfield, 1849, 1882-83; Edwin S. The soil is much better adapted for producing good crops of hay and for grazing than for grain culture. Hence the farmers of the town forward their own interests by keeping as many cows as their farms will support. Cheese making is the leading industry. Butter is also produced in considerable quantities. Nearly all the milk is carried to the cheese factories and there manufactured by expert cheese makers for market. Apples of good quality are successfully grown, and maple sugar is made in most parts of the town.

August 22, 1867, Addison G. Rice, H. S. Springer, A. A. Walker, D. E. Blair, Allen D. Scott, Timothy B. Walsh, Daniel Darling, George W. Seneare, C. S. Arnold, John McMahon, Daniel E. Bartlett, C. P. Vedder, and George Barre met and organized the "Union Fair Grounds of Ellicottville," with A. G. Rice, president; A. D. Scott, secretary; and A. A. Walker, treasurer. The association held fairs until July 10, 1872, on a plat of twenty-six acres, which was purchased for the purpose. D. E. Bartlett shortly afterward acquired the property and the organization disbanded.

The first public burial place set apart for the purpose by the town is situated in the village on Jefferson street, where the ashes of many of the sturdy pioneers and prominent citizens of the village repose. Very early in the history of the town the people of Bryant hill consecrated to the burial of the dead a cemetery in their neighborhood which is still in use. A new cemetery has been laid out in the west part of the village, on quite an eminence, and several burials have been made and some fine monuments erected. A soldier's monument has the place of honor.

The village was known as Ellicottville when it was included in the original town of Ischua and when it was first inhabited. After the completion of the county buildings in 1820 it grew rapidly, outstripped all sister villages in the county, and was the first to be dignified with a village charter. It early became the home of many families of high culture and moral worth who imparted their civilization to the society; for many years it was recognized as the leading village in the county. It is situated near the southwest corner of the town, in a beautiful, broad, and fertile valley, on Great Valley creek, and on the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad. The village was incorporated by an act of the Legislature on April 1, 1837. The plat was surveyed by R. Burlingame. The village was the seat of all the land offices in the county as long as they were continued, and also the site of the court house of Cattaraugus county from 1820 to 1868. The first court house was a frame building, which was burned in 1829. It was replaced with a substantial brick structure the same year. The January term of 1830 was held in the new court house, although it was not entirely completed. The town of Ellicottville purchased the county buildings which were vacated in 1868 for $1,000; they are now used for town and public purposes. The census of 1890 gives the village a population of 852. It was devastated by a fire May 11, 1890, which destroyed many of the business places, including the Crawford House. In place of the wooden structures fine brick blocks almost immediately arose from the ashes which now give the place a neat and enterprising appearance. The Hotel Crawford is especially well built; the new stores are fine and convenient. The village has four churches, a flourishing Union Free School, two weekly newspapers, about a dozen stores, four or five public houses, seven or eight lawyers, four or five physicians, and a full complement of mechanics and artisans. The present (1893) officers are Halsey F. Northrup, president; Chauncey Smith, Dr. Charles M. Walrath, and William D. Huntley, trustees; Edwin S. King, clerk; J. D. Randall, postmaster.

Ashford Junction is a small village on Great Valley creek at the junction of the Buffalo and Rochester division of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad. The station building and switch were contributed by the people of the town of Ashford, hence its name. It is the location of West postoffice, and besides the station the place contains two hotels, two stores, a blacksmith shop, a pump station on the Buffalo and Rochester pipe-line, and about fifteen dwellings. From this station large quantities of wood and lumber are shipped. It is also the residence of about fifty railroad employees.
